From the assertion of this officer a number of lessons may be legitimately drawn. First, It follows that the insurance legislation of Pennsylvania is shaped in the lodge-room, not at the capital. But since fraternities are equally numerous in all other States, it follows, second, that the insurance legislation of the whole country is in the hands of secret societies. Third, Since these societies of many names and many professed objects are found to be practically one fraternity in shaping legislation for their own benefit, and to the detriment of the uninitiated, it follows that they will unite and control all other legislation on matters in regard to which the various fraternities are agreed. Fourth, Since there is no more common characteristic of all these fraternities than the repudiation of the name and authority of Jesus Christ, it follows that his name will not be acknowledged in our constitution, nor his authority in our laws, so long as the people of this country select a majority of our law-makers from the roll-lists of the lodge-room. This public meeting which I attended was opened by the reading of a printed prayer, from which the name of Christ had been carefully eliminated. It is not true that in order to acknowledge his authority, "upon whose shoulder rests the government," we must make membership in a secret society sufficient cause to hinder a man's election to office?

GENERAL GRANT ON WAR.

Amongst numerous conversations with General Grant while abroad, reported by John Russell Young is his narrative of Grant's travels around the world, and submitted to the general for revision, is the following:

ABHORRENCE OF WAR.

"Gen. Grant's abhorrence of war found frequent expression in his public remarks. England and the United States, one people, but two nations, ought always to be at peace with each other, and ought always to strive to keep at peace with all the world besides, and by their example stop the wars which devastate countries.

"Though educated as a soldier, and although I have gone through two wars, I have always been a man of peace, preferring to see questions of difference settled by arbitration. Every honorable effort was made by the North to prevent our late war, but in vain.

"It has been my misfortune to be engaged in more battles than any other general on the other side of the Atlantic; but there was never a time during my command when I would not have chosen some settlement by reason rather than the sword.

"When the Duke of Cambridge asked me to review his troops at Aldershot, I told his royal highness that the one thing I never wanted to see again was a military parade. I never liked service in the army. I did not wish to go to West Point. My father had to use his authority to make me go. I never went into a battle willingly or with enthusiasm. I never want to command another army.

"It was only after Donelson that I began to see how important was the work that Providence devolved upon me. I did not want to be made Lieutenant-General. I did not want the Presidency, and have never quite forgiven myself for resigning the command of the army to accept it.

"I have never forgiven myself for going into the Mexican war. There was never a more wicked war than that, but, as a youngster, I lacked the moral courage to resign."

HOLINESS AND MASONRY.

At a recent camp meeting of the Methodists in central New York, for the promotion of Scriptural holiness, Dr. Daniel Steele, of Boston, the first chancellor of Syracuse College, was asked, during one of the sessions devoted to answering questions pertaining to sanctification:

"Can a man talk holiness and practice holiness, and at the same time seek his own pleasure and go in fashionable society?"

"Divine grace," the chancellor said, "is in no way antagonistic to the esthetic nature of man. Our modern civilization is the product of Christianity, and our esthetic tastes have been developed by civilization. There is no harm in loving beautiful pictures, but it is for each man to decide how much he will be justified in spending for pictures while pagans are imploring Gospel aid. Divine grace does not require a man to wear square-toed boots. There is no harm in following an innocent fashion."

Another question that created quite a flutter in the congregation was:

"Can a man attain to entire sanctity and at same time be an adhering Freemason?"

Dr. Steele made a gesture of deprecation and surprise, and said he would make no reply to the question, but would tell a story.

"A number of years ago," he said, "when I was engaged in pastoral work I preached a sermon, the theme of which was 'Christian Holiness.' When I had concluded my service a man came to me with tears streaming down his face, and said: 'Doctor, I had that state once, but I lost it when I took the first degree in Freemasonry.'

"I have nothing to say more than this. I expect to get to heaven without the aid of Freemasonry."

This view of the matter was received with evident relish by the brethren assembled.

KEEP AWAY.

The proprietor of a high-toned drinking saloon in New York signed the pledge and closed his dram-shop. On learning that a company of lads had organized themselves into a temperance society, he went to them and gave them some of his experience as a rumseller.

"I sold liquor," said he, "eleven years—long enough for me to see the beginning and end of its effect. I have seen a man take his first glass in my place and afterward find the grave of a suicide. I have seen man after man, wealthy and educated, come into my saloon who now cannot buy a dinner. I recall twenty customers, worth from one to five thousand dollars, who are now without money and without friends."

He warned the boys against entering the saloon upon any pretext. He said that he had seen a young fellow, a member of a temperance society, come in with a friend and wait while he drank. "No, no," he would say, when asked to drink, "I never touch it." Presently, rather than seem churlish, he would take a glass of cider or harmless lemonade. "The lemonade was nothing," said he, "but I knew how it would end. The only safety, boys, for any one, no matter how strong his resolutions, is outside the door of the saloon."—Selected.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The Rhode Island election—Rome's fight against our free schools—The spirit of independence among Catholics—A remarkable hearing before the Massachusetts Legislature—The people sick of the multiplicity of fraternal orders—The rising tide—Shall we take advantage of it?

The Rhode Island election occurs to-day. Commenting on this fact the Providence Journal makes the cheerful statement that there are in six of the wards of that city about 3,000 purchasable votes. Certainly the reign of high license has not purified the polls or brought around an era of honest voting. The Christian citizens of Providence who read the Journal, as they deposit their ballots to-day will have something to think about.

The fight centers more and more about our free schools. The true born Yankee is naturally tolerant almost to a fault. As Chauncey Depew has said in one of his famous after dinner speeches: "The Pilgrim who went to Holland and there learned toleration; there learned to respect the rights, the opinions and liberties of others; there learned the principle of the common school and universal education; when he got to Plymouth Rock never burned witches, never hung Quakers, never drove out Baptists; he always fought against all this. It was the Puritans, 20,000 strong, who came years afterward who did these things." But along with this and other equally indigenous traits he has the firmest belief that "knowledge is power." It is one of the few things that a native born Yankee always accepts without questioning; and he adds works to his faith by dotting every prairie and hillside on which he sets his foot with free public schools from Maine to Arizona. Especially does he hold by the three Rs. They represent to him a solid, steady, respectable basis of good citizenship. This accounts for the seeming apathy and indifference with which he has watched Romish encroachments until they touched our free schools—and then "the old man of the Vatican" found out, if he did not know it before, that New England was not yet quite ready to be made into new Rome. The indignation in Worcester at the outrageous attack by a French priest on her public, particularly her high schools, is a case in point. Rev. I. J. Lansing, who made it the subject of an address to a crowded house, well said, "There was no flurry when Protestant clergymen in this city welcomed the coming of an ecclesiastical dignity of the Romish church; but I am glad we are roused now when the reputation of our sons and daughters is attacked." The defeat of the Blair bill, which has sent a pang of sorrow to the heart of every friend of education South as well as North, is only another evidence of how Rome hates and fears the free school. The unreconstructed Southern aristocracy naturally desires to keep the Negro and the poor white at the same level of ignorance and barbarism, but even ante bellum spite and prejudice alone could not have killed Senator Blair's wise and patriotic measure. Enough Jesuitic intrigue has been put forth to fill volumes, in order that Rome may have the educating of the South herself, as she has educated Mexico, Italy and Spain.

Dr. A. J. Gordon stated in a recent speech: "You can stand in any street of Paris, open your Bible and address the passers-by. The police will sustain you. There is greater liberty of conscience in Paris than in Boston, for in the former city the children are now told the truth about the Reformation as well as about the massacre of the Huguenots." But the growing spirit of independence among Catholics themselves is a very cheering sign. In Hartford, Conn., the priest forbade any member of his congregation attending Evangelist Leyden's meetings on pain of discipline. But on the evening of the lecture he was surprised and horrified as he stood watching by the door of the hall to see about two score of his young men walk past him into the lecture room, each one with a polite "Good evening"—thus coolly defying his authority.

The Massachusetts Legislature has recently been giving a hearing on the question of fraternal endowment and benefit orders pro and con. Whether these companies have a right under the law to hold an unlimited reserve and make unlimited assessments was the first subject discussed, in the course of which Hon. John Butler made an elaborate defence of the Iron Hall, the oldest of all the endowment orders, and opposed granting the great privileges asked by the younger societies, such as the People's Five Year Benefit Order, which was represented by a Mr. Burrell, who said that his order could raise only $75 of the $500 necessary to raise to meet endowments when they become due.

The committee then heard a remarkable petition from Dr. W. W. Richards, and others of Natick, one of the most sorely lodge-ridden towns in the whole commonwealth, praying for relief from the multiplicity of endowment, fraternal and social organizations. He read a list of societies in Natick whose local membership was 2,350. The petition stigmatized them as "a perfect drain, an eye-sore, a leech in the community." Certainly stronger language was never used by the most radical anti-secretists. He said that it was easy to get hundreds of signers to the petition. Men are exhausted by their nights in the lodge-room, and talk over lodge matters while at work. He thought the insurance commissioner should step in and put his foot on these orders and stop their increase. This is exactly what Commissioner Merrill has tried to do, but in vain, for his protests have always been overridden by the legislature, either because our law-makers were more ignorant than a schoolboy of the simple mathematical principles involved, or shamefully careless of the interests of the people. Dr. Richards said they were constantly multiplying. He told of the latest order to appear in Natick, the National Congress of Friends, that promises to pay $1,000 in five years, and requires almost no medical examination. Before these societies get their charters they hustle in the members as fast as they can get them. Dr. Richards is not an anti-secretist himself, but this, perhaps, makes his testimony the more valuable. He acknowledged to being a member of seven or eight societies himself, and and medical examiner for about as many, but he was interested in stopping the formation of any more. Commissioner Merrill, in his reply, stated that the department had chartered thirty-two endowment associations in the last year, and in the last week he had given out sets of papers for no less than fourteen more. He then gave a few statistics, which can hardly be pleasant reading for any thoughtful member of these orders. He stated that one company with 118 members, on January 1 had paid $1,593 to get these members, and owes $2,948 more. The salaries of officers which these 118 must pay are $12,800 a year. Another society which has paid $375 in sick benefits in five and a half months, collected $5,201 in the same time, and the cost of the society for a year was $14,212, of which $8,769 was paid in salaries to officers. Commissioner Merrill said that if discretion had been given to him he would not have permitted the organization of one of these associations in the last two years. As it is, there are enough of them, and the formation of any more should stop at once. Some honest men go into these associations, but others, as they had confessed to him, form them simply for the purpose of getting a living. The counsel for the endowment and fraternal orders said that they approved of any method to check fraud, but Commissioner Merrill was of the opinion that only entire suppression would help the evil. He did not approve the purpose of any of them. It was no more absurd, in his opinion, to promise to pay $100 at the end of a week than at the end of the year.

Thus closed one of the most remarkable hearings that have ever come before the legislature of late years. It shows that the people are sick of the multiplied forms of secret organizations, and that a large part of them, even in places where these orders seem to be the most popular, are ready to throw off the incubus. Every craze brings its inevitable reaction. If a whole people go to blowing soap-bubbles they must not expect to fare better than children engaged in the same employment. Only there is this difference in these speculative schemes, that when the smash-up comes—in other words, when the bubble bursts—it is no unsubstantial, airy globe, but for all its baselessness it represents the hard earnings of multitudes, and the collapse of all together will be very likely to precipitate a financial panic.

This forms another in the link of providential dealings which seem to indicate that God is preparing for the speedy downfall of the whole lodge system. Now is the time to take advantage of the rising tide by scattering literature broadcast through New England. How many daughters of the Pilgrim land will step forward and help support the Home Guard? The hand on the dial-plate of Providence always marks Now, and only our human faithlessness ever sets it backward.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, April 2, 1890.

As to what Congress is doing, I may say the three subjects that are now causing speeches to be made, and are likely to cause many more in the next month, are the Dependent Pension bill, which passed the Senate on Tuesday, the admission of Idaho to the Union, and the long-deferred Tariff bill, which is to make its appearance in the House this week.

When an outcry was raised recently against the extravagance of the House and Senate because a great many public building bills were passing each body, a Congressman remarked that the country might rest in peace, the appropriations made for public buildings by this Congress would be less than by the one previous. He explained by saying that while more public building bills would pass the Senate or House than ever before, still he expected the Senate to pass very few bills that originated in the House, and the House to pass very few bills that come from the Senate. If the two Houses follow this policy his prediction is likely to be verified.

The select committee of the House on the alcoholic liquor traffic has just authorized a favorable report on the bill prohibiting the transportation of intoxicating liquors from any State or Territory of the United States into any other State or Territory, contrary to, and in violation of the laws thereof. The bill provides fines for the violation of the act. When one reflects how much is being done here in this little District of Columbia for the cause of temperance by its zealous advocates, one cannot doubt its final victory, if equally persistent and conscientious work is being done throughout the country. Not a day passes that is not marked by some step taken here for the promotion of the cause.

Hon. Samuel Dickie, of New York, has been here during the week trying to raise money with which to conduct a prohibition campaign in Nebraska. His speech was a series of arguments in favor of prohibition as opposed to high license. He said high license could not improve the quality of saloons, as there were only two kinds, bad and worse. In Cleveland, Ohio, he had horrified a good brother by saying that he would let the low grogeries remain, and do away forever with the gilded saloon. And this brother was not convinced until he had made the rounds, and it was shown that not one man of decent appearance could be found in the dives. But the promising young men were found in the elegant saloons. So if both could not go, he thought it would be better to banish the gilded saloon. He denied that high license decreased the amount of liquor drank, or that it was a step toward prohibition. It is a club to kill prohibition, and will be used. Opponents of prohibition all shout high license. There is not a liquor paper printed that does not favor it. Sixty-seven out of seventy-three saloonists in New York expressed themselves in favor of the Crosby High License bill.

Congressman Morse, of Massachusetts, who is better known to the people of Washington as a temperance speaker than as a law-maker, perhaps, gave still further proof of his versatility of talent by filling one of the city pulpits last Sabbath evening, and preaching a forcible sermon on the subject of a "Business Man's View of the Gospel."

It would seem the proposed Methodist University at Washington is to be a reality in the near future. The business men of the capital have been subscribing liberally, and a quarry owner promises to give all the brown stone that will be required for the building. The ground for the site is to be purchased and application made for a charter, then a call will be made on the church for contributions.

In this city of conventions the National Christian Conference, under the management of the National Reform Association, is now in session, discussing the Christian principles of civil government. Among the questions before it are the Sabbath, or the nation's relation to the day of rest; the question of marriage and divorce, or the duty of the nation to the family; the temperance question, or the right attitude of the law toward the traffic in intoxicants; the Indian, the Chinese and the Negro problem; the school question, or the character of the education to be furnished by the state to its youthful citizens; the relation of the nation to foreign and weaker nations as affected by our commerce, and by the character of the representatives whom we send abroad; all of which are present issues now in process of settlement.

—According to the Statistical Year-Book of Germany for 1889, the latest data on the religious status of the country are these: 29,369,847 Evangelicals, 16,785,734 Catholics, 125,673 other Christians, 563,172 Jews, 11,278 confessors of other religions or professing no religion at all.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

DR. WILSON'S PROFITS—A SERMON FOR THE LODGE.

Boston, April 1, 1890.

Bro. Conant writes of the renunciation of Freemasonry and the order of Red Men by one man as the result of the discussion at Providence last week. The prevailing spirit there was intolerable to demons, and one possessed would be compelled to yield or fly from the place.

Of late the Boston press has had much to say about the "Grievances of the Good Fellows." On the 27th ult. over 150 "kickers," as they are called, met in "Knights of Honor" Hall, to protest against the arbitrary and oppressive acts of their Supreme Leader, Dr. Darius Wilson. When the lodge was "purged" it appeared that there were four States and fifty-one assemblies represented in the council. The order is an assessment affair, gotten up, it seems, by Dr. W. and his coadjutors, who took good care to secure life perpetuity in office and invest themselves with arbitrary power. Like other inventions of similar kind springing from the prolific brain of Darius, this mushroom order has spread rapidly, and become a source of large gains to the master. Many have wearied of repeated drafts on their pockets, and the "Obnoxious Fourth Assessment" furnished occasion for a general "kick." "Some startling facts," says the report, "were brought out," among them that "every assembly represented in the convention, except one, had decreased in membership, and that had added but a single name in the past year." No definite course was decided on, and what will be the final upshot is uncertain, but enough was developed to show that these poor dupes of the lodge had been throwing their money into a bottomless bag, through which it quickly glided into the hopper of their Supreme Medical Examiner, who had taken good care to protect himself in its tranquil enjoyment by an "IRONBOUND CLAUSE in the Constitution." It is perfectly safe to infer that this adept in the secret empire will not "get left," for he is no novice in the business. It is the same Darius who obtained the Memphis Rite from a Michigan renegade, and doled out Egyptian Masonry to the young men of the country at the rate of ninety degrees in a single night, at ten dollars a head and upwards, until he struck a richer lead in the bogus insurance lodge schemes, of which the "Good Fellows" order seems to have been his pet.

Sabbath, the 30th, I spent at Salem, attending three services and distributing many tracts. Elder Gideon Cole, pastor of Calvary Baptist church, announced through the press that at 3 o'clock P. M. he would answer the question, "Ought secret societies to be condemned?" He read, of course, Matt. 7th for the Scripture lesson, and took the usual text on such occasions: "By their fruits ye shall know them." The first prophecy of the speaker was fulfilled. Said he: "There are two classes here that will be disappointed to-day. Those who favor secret societies will think I have not said enough, and those who are opposed to them will think I have said too much." Starting with this avowed purpose of disappointing everybody who might have entertained a hope of receiving instruction, he succeeded most admirably. He gave as a reason for presenting the question, "That the city was agitated, and everybody had been approached on the subject." If true, it is very encouraging and complimentary to Bro. Grant, who set the ball rolling in Beverly, and has kept it in motion through Essex county ever since the Boston Congress. His argument (if he gave any) was if their fruits are good, approve them, but if evil, condemn them. He did not express an opinion as to whether secret societies were good or bad. He did not give us a single test by which to determine their character. He gave no advice to the members of his church, or to others about joining. He did say that somebody else had said recently, that secrecy implied crime, shame or necessity, and that he could give person and place if called upon to do it. He said, "the church enjoins secrecy. Christ enjoined secrecy," and instanced prayer and alms-giving, and the disciples laid their plans in secret. But he did not quote the Master's words: "Every one that doeth evil hateth the light, and he that doeth truth cometh to the light." Nor the apostles' faithful warning: "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them." Christ's solemn affirmation at Pilate's bar, "In secret have I said nothing," seems to have escaped his notice, and so he failed to accept for himself, and apply to his expectant hearers, that searching test: "He that is not with me is against me," which, applied to the Christ-rejecting lodge system, puts it on the side of all the enemies of God and man that ever cursed the earth. No man can "straddle" a moral question, and the religious teacher who attempts it puts his influence (if not himself) on the devil's side of the dividing line every time.

I took my place just outside the door and handed out over 300 of Bro. Grant's tract, "Non-Christian Lodges," and "A Pastor's Confession," to the retiring audience. One man asked, "How did you like the sermon?" I said, "If he had told us about the skeleton, the scene supporters and the venerable warden, we could have judged better of what the lodge is."

"Are you an Odd-fellow?" he asked with apparent surprise.

"A little odd, I presume, or I shouldn't be handing out these tracts here."

Another joined him and insisted on a reply. I said, "Gentlemen, I have assisted in working Masonic degrees more than one hundred times publicly; but I never rattled your three links, or stood aghast at the solemn mockery of your death scene."

They seemed satisfied, and walked away. Others, notably two elderly gentlemen, expressed sympathy for our work.

Later, while distributing tracts in another part of the city, a man stopped me with the inquiry, "Are you the man that was giving out tracts at the church?"

"I am."

"Well, I know that man Grant, and his mind is disturbed. He's a little off his base."

So we have another accession to the ranks of those whom the "fraters" call "loonies." But there is one thing about this man Grant, when he speaks he says something, and people know what he means; and while pastor in Beverly, a much smaller town than Salem, it was not a matter of surprise when on ordinary occasions he was greeted by an audience of 2,500 people. "By their fruits ye shall know them."

J. P. STODDARD.

A GOOD SPRING SOWING.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I preached on the antagonism of Freemasonry and other secret orders to Christ and the Gospel at Hopewell, on Sabbath morning. In the afternoon I preached at the Bethel Church, nine miles from Hopewell, on a similar theme. I preached again at night in the new church at Gilchrist. The congregation were mostly irreligious, and I endeavored to win them to Christ. At Hopewell and Bethel I secured 178 short-time Cynosure subscriptions and several contributions for the coming convention at Chicago, and for the State lecture work. Rev. O. C. Bedford, the pastor of these churches, helped me much.

During the month of March I have secured 574 subscriptions, most of them for short time. Still I feel that I am an unprofitable servant. That I am doing but a small part of what ought to be done to expose the methods of Satan, who works through the secret lodge system to supplant Christ and subvert his Gospel. Pray for me, that a spirit of love and zeal and courage and power from Christ may rest upon me, that I may, with increasing faith and power, go forward and expose the cunning craftiness of Satan, who is working through the lodge, like a mole under ground, to supplant the true worship of God through the mediation of Christ, and establish in the place of our holy Christianity a Christless and pagan system of worship.

The churches must be aroused, and the young men of our nation rescued from the grasp of the lodge power. The churches must not sleep while Satan eliminates the doctrine of Christ from the hearts of our young men, and substitutes in its stead the deistical philosophy of the lodge. Christ will not fail or be discouraged. He will reign until all enemies are put under his feet. The church of the Lord Jesus Christ will fill the earth. The gates of hell cannot prevail against the church of Christ. He is her chief corner-stone. No weapon formed against her can prosper.

CORRESPONDENCE.

ROMANISM IN YORK, PENNSYLVANIA.

YORK, Pa, March 31, 1890.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I send with this letter a brief report of Mrs. M. L. Shepherd's lecture on Romanism. On the afternoon of the 18th of March she lectured to ladies only, and had a crowded house. In the evening she lectured to men and ladies, and had a very large audience.

Mrs. Shepherd is a brave crusader, a superior singer, and a live lecturer. She is an Irish lady, and does not have much love or admiration for the grand old Democratic party (or, perhaps, for any other grand old party).

Four York newspapers refused to publish the report which I send to you, just as Mrs. Shepherd told us they would. So, it looks as though she knows a thing or two about the most mysterious creatures in the known world. And I will venture to suggest that some newspapers have more than one devil working on them.

She informed us that the Ancient Order of Hibernians had passed resolutions denouncing her. But this should help her very much outside of Ireland and Hibernia and Molly Maguires' kingdom.

After the lecture I remained outside for ten minutes, but seeing no indication of a disturbance I went home. The assault upon Mrs. Shepherd, and the shooting of the rowdy, occurred a few minutes later. The wounded man is seriously injured, but it is expected that he will recover in time. This affair has caused much excitement in York. Yours, etc., EDWARD J. CHALFANT.

TERRIBLE BACKSLIDING.

BLOOMINGTON, Ill., April 2, 1890.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It is a peculiar feature of most of your correspondents, that each thinks himself located in the very hotbed of secret clanism and saloon knavery. To us it seems that Bloomington is very high if not the highest seat of these departments of Satanic activity.

Our last sensation has been caused by one of our divines who it appears has sold himself and church to the lodge and saloon. Two years ago he surrendered to the former its portion, and last Sabbath he attempted to deliver the goods to the latter, with but partial success; hence the sensation.

This gentleman came here several years ago, a pronounced anti-secretist, having preached that sentiment. He also took ground squarely for prohibition at first, and as all believed, by the dictates of his conscience and the Word of God. But the lodge cudgel and the nightmare of unpopularity intruded into his dreams. Then some visits from saloon-influenced members and hints of the profits and popularity of fawning followed, and the clerical backbone of reform wilted.

Two years ago he drove out lodge opposition and became the favorite and pet of the mystic fraternities. In a sermon over the body of a devotee, using Isa. 13: 12, "I will make a man more precious than fine gold," he said that this was the work of the modern secret societies. That these taught them how to live right, and of course they would then die right. His only reference to the church was to recommend it to those present as it could likewise develop fine men precious as gold.

After dealing out such shocking stuff as this it is not strange that he should last Sabbath cram high license down the throats of his subservient followers. The immediate pretext for his public avowal came a week before, when Mrs. Helen M. Gougar, of Lafayette, Ind., in a speech here said, "I have more respect for the devil, hoofs and horns, than I have for the minister or deacon who votes for license, high or low." We are informed that this preacher of "advanced thought" has taught that the "devil, hoofs and horns" are mythical, yet he takes umbrage at the comparison and pitches into prohibitionists so fiercely that they are for the present obliged to stand on the defensive.

His tirade consisted largely of the old exploded chestnuts, that prohibition does not prohibit. Such laws are useless without public opinion to back them or local option. License is not a permit but a regulation, and that moral suasion and love are the only proper weapons of our warfare. He condemned all the methods of the temperance people and was especially severe on their awful intolerance toward ministers who uphold license.

On the other hand some of our ministers have repudiated him as the champion of the profession and are not especial admirers of his methods. One of them in speaking of this told a story which suits the case so well that I will have to repeat it. He said: "A certain Irishman, while out with a hunting party, came running into camp with his undischarged gun and a savage bear at his heels. 'Why didn't you shoot him, Pat?' said his companions. 'Faith and wasn't it better to bring him in alive?' said Pat." This we think illustrates the preaching which does not kill sin or touch the heart, but brings the sinner in with all his lodge and saloon savagery in him. Of course they are following the preacher and not the truth, and popular preaching has its reward.

Vox.

A DARK SPOT IN NEW HAMPSHIRE.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Having perused three copies of the Cynosure sent me by a friend, and having for several years been in sympathy with the ideas therein advanced, I have written this letter in regard to secret organizations here. There is in our village a large F. and A. M. lodge, an equally large O. F. lodge, a G. A. R. and a S. O. V. post with a Woman's Relief Corps. But it is of the first two named that I wish especially to speak. Not one of our leading men, with perhaps one exception, does not belong to one or both of these orders. Then, besides the leading men, others belong who are low in the scale of vice, and the chief man of the O. F.'s has been for years and is still a rum-seller and a very popular man with all. Then they are ready to trap all the young men as soon as they become of age. In all these lodges, there are but eleven men who are members of the churches, and but two of these are what could be called active Christians. Several of them do not attend church at all. Besides these, there are not a dozen who belong to these lodges who ever darken the church doors, except it be to a funeral of one of their own members.

Our leading men do more or less business on the Sabbath, and our young men spend that day in any way to suit themselves. Twenty of our leading young men own a camp on the shore of Squaw Lake, built three years ago. Two-thirds of these belong to these orders, and during the summer (and sometimes in winter) they spend their Sabbaths there working, fishing on the lake, giving great dinners, having their pictures taken, or in any way they please; and scarcely one of them is a regular attendant upon the church, and some of them never attend at all.

We have an Episcopal and a Free Baptist church here, but the membership of both is very small, though ours is a thrifty manufacturing village of two hundred or more families. We belong to the Free Baptist church. Some thirty years ago they had a pastor who became an active Mason, and remained here fourteen years. During his ministry all the then young men joined the Masons, but not one of them ever became a Christian, and none of these men now attend church at all. The O. F.'s lodge has been organized, I think, about ten years. Since then two of the ministers who have labored in our church have joined it (one was, however, an O. F. when he came here), and two joined the Masons. The present Episcopal minister joined the Masons since he came here, and the one who preceded him joined the O. F.s. We have three physicians and they are all members of these lodges. The pastor we now have has been here less than a year, and, so far as I know, has joined neither lodge yet. But he is a young man, and they are working for him. Many of the leading women uphold them as much as the members themselves. Of course I am hated by some of the members, because, on some occasions, I have spoken against these orders.

ASHLAND.

OUR INDIA COLPORTEUR.

What does that mean? Simply this: Wheaton friends proposed a plan by which a few circles of small givers could support a good colporteur in India. I gladly acted as "agent" of this new enterprise, and now the native colporteur is at work in India. He is engaged under the direction of a missionary who was converted in Moody's mission in Chicago years ago, and who has been very successful in colporteur work.

In a letter from Bombay I have information of the opening of this new work. But as it was so recently started no report of labor is given. I will arrange for regular statements to be made of work done, sales effected, etc., by this colporteur.

Having for years been in book work in India, selling books, superintending colporteurs, etc., I know the value of this kind of mission work there. The colporteur is thrown into direct contact with many souls, and in a few months' labor, many thousands may thus be reached who would not otherwise hear the glorious Gospel.

It is an excellent idea to have many "little givers" joining hand and heart to support such a good work. I hope soon to be able to have regular reports to send to all who thus support the work by their offerings and prayers.

PITH AND POINT.

REMEMBERING THE CONFERENCE.

I will try and get the friends to give something for the Conference expenses if I can. I will try and come down to attend the meeting myself.—J. W. SUIDTER, Sharon, Wis.

THE MASONIC DEATH WATCH.

When I was living in California, a wicked man was kicked by a horse and only lived forty-eight hours. He was unconscious all the time, and knew no more than if he was in a sound sleep; still the Freemasons would not allow any one in his room (not even his relations), only the Freemason men that waited on him! This man was not a member of any church and was known to do wicked things, and would take the name of God in vain in his common talk. Just one week before he was kicked he said to one who admonished him to be ready, "I am ready any minute the old gentleman has a mind to take me." O, how presumptuous! The Lord took him at his own word. In just one week from that day he was buried. The Freemasons said in their mockery at the grave that he had gone from the lodge below to the lodge above, making themselves their own judges. He went to a just God. Whether he went to one lodge above or below the one he left, it is not for them to say. Oh, may every true Christian pray that the good and just and true God may come in mighty power in his own way and let all the wicked know that there is still the same God that there was in ancient times.—S. L. WOOD, State Center, Iowa.

THE NARROW WAY DOES NOT LEAD TO THE GRAND LODGE.

An aged brother visiting the church of another denomination writes of his remarks in class meeting:

"You are aware I never speak before an audience, but of late my tongue is getting bolder. I attended the M. E. church lately, and after service they held a class meeting, in which the leader asked me to say a few words. I responded thus: 'We are commanded to search the Scriptures, for in them we have eternal life. Now in searching the Scriptures we find the express command: "Enter ye in at the strait gate;" for "strait is the gate and narrow is the way that leadeth to life." But "broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many they be which go in thereat." Therefore, "Strive to enter in at the strait gate, for many . . . will seek to enter in, and shall not be able." Now, my friends, is not the day hastening when all the world shall appear to forsake the worship of the living God and shall worship the man of sin, the son of perdition: and is not this the most worshipful master of the grand lodge below? It is none else. And what does he promise us if we pay all dues, answer all calls given or sent? He will insure us a safe entrance into his grand lodge. Did not the devil make our Saviour the same or a better offer, if he would fall down and worship him? Why, friends, if we are so happy as to enter that strait gate, it will depend on our individual exertion; and as for myself, I am determined by the grace of God to enter that gate.' When I close a number seemed to be deeply affected by the testimony.

THE TESTIMONY OVERCOMES.

I have been the means of saving another fine, promising young man from the lodges. The paper with Washington's portrait in has been in the hands of many to good purpose, till it is almost worn out. If you can do so, I wish that you would send me another copy. My tracts are nearly gone. I have other friends to help me use them now.—HORACE W. FOWLER, Rogers, Ark.

GOOD TEMPLARS TOO GOOD FOR THEIR BUSINESS.

I enclose a small contribution intended to help defray the expenses of the Chicago Conference. I would like to help more, but there are so many reform movements that I contribute to that I have to make some of them small. While I am writing I might as well relate a little circumstance connected with the Good Templars' lodge of this place. A very prominent prohibitionist and his wife had made application to join the lodge. They waited long and patiently to be admitted; but never received the invitation from the lodge to come and be taken in. It finally leaked out through one of the members that it was doubtful if they would be taken in, and if they were they would have to be careful how they talked about prohibition if they did not want to be kicked out. This is the beautiful society that is going to wipe out the saloon. It is on a par with the Irish woman telling her boy to "Be shure and learn to swim; but for the life of yez, don't go near the water till you do."—W. McCoy, Bellaire, O.

LET THE SOUTH KEEP NOT BACK.

Please attach my name to the call for the Conference of April 22nd and 23rd. Self and wife contemplate attendance if among the practicabilities. We feel that we can hardly be denied the luxury of meeting the veterans of the holy war against Satan's masterpiece for the destruction of souls. And then, in addition, to look in the face of a splendid retinue of recruits, drawn into the ranks by the Mormon and Clan-na-Gael demonstrations, will greatly enhance the pleasure to be enjoyed. The Lord God Omnipotent reigneth! Let the earth rejoice! Let the people tremble!—A. C. HAND, Dalton, Ga.

LITERATURE.

The first of a series of articles, on the Book of books, from the pen of Hon. Wm. E. Gladstone, appears in the last issue of the Sunday-School Times. Whatever Mr. Gladstone writes, and especially on matters pertaining to religion, is sure of a welcome from Americans generally.

The Evangelical Repository for April has nine contributed articles besides a large section given to church work, editorials and book reviews. Among the contributed articles are, "The Trial of Christ," by J. T. McClure, D.D., which is a continuation of this interesting article which has been running for some time. Among the "Editorials" is the call for the conference on the secret lodge system, to be held in Chicago, April 21st and 22nd, which is followed by a clearly written article on the subject of lodges.

The April number of the American Agriculturist, as is usual with this magazine, is full of interesting reading. The opening article is by Frank G. Carpenter, who writes about the Farmers of India. Horses, sheep, pigs, fowls, farm utensils, everything that would interest farmers, get a place. The household department is rich. Webb Donnell gives us a glimpse at Old Time Worship and Worshippers. Edward Everett Hale gives some advice to young housekeepers, and knowing ones tell us something of a great many things that interest the women folk, and then Agnes Carr Sage opens the department for boys and girls with an illustrated story on the Baker Boy's Holiday.

Scribner's Magazine for April contains the beginning of a notable series on "The Rights of the Citizen," which is planned to give clear ideas of the privileges which government should secure to every one in the ordinary relations of life, as a householder, a user of the streets, a traveler in public conveyances, a holder of property, etc. These brief articles will formulate in untechnical language a great deal of interesting information. "The Electric Railway of To-day," by Joseph Wetzler (member of the Council, American Institute of Electrical Engineers) gives a perfectly impartial statement of the stage of development now reached by this method of locomotion. The various systems—overhead, underground, and storage—are described in the light of what they actually accomplish, and not of their promises. The article is richly illustrated. Frederick Jones Bliss (of the well-known Syrian missionary family) tells of a journey from Damascus to Palmyra ("Tadmor in the wilderness" of the Bible). It is the record of the fresh impressions received by one alert for color, picturesqueness, and eccentricity. The illustrations are among the best engravings made for this magazine. Benjamin Ellis Martin follows "In the Footprints of Charles Lamb," during his closing years, after his release from his clerkship, when he lived at Enfield and Edmonton.

LODGE NOTES.

The Biennial Grand Arch Council of the Phi Kappa Psi fraternity began a three days' session Wednesday at the Grand Pacific Hotel in this city. In the evening the whole lodge went to the theater.

Martin Volk, Master Workman of Local Assembly, No. 818, St. Louis, says: "We would never consent to go in with the English assemblies, and, in fact, we were glad to get out of the whole order. The Knights of Labor as an organization is a failure, and before long you will see that the various assemblies will begin to fall out of line. The central organization is and has been too costly a luxury for us, and the strikes come too frequently, and are many times ordered upon too slight a provocation."

The annual convention of the Phi Beta Phi Society of the United States was begun in Galesburg, Ill., April 1, with some seventy-five delegates in attendance. In the absence of the President, Rev. Mrs. R. A. Small of Washington, Miss Emma Harper Turner of Washington presided. The committees that have been working for two years upon the constitution, history and ritual will make reports, and from them the future policy of the society will be decided upon. The open literary meeting of the order was held in the Presbyterian church.

A dispatch to the Inter-Ocean from Burlington, Iowa, says: "The resignation of Bismarck and the consequent change in the attitude of the German Government toward the order of Jesuits, is causing a grand stampede of German Jesuits in this part of the country to Germany. The Rev. Father Joseph Kreusch, head of the order in this city, is actively preparing, in company with his entire corps of workers, to return to his native land. The reverend father said to your reporter that he and his class had always retained a strong regard for the fatherland and its institutions, and by the resignation of Bismarck, who was an enemy of the Catholic church, they are now restored to their prestige and preferment in Germany, where their order is very wealthy and powerful. 'We have hailed with delight the change in governmental affairs in Germany, and have resolved to return to that country at once.'"

War has broken out afresh among the Knights of Labor of St. Louis, and District Assembly, No. 191, including the German assemblies in the city, has returned its charter to the Powderly headquarters in Philadelphia, and this action has been followed by similar proceedings on the part of the six local assemblies which constitute that district. The charter has not only been returned to the National headquarters, but in addition to this resolutions were adopted severing all connection with the old labor organizations as follows:

"Resolved, We have enough of the intrigues and shall not longer fight against them in the ranks of the order of the Knights of Labor, and we therefore return our charter, seal, and other material of our district assembly, No. 191, for further proper transmission, and we then leave the order."

"Resolved, That our organization shall stand, as heretofore, for the benefit and advancement of our interests and the interests of all brewery workers with our sick and benevolent assistance fund."

CATARH CURED.

A clergyman, after years of suffering from that loathsome disease, Catarrh, and vainly trying every known remedy, at last found a prescription which completely cured and saved him from death. Any sufferer from this dreadful disease sending a self-addressed stamped envelope to Prof. J. A. Lawrence, 88 Warren St., New York, will receive the recipe free of charge.

THE N. C. A. FUNDS.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of — dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be sufficient discharge.

THE CHICAGO CONFERENCE.

CALL FOR A CONFERENCE OF CHRISTIANS ON THE SECRET LODGE SYSTEM.

During the past year events of national importance have fixed the attention of our people as never before upon the extent and power of the Secret Lodge System.

The Cronin murder in Chicago, the investigation of Mormon oaths in Salt Lake city, and the uprising against Jesuit intrigue in Boston and the British Provinces have been a new revelation to multitudes of the danger lurking in this system.

This influence affects the administration of justice and all other departments of the Government, but especially is it inimical to the Christian church. Believing the time Providential for a candid discussion of the character, aims and practical workings of the secret orders, we, the undersigned, hereby subscribe ourselves in favor of such a convention to be held in the city of Chicago April 22 and 23, 1890.

RAILROAD RATES TO THE CONFERENCE.

To every friend who will attend the April meeting:—If you think that you may possibly attend the Conference on April 22 and 23, you ought to inquire of your railroad station agent whether he has on hand the blank receipts, which will show that you have paid your full fare to Chicago, and hence are entitled to the return at one-third rate. It would be better to inquire AT ONCE of your agent, so that if he has no blanks he may get them. No reduction will be given by the railroads unless you have this certificate. If you are on some little branch railroad there is all the greater necessity for attending to this matter at once.

HOTEL ACCOMMODATIONS

at the Chicago Conference, April 22 and 23, can be secured at reasonable rates either before you come or after arriving in the city. A room only can be had at the Palmer and other first class hotels at $1 per day. Good rooms can be secured near this office, and also near the Hall in which the Convention is to be held, for 50 cents per day. You can secure your room in advance by addressing this office, and remitting the amount you wish to pay for your room for one day. If you secure your room in advance you will have full directions sent you so that you can proceed at once to your hotel from the train. As the time for the Conference is near, please let us hear from you soon.

FALSE CHRISTS.

"Many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and shall deceive many." "For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets," Matt. 24.

The necessity of a mediator, to give a finite man access to the infinite God,—“a daysman betwixt us, who can lay his hand upon us both” (Job 9: 33)—seems to be a dictate of reason, and a craving of our human instinct. Hence, every false system of religion has invented mediators or counterfeit Christs.

The Osiris of the Egyptians, the Mythras of the Persians, the Bacchus of the Greeks, and the Hiram of the modern Masons, with others, were such counterfeits; either stolen from the sacred Scriptures or mere inventions of men. Each of those false religions worshiped some prominent person, whom they fabled to have been murdered, and to have risen from the dead.

Twenty-four such false Christs preceded the coming and crucifixion of our Saviour. Of these Christ said, “All that ever came before me are thieves and robbers; but the sheep did not hear them,” John 10: 7. Such counterfeits prove the true Saviour, as counterfeit bills prove there is genuine money.

Sixty or seventy years ago John Wilkes came to the frontiers of northern Pennsylvania and was worshiped in school-houses by farmers, who left their apples piled up in their orchards to be covered with snow, because Christ had come and they should no more need them. Such characters are reappearing of late: among them Schweinfurth, who has his heaven six miles out of Rockford, Ill. This inferior cheat at first worshiped Dora Beekman, a weak Christian woman who had become demoniac or demented. He came to Wheaton College in hope of making converts. He avowed to the writer his belief that Dora Beekman was Christ returned. He was ordered to leave the institution at once, and obeyed. Mrs. Beekman having died, her followers, who believed she would rise from the dead, were at length compelled to bury her body. And Schweinfurth now claims himself to be Christ, and that Mrs. Beekman was his spiritual mother (Mary). His followers worship him as the Masons their Hiram, and foretold Christ's coming by fulfilling his words, “There shall arise false Christs, and false prophets.”

THE CYCLONE AND ITS LESSONS.

The readers of the Cynosure are fully aware that the terrible storm of wind that swept over the States of Missouri, Tennessee and Kentucky, spent its main force on the city of Louisville, destroying a large number of lives, and property to the amount of some millions of dollars. This, together with the devastation of the floods on the lower Mississippi, has for some time been the burden of the press. The people of the sorely stricken city should receive the aid of all who have been mercifully preserved from like calamity, and we are glad to know that Cincinnati and other cities are heartily responding. But calamities of this sort come not causeless. We must never forget that the Great Disposer of events holds the waters and the winds in his hands, and only for just and wise reasons does he suffer them to destroy or afflict any of his creatures. Other calamities, such as by fire, on railroads and wrecks on the sea, have in them an element of human agency. We are wont to regard them as largely human in their origin. Not so with this. No finite mind could foretell it, and no hand avert it. It came without notice, when all people were absorbed in business or pleasure. When men said peace and safety, then sudden destruction came, and they could not escape. Nor, so far as we have the means of knowing, was there any respect either of persons or places. Several houses of worship were destroyed, and old and young were alike its victims. A whole city was filled with sorrow and alarm. We may never know how to prevent cyclones, but still we ought to and may learn some important lessons.

1. Large cities are especially liable to be forgetful of God and intensely wicked. We would not intimate that Louisville is, in this respect, worse than other cities of our land; but ever since Nebuchadnezzar boasted of “this great Babylon that I have built,” and Belshazzar's impious feast, the judgments of God have come on the kings and cities that forgot him. Not many years since Chicago and Boston were visited by great fires, Memphis by yellow fever, and Charleston by a succession of earthquakes. These great chastisements doubtless humbled the pride of the people of these cities, and led them to reflect that “God rules” in the armies of heaven and among the inhabitants of the earth, and none can stay his hand or say “what doest thou?” All our great cities have need of repentance, for they sin against far more light than Sodom and Gomorrah.

2. Christians are taught by these calamities to remember that they live in a doomed world. The long-suffering patience of God still waits, “not willing that any should perish but that all should come to repentance.” “But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, in which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the things that are therein shall be burned up. Seeing then that these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and goodness,” 2 Peter 3: 10, 11.

3. These great calamities not only remind us of the judgments of God, but we should assure our hearts that we are safe in him. The 27th, 37th and 91st Psalm are especially rich in promises of his care. He is our refuge and strength.

NATIONAL LAWS FOR THE SABBATH DAY.

The present week, April 6-13, has been appointed a World's Week of Prayer for the success of the Sabbath movement, the securing of the day of rest from the encroachments of business and the seduction of pleasure. The Revised Statutes of the United States in 1878 contained four operative laws respecting Sabbath-keeping: one against distilling on that day, with a $1,000 penalty; two, intermitting studies in the military and naval academies; and a fourth declaring the Sabbath a dies non, a day not to be counted, in bankruptcy proceedings. The same year the 45th Congress (2nd Session, page 213) passed a law for the District of Columbia, to protect—not employes, but game-birds, forbidding any one to shoot such on the Sabbath day.

Here are five precedents for Congressional legislation on the Sabbath. The question is not, therefore, whether Congress shall begin such legislation, but whether it shall logically and equitably complete what it has begun. Legislation on this subject is like the unfinished Washington Monument of a few years ago in its ugly and reproachful incompleteness. Let Congress complete this undertaking by adding the proposed Sabbath Rest law for the capital, and then put on the shining capstone by giving the civil Rest Day to all who are under its jurisdiction. This would be only a logical expansion of the oldest national Sunday law, found in the Constitution itself, in the Article I, section 7, which says that the President shall have ten days “(Sunday excepted)” in which to consider any bill sent to him by Congress before it can become a law without his signature. That parenthesis “(Sunday excepted),” is an acorn which millions of petitioners ask shall be allowed to grow into its logical result, the widespreading oak of the Sunday Rest law, under whose shadow, with the President, all others who are under the jurisdiction of Congress may also enjoy their day of rest.

An enumeration of national Sabbath laws would not be complete without a reference to those made by the Executive, the proclamation giving rest to the army on that day, issued by Presidents Washington, Jackson, Lincoln and Harrison.

The Judicial Department of the national government is represented by a decision of very great importance, though little known, which declares the constitutionality of Sunday laws. The decision was a unanimous one, delivered by Mr. Justice Field, March 16, 1885 (113 U. S., 710), and is as follows: "Laws setting aside Sunday as a day of rest are upheld, not from any right of the government to legislate for the promotion of religious observances, but from its right to protect all persons from the physical and moral debasement that comes from uninterrupted labor. Such laws have always been deemed beneficial and merciful laws, especially to the poor and dependent, to the laborers in our factories and workshops, and in the heated rooms of our cities; and their validity has been sustained by the highest courts of the States."

AN EXTRAVAGANT FOLLY.

It is said that the levees built on the banks of the lower Mississippi River and the great Yellow River in China, have raised the beds of those streams above the surrounding country and that each addition to the levees but lifts the great rivers so much higher. Thus the calamity which men seek to avoid becomes all the while more imminent; and, when it comes, more terrible. The result in the case of the China river, where the system had been longest tried, is well known. The great river burst away, found a new channel, drowned many thousands of people, and turned a populous district into a lake. The lesson we should learn is that temporary expedients are not always wisest, and that we cannot remove an evil while we actively promote the causes from which the evil comes.

This serves to illustrate the folly of great armies and navies as a remedy for war. Ever since the Franco-Russian conflict, France and Germany have vied with each other in war preparations. Last year Great Britain made a vast addition to her navy, and now we are proposing to spend hundreds of millions in coast defences and great war ships. This is all done to prevent war, but experience shows that like the levees on our great river, it is only a temporary expedient, and one that invites rather than averts the calamity, which, when it comes, will be all the more costly and terrible.

The Senate Naval Committee, following the recommendations of Secretary of the Navy Tracy, propose the building of 227 war vessels at a total cost of nearly $350,000,000, ten of these to cost $5,640,000 each. This business we believe a supreme and wicked folly. None of these vessels will be superior in armament or sailing qualities to the new British steamer Blake which cost $1,840,000; and the costly experiments with the British navy show that for engaging in actual war their great war ships would be powerless before some of the small destructive machines of modern invention.

The French minister of Marine proposes a corresponding enlargement of the naval force of that nation by the construction of seventy-eight new craft. Mr. Gladstone, whom Americans have delighted to honor of late, in recent speech referred to our plans for a great navy with evident regret. He said that while America would cite England's example for enlarging her navy, England will give a similar excuse for further naval increase. "It is a matter of deep sorrow," he said, "to reflect that the very ostentatious addition to the defenses of a country, made under a real or pretended necessity, is made an apology for an increase of the burdens of every other country. Under profession of an additional security the policy of governments thus tended more and more to jeopardize the peace of the world."

Is there not an easier and better way of securing peace than by such preparations for war? Really, no one thinks that there is any real danger of a foreign war. For seventy-five years no foreign hostile army has trodden our soil and there are now vastly more and stronger reasons why no nation should assail us. No one thinks that a great navy would help us except as it would minister to our national pride, and surely this is a very doubtful benefit.

The best security for continued peace between both men and nations is a peaceful spirit. The remedy for war is international arbitration. This could be provided for by international treaties a thousand-fold cheaper than the building of a navy. If the nations of the world would agree to an international tribunal for the settlement of disputes, they might disband their armies and turn their war ships into messengers of peace, to the vast relief of the groaning millions of the world.

"Were half the power that fills the world with terror,
Were half the wealth bestowed on camps and courts,
But given to redeem the human mind from error,
There were no need of arsenals and forts."

—The Statesman, of this city, will publish in its current number an article by Pres. C. A. Blanchard, on "The Business Man and the College." This article, which will be popular and instructive, has been printed in neat pamphlet form in advance for a wide circulation. Copies can be had by writing to Pres. C. Blanchard, Wheaton, Illinois.

—The United Presbyterian hopes for the Chicago Conference that "there will be a large attendance, and that the character and tone of the meeting will be such as shall command the respectful attention even of those who do not hold opposition to secret societies as a cardinal principle." We wish the rest of the note, of which this is a part, had been tempered with more of that Christian charity due to brethren who stand for unpopular truth in the midst of great perplexities and provocations.

—A circular was lately presented at a meeting of the Trades and Labor Council in Toronto, Canada, calling on labor unions to resist the bill prepared at the instance of Hon. Joseph Chapleau, Dominion Secretary of State. The principal provisions of the bill make it a misdemeanor, punishable by fine and imprisonment, for workmen to make it conditional that new employes become members of their trade unions, or for employers to stipulate that their men refrain from joining such unions.

—"God speed these anti-secrecy workers and rescue God's dear children from this snare of the devil," says Messiah's Advocate of California of the approaching April conference. "Lodgery is a greater hindrance to the progress of real Christianity to-day than rum and the saloon. No man can be worth much for Christ and worth much to an oath-bound lodge at the same time, and thousands neglect Christ, thinking the lodge is salvation without Christ. For those who have chosen this world and despise the 'world to come' the lodge will do."

—The proceedings of the sixteenth annual convention of the Young Men's Christian Association of Illinois, which was held at Peoria in October, have been sent forth in pamphlet form. The reports show seventy-five Associations and Departments in the State, sixty-seven of which have a total membership of 11,359. Nine associations own buildings valued at $533,000. Sixty-one report ninety-six meetings held regularly for men only, and thirty-three report thirty-six Bible classes. Forty-five report that 1,441 young men and boys have professed conversion.

—A remarkable instance of the power of superstition is noted by Bro. Hinman. Four highly respectable people of Richmond, Ky., three women and one man, three of them members of the Disciple church, the other of the Second Presbyterian church of the same city, are followers of the deceiver Schweinfurth of Rockford, Ill. All have been regarded as reputable Christian people, but all have profound faith in the false prophet and lately went to join him. The husband of one of the women has sued for divorce. Such is the demoralizing effect of superstition upon the human mind.

—Among the most cordial of the notices of the Chicago Conference is not found in a religious paper—indeed, most of the large religious papers of this city are prone to ask, "Have any of the rulers or of the Pharisees believed on him?" before they follow Christ against the popular lodge current—but in a farmer's paper: and we are pleased to add that it is one of the very best of its class. The Farm, Field and Stockman, of this city, says at the close of a full editorial notice: "The convention called should be numerously attended, and the discussion should be full and adequate. All that pertains to good citizenship is involved in this question. . . . The whole machinery of society is entangled with these lodges. They have become a social and political plague-spot."

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Rev. S. F. Porter, who spent the winter in the South as our College agent, returned to Chicago on Saturday last. He is in good health, though at times during the past season he has been threatened with a serious attack while in the malarial regions of the South.

—Prof. W. P. Johnston, for some years a member of the faculty of Geneva College, Beaver Falls, Pa., has been elected to the presidency of the institution, made vacant by the resignation of Dr. H. H. George. Prof. Johnston's scholastic and literary attainments are said to be exceptionally fine.

—Elder J. L. Barlow, of Bloomington, Wis., writes that he resigned his charge over the Baptist church of that place on Sabbath, March 30, to take effect the last Sabbath in June next. Deaths and removals have depleted the church so that the good people that remain feel themselves too few and feeble to support a pastor. Elder Barlow hopes to attend the Chicago Conference, April 22 and 23. Churches needing a pastor can correspond with him at Bloomington, Wis.

THE RIVER MISSION.

After giving our children six months time in school at Wheeling, W. Va., we are again pushing the battle against the saloon and lodge, the great twin evils of the present time. At Bellaire, Ohio, we preached in both of the colored churches, and lectured in the City Hall and several white churches; the rent for two weeks amounting to nearly seventy-five dollars, money enough to send the Cynosure to fifty colored preachers for one year. All the money we are now paying for rent can be saved for such purposes after we get our floating chapel. Think we will order it built as soon as two hundred dollars more are contributed.

The colored people highly appreciate the Cynosures, Wesleyans, and Free Methodists, of which we have distributed many thousand copies. Among the white people we use several thousand tracts a week. From the three above named publishing offices, as well as from numerous friends, we have received many boxes, barrels, and packages of literature, which we are carefully using to good advantage.

Wheeling, W. Va., will continue to be our P. O. address for letters only. All packages of papers by mail, as well as barrels and boxes by express or freight, should be sent us prepaid to Marietta, Ohio. I. R. B. ARNOLD.

THE PETITION to Congress for the suppression of the un-American oath-bound societies condemned by Washington in his Farewell Address should be pushed with all enthusiasm these pleasant days of spring. There is time for several weeks' work before adjournment of Congress. Notice will be given in these columns when to return them. Meantime let all work.

MISSIONARY CANDIDATES WANTED.—Urgent calls for workers are coming from all mission fields. Listen—perhaps God wants you. As it is highly important to encourage all who desire to enter mission work, we are keeping a list of missionary candidates. Those who desire it will be advised and prompted as to suitable courses of preparation for home and foreign mission work. About fifty are already enrolled. Some are nearly ready for the field, while others are passing through proper courses of study and training. We co-operate with existing agencies. All who have any earnest thought as to entering mission work, and are not already in regular training, are invited to sign and send me the following: "I desire to devote my life to mission work, as the Lord may lead." "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few." Write freely to Wallace J. Gladwin (Missionary to India), Miles, Iowa.

—At the seventh annual meeting of the New York Auxiliary to the McAll Mission in France, held last week in the Broadway Tabernacle, Rev. Henry T. Hunter of Paris stated that there were 120 stations of the mission in various parts of France, and that over 1,250,000 people attended them for worship. Rev. Dr. A. J. Gordon of Boston, speaking of the wonderful advance which Protestantism had made in France during the last ten years, said: "You can stand in any street in Paris, open your Bible and address the passers-by. The police will sustain you. There is greater liberty of conscience in Paris than in Boston. In the schools there now the children are told the truth about the Reformation, as well as about the massacre of the Huguenots."—Intelligencer.

THE HOME.

AFTER WINTER.

Not yet the infant spring
 Hath changed her russet gown for robes of green,
 But lieth slumbering,
 Hid in the covert of a wood, unseen:
 Folded in shadows deep,
 Ethereal visions flit across her face in sleep.

Like memories of the dead,
 Winter revives and fades, mid days of blue,
 And thrusts his snowy head
 Upon the landscape, whitening all the view.
 With shrilly voice and thin,
 High singing o'er the downs the chilly breezes spin.

Here, by the sharp blast switched,
 The ruddy drifts about the road are swayed,
 Dancing like sprites bewitched
 In whirling somersaults of light and shade;
 The hollow forests ring,
 Shuddering with leafless music as the lank boughs swing.

Upon the cottage wall
 The jasmine lingers in a listless dream;
 O'erhead the sparrows call,
 And twitter out the day in dolorous theme;
 Whistling a sober tune,
 The plowman drives his team the long dank afternoon.

Far o'er the marshy fen
 The vaporous ghosts worn travelers waylay;
 In the dale and dyke and glen
 The brittle leaves of autumn waste away;
 The snowdrop, bowed with grief,
 Broods like an angel o'er its chastened leaf.

Not sorrow, nor yet scorn,
 Nature wears on her face, but calm distress:
 Like to a child new born
 The year's dim senses grope for consciousness:
 Though all the stilly wood
 Stirreth the soul of being, bursting blade and bud.

Soon shall the violet bloom
 Beneath the hedge, and scent each sheltered nook;
 The primrose gild the gloom
 Where pale anemones peep o'er the brook,
 And laughing waves shall swell
 Of golden daffodils in every mossy dell.

Hasten, sweet birds of song,
 Wing o'er the waves, and fill the woods with voices;
 Spring tarrieth, slumbering long
 She waketh not, but in her dream rejoices;
 Quicken thou magic sod,
 Burst to a sea of flowers, and greet the priests of God!

"DISCUSSING DEAD PHARISEES."

A Massachusetts editor, speaking in the Boston Ministers' Meeting a few weeks ago, made the remark that clergymen and editors were "looking at life from opposite extremes." He then went on to criticize ministers for "not discussing anything within eighteen hundred years of the present date." A gentleman in another city recently complained of the unprofitableness of a sermon upon the Pharisees. "Why, were there not Pharisees in the audience?" was asked. "Yes," was the reply; "but it was the dead Pharisees that he was after." These remarks are based upon the idea that the pulpit is not up with the times—that it does not discuss living issues, and that the events of 2,000 years ago, and the lives of men 2,000 years dead, are not what the generation needs. The criticism is certainly worthy of serious thought. The topic suggests some large questions which possibly these gentlemen have not duly considered. Is the Bible a book for all ages and peoples? Is it adapted to lead the progress of the race and be the text-book of religious teaching in every step of human improvement? Are the principles and events therein discussed to us simply what the events of the Grecian and Roman history are? Are the lives of Moses and Isaiah, of Paul and John, to us simply what the lives recorded by Plutarch are? Or have they a peculiar and essential relation to us, such as other men and events do not have? The force of the criticism upon the pulpit depends largely upon the answer to these questions.

It would surely be a waste of time for the pulpit to discuss merely dead men and dead issues. And if the Biblical issues are dead, bury them; or if the lives of Paul and Moses have no more relation to us than those of Socrates and Cicero, abandon them. If this were the case, I, for one, would devote myself to the study of Vanderbilt and Herr Most, and Mr. Powderly, and Henry George, and Jay Gould, and to the problems of political economy, social science, how to run a railroad, and how to make a newspaper a financial success. But the pulpit, right or wrong, proceeds upon the idea that the Gospel contains the ultimate philosophy of life; that God has spoken in it what every generation needs to know, and to which no generation has yet attained. If this is true, then, when the pulpit discusses Christ and Paul, and certain events of thousands of years ago, it is really discussing the men and the issues of to-day.

The Gospel, though 1,800 years old, is tremendously practical. There is not a wrong or sin in society which it does not touch and heal if rightly applied; not a needed moral reform which it does not urge forward; not a selfish life which it does not aim to renew. There may be ministers who so preach the Gospel as to make no connection between it and the hearts of living men; who preach duty to God without making it clear whose duty they mean; who discuss "dead Pharisees" without pinching the Pharisees in the congregation; and this editor may have been in the audience of such a minister. If he has, he has not been hearing the Gospel, but only something about the Gospel. But we would really like to know how many sermons he has heard, say in the last ten years. Has he not been "talking, or pursuing, or on a journey, or sleeping," or unusually busy with his editorials at about 11 o'clock Sunday morning? However that may be, the remedy for such defect in the pulpit, when it exists, lies not in discussing the tariff, or the silver dollar, or the labor question, or the merits of political candidates, but in really preaching the living Gospel to living men. The Gospel affects politics, science, commerce, trade, government, social relations, etc., almost wholly by indirection. The only thing it moves against directly is the impenitent heart of man—the guilt of sin. It thus lays its hand once for all on the mainspring of all human improvement.

The minister's work is necessarily a more fundamental work than that contemplated by the editor. His object is to deliver a divine message assigned to change individual hearts toward God. He is bound to deal with the great truths that "run like rivers through all life;" and the more closely he adheres to them—the more profoundly spiritual he is in these eternal trends of thought—the more will he affect for good all the transient and material questions of life in any given age.

The above criticism seems also to misapprehend the true idea of the church. The church may not, indeed, yet have attained to its own ideal. The true church is of itself a reform society. Every man is, or should be, born a reformer, when he is born again. To make men true reformers—men in sympathy with the deepest need of society, is simply to make them true Christians. Moreover, the moral sentiment in man is a changeless factor. The deepest needs of the race are the same in every generation. Christ, also, is the same yesterday and to-day, yea, and forever. Consider, then, if Christ's conception of the home, the church, the state, the vow, is not, though nearly 2,000 years old, the ideal for to-day. Consider if his view of childhood and youth and old age; his view of man, of woman, of marriage and divorce; his view of the laborer and the capitalist; his view of the teacher, the lawyer, the preacher, the editor, the statesman, the politician; his view of money, of reform, of worship, of patriotism, of country, is not the idea which the mammon-ridden generation needs. The true minister believes that it is. He believes, moreover, that it is a superficial philosophy which looks only at the men and the topics of the day, and that they are poor reformers who fail to build the fabrics of their reform upon that Gospel which is 1,800 years back of the "present date." In view of all the wants and woes of earth, the minister may still, with brow lifted to God, join with Paul across the centuries in declaring "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ."—Rev. James Brand, in the American Magazine.

—Three months are left in which the Baptists must raise $120,000 if they desire to have the benefit of Mr. John D. Rockefeller's gift of $600,000 for a university in Chicago.

—One hundred and eighty-five new societies of Christian Endeavor were recently formed in one week. Of these 43 were Presbyterian, 26 Methodist, 20 Baptist, 15 Congregational, and 8 Christian.

A TESTED REMEDY.

It is related that Bishop Kavanaugh was one day walking, when he met a prominent physician who offered him a seat in his carriage. The physician was an infidel, and the conversation turned upon religion.

"I am surprised," said the doctor, "that such an intelligent man as you should believe such an old fable as that."

The Bishop said, "Doctor, suppose years ago some one had recommended to you a prescription, and, taking it according to order, had been cured of a terrible disease, what would you say of the man who would not try your prescription?"

"I should say he was a fool."

"Twenty-five years ago," said Kavanaugh, "I tried the power of God's grace. It made a different man of me. All these years I have preached salvation, and, wherever accepted, have never known it to fail."

What could the doctor say to such a testimony as this? And such testimonies are what men need to turn them from the error of their ways, to the personal experience of the saving power of the Lord Jesus Christ.

"How would you prove the divinity of Christ?" said some ministers to a young backwoods preacher whom they were examining.

"What?" said he, puzzled by the question.

"How would you prove the divinity of Christ?"

"Why, he saved my soul," was the triumphant reply.

But to give this answer one must be saved, and know it in his heart, and show it in his life, and he then becomes a living epistle, known and read of men.—Selected.

HOW TO READ BOOKS.

A TALK WITH THE CHILDREN.

[John Dennis, in Good Words.]

Two Words Explained.—You will all have seen the word "literature," but probably you would find it difficult to tell me what it means. I must try and explain the term as well as I can. First of all, I will tell you what it is not. Books have been written upon every subject in which men are interested. The architect, the engineer, the lawyer, the doctor consult books that will help them in their professions; but law books, and medical books, and books on architecture—books written for a special class—are not literature. On the other hand, books written in verse or prose that awaken thought, that give solace and delight, and lift us above the narrow round of our daily life—books that make us happier, wiser, even merrier—are books that deserve to be called literature. Our poets, our historians, our essayists, our novelists, the travelers who describe what they have seen in different parts of the world, the critics who write about books and show us their faults and their beauties, have all contributed to build up what we call our national literature, by which we mean the literature produced by Englishmen. Every great people has produced a noble literature, and this is, indeed, one of the chief signs of its greatness. We read the literature of the Jews in the books which form our Bible; ancient Greece produced a literature unequalled in Europe to this day for beauty of language and wealth of thought; Rome, that once ruled the world, did so first by the sword, then by her laws, and then by the poets and historians who have made the Latin language so famous. Modern nations, too—such as Germany, France and Italy—can each boast a national literature; but not one of these countries has a literature equal to that which is open to the readers of the English language. Here, then, is a vast store-house full to overflowing with precious treasures, and the wealth piled-up may so puzzle the youth who looks in at the door, that he will perhaps hesitate to enter. What can he do? he may ask; how can he best use the good gifts that wise and great Englishmen have left for his service? In reply to this question I must explain to you another word, and that word is CULTURE. You know the difference between land in its natural state and land that has been drained and manured, that has felt the plowshare and the harrow; you know, too, the difference between the flowers of our woods and fields and the flowers that grow in a well-cared-for garden. Some sort of difference like this may be seen between people whose minds have been allowed to run wild and people whose minds are carefully cultivated. The contrast, however, is not quite complete, because nature however wild, and flowers however untended, are always beautiful; but there is no beauty in a mind that, like the garden of the sluggard, contains nothing save wild briars, thistles and thorns. In order, then, to read books so as to get good out of them, the mind needs culture, which is not mere knowledge, although that is very needful, but the power of seeing what is good and wise in a book, and rejecting what is feeble and false. This power cannot be acquired off-hand, like a lesson. Some people, although they may read a great deal, never gain this gift, never know how to use their reading wisely. They have a confused notion of many things, but they know nothing thoroughly, partly because they never had the training so necessary in early life, and partly because they read books in a sleepy, stupid way, content to be amused, and not wishing to learn. Reading, you will see, may be the idlest of pastimes, a pursuit followed from mere indolence and emptiness of mind. I am writing, however, for boys and girls who want to know how to read, and for them a few hints shall be given that may prove generally useful.

Reading with a Purpose.—Some of the children who read these pages will have visited the British Museum, but few probably have entered the reading room with its splendid dome and vast shelves of books. Those who may have done so will have been told that the books they see are but few in comparison with the number contained in that immense library. Now it is evident that if a man were to read in that room every day and all day through a long life, the books he read would be insignificant in number when compared with the volumes stored up in the museum. What, then, does the student do who wants to make a good use of that great library? He selects a subject, and chooses books that will tell him what he wants to know on that subject. And just in the same way the boy or girl who loves reading, and wishes to gain from it something more than mere amusement, must choose some subject—that is to say, he must read with a purpose. Mind, I do not say that amusement is not sometimes a sufficient reason for taking up a book. We cannot be always wise, and a capital story-book is as good a recreation for a child on a rainy day as a game of cricket when the sun is shining. The boy or girl who does not love a good tale will not often be found to care for books of any kind.

But if reading for amusement is an easy and pleasant thing to do in leisure moments, reading with a purpose requires resolution and courage. Without these virtues neither boy nor man will do much good in life, and therefore it is well to remember, even in early years, that nothing of lasting value can be acquired without labor. There is no doubt plenty of reading that needs no thought, but then it does no good, and only serves, as people say, to kill time—a horrible expression when you come to think about it. To get good from a book you must feel a thorough interest in it. A boy who keeps pigeons, and is fond of them, will read with great eagerness any book that tells him about those birds; and you may be sure that when he reaches the end of that book he will have learned all it has to teach him. And the reason is plain. The boy is interested in his subject, he wants to gain knowledge, and this desire makes it pleasant to acquire it. So you see he has been reading with a purpose.

WHY NOT AN INFIDEL?

I once met a thoughtful scholar who told me he had read every book he could which assailed the religion of Jesus Christ, and he said he should have become an infidel but for three things: "First, I am a man. I am going somewhere. To-night I am a day nearer the grave than I was last night. I have read all such books can tell me. They shed not one solitary ray of hope or light upon the darkness. They shall not take away the guide and leave me stone blind. Second, I had a mother. I saw her go down into the dark valley where I am going, and she leaned on an unseen arm as calmly as a child goes to sleep on its mother's breast. I knew that was not a dream. Third, I have three motherless daughters. They have no protection but myself. I would rather kill them than leave them in this sinful world, if you blot out from it all the teachings of the Gospel.—Bishop Whipple.

Daniel Webster was in the habit, before reading a book, of making an analysis of the questions he expected would be answered in it. He would read no book but one which he thought would answer some important question, and thus make some valuable addition to his knowledge. It rarely pays to read a book that you cannot afford to own, because a book that is worth reading twice, is worth referring to twenty times.

TEMPERANCE.

BREAK NEBRASKA'S BONDS.

Prof. Samuel Dickie, chairman of the National Prohibition committee, issues the following appeal for the cause in Nebraska: The contest now going on in Nebraska is one of vastly more than local importance. High license has for nine years been the policy of the State. It has been tried more fully in Nebraska than in any other State of the Union. The verdict of her citizens, to be rendered next November will be understood as expressing the judgment of those familiar with the high license system. It is important that that system, impotent as a means of restraint, and iniquitous as a source of political corruption, shall receive a fitting rebuke. While fully aware that it is not our mission as a party organization to espouse the non-partisan methods from time to time proposed, we are yet satisfied that the correct settlement of the Nebraska contest will make mightily for the advancement of prohibition everywhere.

Let Nebraska repudiate high license and other States will not be so ready to adopt their discarded policy. Let high license be sustained and the farce will go on there and elsewhere. But can prohibition be carried in Nebraska? Yes, with proper effort. Left to fight it out among themselves, free from outside influences, prohibition would certainly win.

But they will not be so left. Already the vast pecuniary and political influence of the liquor traffic of the whole nation is being exerted to preserve high license in Nebraska. Vast sums of money are already forthcoming to defeat the prohibitory amendment.

Immense quantities of anti-prohibition literature are even now being distributed throughout the State. Every species of fraud and trickery will be used to hoodwink voters and perpetuate the saloon. To insure success for the prohibitory amendment we need do but one thing, reach the people with the truth.

Every school district must be worked. Every school-house must ring with the truth on this question. Every home must be reached with the printed page. Every voter must be aroused, interested, enlisted. Can it be done? Yes, but it will cost something to do it. Money must be had in liberal quantity or our case is in jeopardy. Give us fifty thousand dollars and we will reach every voter in Nebraska who has intelligence enough to read his home newspaper. To secure this sum is entirely within the limits of the reasonable and the possible. It can be raised and should be before the first of May.

Let every friend of prohibition consider himself or herself especially commissioned to solicit, receive and forward funds for this purpose.

We will make a full and detailed report of all sums received and disbursed, so that every donor may know what has been done with the money. We urge action, prompt, vigorous and earnest. Let us determine to carry the Amendment in Nebraska, and it can be done. Forward! is the word. A little effort and sacrifice from all will render victory certain.

SAMUEL DICKIE, Chairman.

32 East 14th St., New York.

Have you a boy to spare? The saloon must have boys or it must shut up shop. Can't you find one? It is a great factory, and unless it can have 2,000,000 from each generation for raw material, some of these factories must close up and the operatives be thrown out upon a cold world, and the public revenue dwindle. Wanted—2,000,000 boys! One family out of every five must contribute a boy in order to keep up the supply. Will you help? Which of your boys shall it be? Are you a father? Have you given your share to keep up the supply for this great public institution that is helping pay your taxes and kindly electing public officers for you? Have you contributed a boy? If not, some other family has had to give more than its share. Are you selfish—voting to keep the saloon open to grind up boys and then doing nothing to keep up the supply? Ponder these questions, ye voters, and answer them to God, to whom you will one day give an account for votes as well as for prayers.—Temperance Leaflet.

PAT FLANIGAN'S LOGIC.

"Patrick Flanigan," said the District Attorney one day in court, "stand up and plead guilty or not guilty to the charge the Commonwealth hath preferred against you."

When Pat complied with the polite request thus made by the officer of the law, the attorney proceeded to read from a paper in his hand a very graphic description of a certain transaction in which Pat had been engaged a few days before.

"What say you? Are you guilty or not guilty?" asked the attorney.

"I'm not guilty of half thim things you've read to me," said Pat, looking at the court, "but I did have a bit of row last Saturday was a week; an' I dunno just what I did, for ye see I was stavin' drunk on the meanest corn whisky yer honor iver tasted."

"But, Patrick, we never taste it," said the judge, while a smile lurked in ambush behind the grave judicial countenance.

"Sure, now, don't ye, though?" said Pat, with a look of mingled surprise and incredulity—"don't ye, though? Well, thin, ye ought to, jist once, to know how it acts, and to know how to pity a poor fellow that does. Sure yer honor grants licenses, an' how do ye know the mischief yer doin' to honest men like meself unless ye take a drink now and thin, jist to see how it makes a man behave hisself."

"Who gave you the liquor, Patrick?" asked the court, on a voyage of discovery.

"Well, I dunno vat's his name," said Pat, too honest to turn informant, while a gleam of true native humor twinkled in his eye. "But I know I seed a license hangin' behind the bar. Ye see, Judge, I was wroughtin' for the city, on the streets, jist close by, an' I was dry, an' it was so handy I wint in an' took a drink that ortent to have hurt a baby, an' in tin seconds I was crazy drunk, an' I dreamt that I was at Donnybrook fair, an' that's all I remimber till nixt mornin', when I was boardin' at Sheriff Ryan's hotel."

"But," said the court, "you are charged with perpetrating an aggravated assault and battery on Mr. S., the hotel-keeper."

"Well, yer honor," said Pat, "if I did, I only gin him back jist wat's in his own whisky; an' if yer honor hadn't give him that license I wouldn't 've bin drunk; an' if I hadn't bin drunk I wouldn't have got into the fight; an' if I hadn't 've got into the fight I wouldn't 've bin here this mornin', onyhow."

This was a process of reasoning new to the court. It was a self-evident truth dressed in plain clothes, and while the law was with the court, Pat evidently had all the logic, and he here summed up the mischief of the license system in a few sentences.

Scores of men are made drunk every day, just because it is so easy to obtain liquor. The law places it in reach of every man. On the streets of our towns and cities are hung notices of "Choice Liquors," "Cool Lager," "Ale," and "Fancy Drinks," to tempt the laboring man to come in and spend for strong drink the money that his family needs for bread.

On the path he must walk to and from his daily occupation, he sees those temptations. The licensed saloon and grog-shop afford him every facility to become a drunkard. His appetite, renewed and kept alive by indulgence, urges him on. There is no obstacle in his road to ruin; on the other hand, that road is opened and made plain and easy by the law. What wonder is it, then, that the rum shops flourish while the families of their victims starve?

Better be small and shine, than be great and cast a shadow.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Pharisee and the sinner. Vs. 36-39. Jesus did not shun any class or condition of men. He had no favor for the rich man because he was rich, nor for the poor man because he was poor. He could eat with Simon the Pharisee or Zaccheus the publican; nor is there any instance given of his refusing an invitation from any one, high or low. Christ looked at all the discrepancies of fortune and station from the divine point of view—as mere idle distinctions without a difference. The one fact of a common humanity was all he recognized, and never will the great labor problem be adequately settled until our legislators and political economists are brought to look at this subject from the same focus. Jesus had no fear of defilement from the touch of this sinful woman who intruded herself so strangely at the feast. Divine purity can receive no stain of pollution from even the most sinful; so if we have put on the robe of Christ's righteousness we can go into the haunts of the most degraded without fear, to tell them the story of salvation. But when we are clothed with our own righteousness we may well show a Pharisaical carefulness, for it is a garment made from the loom of human opinion. It is at best the merest imitation, and like shoddy goods, will stand no wear. Every wind blows through it, and everything that touches it leaves a stain. The Pharisee's reasoning about Christ was very shallow, as all merely human reasoning must be. He brought, as it were, his own little two-foot measure to fathom the infinite, but he soon found out that his guest was not only a prophet, but far more than a prophet.

2. The parable and its application. Vs. 40-50. We are not to suppose that Jesus did not recognize differences in moral character. This parable shows that he did; and also his salutation to Nathaniel, "Behold an Israelite in whom is no guile." But bridging the wide gulf between the virtuous and the abandoned classes he puts the fact of a common indebtedness. There is a difference between the moral and the immoral, but the former, though offending in only one point, incurs a debt as much as the other. The difference is in degree, not in kind. This explains the zeal and devotion of a Newton or a Bunyan. Being forgiven much they loved much. This sinful woman brought the most precious thing she could offer. She poured it out freely without stint—not on his head but on his feet. True love always speaks the same language, in saint or sinner. She did exactly what the pure Mary of Bethany did when she wanted to show the gratitude of her heart for raising Lazarus. It is blessed to break our alabaster box of ointment on Christ's feet, by doing humble, unnoticed acts of service for him. Let others anoint his head by great gifts which the world can see and applaud, but eternity will tell the story and give the place of honor to such as this poor woman who "loved much," and Mary, who "did what she could." Simon has his counterpart in many a nominal Christian, who may well take to himself or herself the same rebuke. Though professing to entertain Christ as their heart's guest, they have other guests that they honor before him. They sacrifice nothing for him either of money or time. They give up no luxuries for his sake, not even so much as a useless ornament or a hurtful indulgence; and like Simon they lose the blessing. It is faith which saves the sinner, be his sins many or few. The harlot and the Pharisee cannot enter heaven by different ways, but one is as freely justified by his grace as the other, and both must enter by the same door—a crucified and risen Saviour.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The Swedish University at Upsala has appointed a delegate to the annual conference of college students at Northfield, Mass.

—Seven Protestant missionaries in Chili have sent out an appeal to the American churches for a weekly observance of prayer in behalf of that country and other papal-darkened lands of South America. They say the present is a time of great opportunity. A reaction against Romanism is taking place, but its trend is toward infidelity and indifferentism.

—Rev. Thos. M. Chalmers of North Henderson, N. Y., has been treating his congregation to a series of sermons on the subject of missions. He has given seven of the series and has others to deliver.

—Rev. Wm. Johnston, D.D., of College Springs, Iowa, is unable to preach and is having his pulpit supplied. His sickness, says the Midland, is of a serious nature and will probably make it necessary for him to rest for some time. He has the sympathy of many friends, and not least among them, the Cynosure.

—In view of the widespread desire for a closer union among brethren of like faith and practice, the union committees of the Reformed Presbyterian churches, at their late joint meeting, appointed a committee, with representatives from the two Reformed and the United Presbyterian churches, to make arrangements for a general convention on union. The committee have called upon all who feel an interest in this subject to meet in convention April 17 and 18 in Dr. David McAllister's church, Eighth street, Pittsburgh, Pa.

—The closing exercises of Xenia Seminary commenced Sabbath evening, March 30, with the delivery of the baccalaureate sermon by Dr. Harper. The annual address was given by President R. G. Furgeson, D.D., whose subject was "The Companion Traits of the Great Apostle Paul, viz.: Courage and Tact." Among the eight graduates are names of McQuiston, Hanna and McMichael of Monmouth.

—Representatives of the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian church, the American Board (Congregational), the Protestant Episcopal Board, the American Baptist Missionary Union, the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal church, the American Bible Society, the Evangelical Alliance, and the Society of Friends met Wednesday at the rooms of the Presbyterian Foreign Missionary Board in New York to consider the Chinese enumeration bill, now before the Senate, with special reference to its bearing upon missionary work and property in China. The sentiment of the meeting was strongly opposed to the bill. It was urged that its adoption would be a violation of treaty rights, and all who were present were apprehensive that it would endanger the personal safety of the American missionaries now resident in China, and greatly hamper them in their work. It was decided to leave more specific action to be taken by the missionaries separately. All the societies represented have missions in China.

—More schools are needed in Alaska. About 1,500 children are in the schools. An exchange says: "The people are teachable, but whisky is free, notwithstanding the positive prohibition of the law by Congress.

—Of the more than 4,000 students who have joined the volunteer movement for foreign missions about one-quarter are women. One hundred and ninety-five have already gone abroad. The movement is strongest in Eastern colleges, but is being extended to the West and to the Pacific Coast.

—A writer in the Missionary Review says that out of the three million converts in the foreign mission fields thirty thousand have gone as workers into the field, or one out of every hundred, while Protestant Christendom has sent forth but one out of every five thousand. These converts serve as native preachers, teachers, catechists, and lay helpers, and often prove most effective allies to the regular missionary force sent from England and America.

—A jubilee service was recently held at Wabash, Ind., over the conversion of 500 souls.

—The Third Reformed Church of Albany, N. Y., are having a series of evangelistic services conducted by Rev. George J. Mingins, pastor of the Union Tabernacle in New York.

—Carrier-pigeons are being experimented with by the Scotch missionaries at Lake Nyassa, Central Africa, as postmen. Unfortunately the large birds of prey endanger the pigeons' lives, and the foreign climate has to be got along with and the epidemics to which fowls are subject at certain seasons. Still some few have been successfully experimented with, and a trial on a large scale is contemplated.

—Castelar, the Spanish statesman, is going to Palestine to gather materials for a life of Christ on which he is engaged.

—Westminster Congregational church, London, has called Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, formerly of Philadelphia, to the pastorate.

—The Board of Home Missions of the Presbyterian church is about ending its fiscal year, and is facing a prospective large debt. It issues an appeal to the churches which have not contributed.

—The Congregational church of Chelsea, Mich., lately received twenty-one into membership. The pastor is Rev. O. C. Bailey, a younger brother of Rev. E. D. Bailey of Washington city.

—Rev. George F. Pentecost, who has been laboring in Scotland for two or more years, now proposes to take twenty-five men and women with him to India, and, at their own cost, carry on evangelistic work in that great empire.

—The Students' Volunteer Foreign Mission movement is still growing. In 1886, at Mr. Moody's summer school at Northfield, 150 students out of 200 present pledged themselves to the foreign mission work. The year following 2,200 college men made similar pledges. In 1888 3,200 were pledged, and this number has been increased to nearly 5,000, representing the colleges and universities in this country.

—The revival interest in the Central Methodist Episcopal church at Newark, N. J., of which the Rev. F. G. Iglehart, D.D., is pastor, still continues. The results thus far have been over 120 conversions, nearly all of whom have joined the church on probation. This church is in a most prosperous condition.

—George Muller, the man who prevails by prayer, is still at 80 years of age traveling and preaching the Gospel. When heard from last he was at Darjeeling, on the Himalayan Mountains. From this point he has sent forth the fiftieth report of his orphanage at Bristol, England, which tells the same tale that was told in past years. Summing up the sums by which the work has been sustained, he reports that the total receipts since March, 1883, have been very nearly $6,000,000. Nearly 8,000 orphans have been cared for, and five large houses have been built in Ashley Downs, Bristol, at an expense of $575,000, which can accommodate 2,800 orphans at a time. During the years 1886-89, one legacy has been received of $25,000, another of $10,000, and later another of $25,000. The old principles on which the institution was founded still prevail.

LETTERS FROM AFRICA.

Some time since the students of Wheaton College made a contribution for the support of the African missionaries, Johnston and Cole. From their letters of acknowledgment we are permitted to make the following extracts:

The Lord has watched over us in great kindness since we left our native land, protecting and comforting us on the deep and preserving and cheering us during six weeks of labor in Freetown. We have all been in good health so far, and I have been enabled to preach twice on Sabbath without excessive weariness and attend Sunday-school as well. But one is able to accomplish but little work here in comparison with America, and but a limited amount of physical labor is possible.

For the first week we were furnished quarters at the house of a native lawyer, named Williams, while our house was being cleaned and painted. They move so slowly here that it took them a month to get the house ready. We have been in the "Mission House" two weeks now, and have arranged our limited supply of furniture so that the house looks quite home-like, and we all feel to thank the Lord to be at "home" once more. We have much before us if we succeed in doing a reasonable portion of the work that needs to be done. Spiritual life is low in West African churches, and the average church member is far from being an exemplary Christian. But when we consider their former state, together with the evil environments that have retarded their progress, there is every reason to be encouraged with the people.

Freetown is a beautiful place, and a place of so much commercial importance, that if it was not for the dusky faces all about us we would forget that we were on the Dark Continent. We suffer no inconvenience from the heat. If it was not for the exhaustion produced by the atmosphere we could live here very comfortably. I sincerely hope that the climate is not as unhealthy as it has usually been regarded. White people do live here. I know one man who has lived here twenty-seven years. If the Lord preserves my life that long I will have no reason to complain. Yours in Christ,

H. W. JOHNSTON.

I am now laboring for the conversion of Mohammedans. I distribute amongst them Christian tracts in the Arabic language, and go to their towns on Sabbath afternoons and tell them about Jesus and his love. Mohammedanism is taking a rapid and firm hold of Africa, and in many places Christianity seems to be dwindling before it. The Christian governments and nations are not true to the religion they profess. Africa has been rendered a den of wickedness and vice by the introduction of poisonous alcoholic drinks to the natives by Christian traders, for love of gain. Avarice is treading down the blood of the covenant, and Christ is brought into a reproach before the heathen. I have been trying to build an industrial school here, where the Mohammedan youths may learn to labor and also learn of Christ. The amount that you have kindly forwarded me will be placed aside for this work. Your fellow laborer,

J. AUGUSTUS COLE.

—A movement has been started in Berlin to abolish the letting of pews in the churches. The local association of the Evangelical Church Aid Society is promoting two new works of great promise. The number of deaconesses in Berlin is to be considerably increased, and ministers are to be appointed in many needy parishes. Both the measures are started at the desire of the empress.

OBITUARY.

REV. ARCHIBALD KENYON of Hoopes-ton, Ill., died February 15, 1890, aged 77, having been born July 31, 1813, at Athol, Warren county, N. Y.

He was regularly ordained in 1835 as pastor of the Baptist church of Adams-ville, N. Y. He preached many times at Hartford, Kingsbury, Salem, Arling-ton, Greenwich and Lakeville. June 7th, 1835, he baptized Juliana Pratt (sister of Judge Pratt of Syracuse), to whom he was married by Rev. Nathaniel Colver, Sept. 20, 1836.

After having been twice pastor at Lakeville and Shushan, he settled at Hoosic, N. Y., in 1840. There he found some of the members sold liquors, and slavery was so interwoven with civil government that they were not to be dis-cussed in the pulpit, and they were not quite ready to all appearance to inaugurate a new policy. However, many were received into the church, and from that time to the present have been active in church work, not forgetting to write to their old pastor and giving him aid finan-cially.

In 1841 a Baptist church at Provi-dence, R. I., said we want a man who will stand boldly for the right against slavery, political oppression, intemper-ance and all sanctioning of sin. He accepted the call and prosperity attended his labors and many were baptized, but the Dorr Rebellion was the cause of his removal. Soon after he was preaching at Vernon, N. Y. Subsequently three and one-half years were spent at Clinton, eight miles from Utica, the seat of Ham-ilton College, where he was cordially sustained, not only by the church, but by Congregationalists, men noted for their anti-slavery and temperance prin-ciples. He subsequently went to Ohio, settled at Cleveland, organized a church, and at Kirtland edited the Free Mission Visitor.

In 1852 he became pastor of the Tab-ernacle church, now the Second Baptist church, of Chicago. Their numerical strength then was about one-fourth of their present number. Here his pastorate of nearly four years was attended with good to many souls now sleeping in the dust of the earth; only a few remain that he baptized. One of the resolutions passed Aug. 5, 1856, by the church was, "that in Rev. A. Kenyon we have ever found a faithful minister and an efficient pastor, whose ministerial and moral character is above reproach." October 1st his wife died and was buried in the old cemetery on the shore of Lake Michigan.

After this event he organized the Berean church, and their house of wor-ship was built and he became their pastor. June 4, 1857, he married Angelina B. Crandell of Hoosic, N. Y. After this he preached at Mt. Palatine. Soon after he went to Iowa City, Iowa, and many young students were baptized by him while there. His next work was in response to an urgent call from Union, Wis. This church was said to be the second in the Janesville association in numbers, wealth and influence. This church paid their pastor well and promptly, and enabled him to buy the home in which he passed away to his reward. After he left Union, Wis., he held pastorates at Peoria, Chatsworth, East Lynn, Hoopes-ton, Illinois, and Thompsonville, Wis. At Hoopes-ton he gathered eighteen scattered Baptists—they were few—but resolved to build a house of worship, and the consequence was the church was greatly strengthened and he remained their pastor five years.

Mr. Kenyon was a man of great strength of character. When fully per-suaded he was in the right, he would never flinch a hair's breadth from what he considered his duty. He was by nature a reformer. He preached a Gos-pel clear, strong and pure, and exalted the name of Christ in all his sermons. He preached to make men better. The last public service he was able to per-form was more than one year since, when he held temperance meetings in Mr. Honeywell's park on Sabbath afternoons. Ministers and prohibitionists aided him greatly in this work, for which he was very thankful. For many years he was an ardent prohibitionist, suffragist and an anti-secretist, and wrote for the American Baptist, the Cynosure, and the Liberator. With all his apparent stern-ness, he had a heart as tender as a child's and a soul full of poetic fire. Nathan Brown, the missionary, was a dear friend of his. His illness was of fourteen months' duration; but he never mani-fested a desire to recover, only to preach Christ.

He died as he lived, in the faith of Christ, though distressed in body, yet quiet and peaceful in spirit. As the shock of corn, fully ripe in his season, he was brought to death and gathered to his fathers. He leaves to his children and friends a glorious legacy—a good name—better than precious ointment, and prayers for them, to be answered as years shall roll away. The last sermon he ever preached was over the remains of Peter Howe and wife of Wenona, Ill. His text was, "Let thy house be in order, for thou shalt die and not live." In closing one of his sermons some years previous, he said: "To die in peace and hope, to pass out to the possession of an enduring crown, fadeless as immortality, is no mean thing. This should be the very climax of human ambition, that I may be found of God in peace, found in Christ." A. B. K.

SAMPLES OF LETTERS RECEIVED REFER-RING TO THE WASHINGTON SOUVENIR SENT OUT FROM THIS OFFICE.

I am very much pleased with the Washington Souvenir, and am going to have it put in a frame.—HENRY RUPERT.

I thank you very much for the Wash-ington Birthday Memorial. It is an excellent idea. The portraits are sure to draw attention.—Rev. T. M. CHALMERS.

The beautiful picture, Washington and his Co-Patriots, was received two days ago. Washington and his Co-Patriots, though dead, yet speak in terms which cannot be mistaken, bearing faithful testimony against that overshadowing evil, which, now that American slavery is no more, may be called the "sum of all villainies."—Rev. BENJ. F. WORRELL.

Many are having the souvenir framed for preservation, and because of its tell-ing testimony against secretism.

CONCERNING PREMIUMS.

We offer premiums to compensate such of our subscribers as take the pains and trouble to secure new subscribers to the Cynosure. Many who do this refuse to receive pay, and work because they love the work; others are glad to receive pre-miums. But,

HOME AND HEALTH.

SOME GOOD RULES FOR DYSPEPTICS.

1. Eat two meals a day
2. Eat slowly, masticate the food very thoroughly, even more so, if possible, than is required in health.
3. Avoid drinking at meals; at most take a few sips of warm, unstimulating drink at the close of the meal, if the food is very dry in character.
4. In general, dyspeptic stomachs manage dry food better than that containing much fluid; so avoid light soups.
5. Eat neither very hot nor cold food. The best temperature is about that of the body. Avoid exposure to cold soon after eating.
6. Be careful to avoid excess in eating. Eat no more than the wants of the system require. Strength depends not on what is eaten, but on what is digested.
7. Never take violent exercise of any sort, either mental or physical, either just before or just after a meal. It is not good to sleep immediately after eating.
8. If it is thought necessary to eat three times a day make the last meal very light. For most dyspeptics two meals are better than more.
9. Never eat a morsel of any sort between meals.
10. Never eat when very tired, whether exhausted from mental or physical labor.
11. Never eat when the mind is worried or the temper is ruffled, if it is possible to avoid doing so.
12. Eat only food that is easy of digestion, avoiding complicated and indigestible dishes, and taking but two or three kinds at a meal.

13. Most persons will be benefited by the use of oatmeal, wheat meal or graham flour, cracked wheat and other whole-grain preparations, though many will find it necessary to avoid vegetables, especially when fruits are taken.

14. Some kind of fruit, ripe, fresh, or in the simple form of stewed or canned, should be eaten at breakfast, as fruit promotes digestion. The use of fruit obviates the necessity of drinking while eating, and for those who have been habituated to drinking, a dish of stewed apples or prunes will serve as well.—Science of Health.

EATING TOO RAPIDLY.

Perhaps the doctor is right who says that a greater portion of the sickness in this country is caused by the unpleasant habit of eating too rapidly. It is interesting to watch the average citizen when he goes into a restaurant for his dinner. He doesn't seem to regard the meal with any degree of fondness, but acts as though the eating of it is one of those disagreeable duties which confronts a man at every step on the highway of life. He attacks the meal savagely, and you can hear his knife and fork rattling a furlong away. He shovels the food into his mouth as a hired man shovels corn into a shelling-machine, and swallows it without chewing it. He pours down a lot of iced-water when the meat is consumed, with a frantic endeavor to make it as indigestible as possible, and when the last rites are over he rushes to the cashier's desk, and settles, with an expression of relief mantling his radiant countenance like a rainbow after a storm. The stern physician says that people should eat very slowly, and while away the time between bites by conversation about the weather, the crops, or any cheerful subject. In this way the days of the years of their pilgrimage may be many.

DISCONTENT AND ILL-HEALTH.

One observer remarks, sententiously: "I never knew a grumbler who was well. Discontented people are always sick, or ailing, because they are always thinking sick thoughts. There is Mrs. K—, she is continually filling her mind with negations; sure that she isn't going to sleep, sure that whatever she eats will distress her, sure that she isn't any better than she was six months ago, and she will tell you that she has never been strong and never expects to be. The trouble is that she believes too much in her weakness and not at all in her pos-said a mild-tempered man in our hearing. "She snaps and snarls and spans her children, and finds fault continually. I can't bear it any longer." Don't be too severe on her, my friend; you little realize her sufferings. She has lost her former sweet disposition, and ill health is the cause of it all. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will make her well.

As a powerful, invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the whole system, and to the womb and its appendages in particular. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequalled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

As a soothing and strengthening nerve, "Favorite Prescription" is unequalled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and other distressing, nervous symptoms, commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a legitimate medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in any condition of the system.

"Favorite Prescription" is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate cases of leucorrhea, excessive flowing, painful menstruation, unnatural suppressions, prolapsus, or falling of the womb, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb, inflammation, pain and tenderness in ovaries, accompanied with "internal heat."

It is the only medicine for woman's peculiar weaknesses and ailments, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, to give satisfaction in every case, or money paid for it will be promptly refunded. See guarantee printed on bottle-wrapper and faithfully carried out for many years.

sible strength. For it is impossible to be otherwise than weak when the mind is continually filled with an image of weakness. There are plenty of people who have a good physique and strong constitution, yet live as if they were walking on eggs. They do everything from the point of weakness, and the result is failure."

In purchasing medicines, don't try experiments; the first and only consideration should be genuineness. Ayer's Sarsaparilla has stood the test of forty years, and to-day it is in greater demand than ever—a triumphant proof of popular approval.

PAGAN COUNTERFEITS

IN THE

Christian Church.

A pamphlet of 52 pages, by Chas. A. S. Temple.

The following from Rev. H. H. Hinman shows his estimate of its contents:

"I have read with great interest 'Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church' by Chas. A. S. Temple. I regard the subject discussed as important, and its presentation both able and timely. There is a most manifest drift in all our Protestant denominations towards unauthorized ritualism and the substitution of human inventions in place of the simplicity of the Gospel, as given by Christ and his apostles. In calling attention to this tidal wave of formalism, the author has conferred a lasting benefit on the church; as of Protestantism."

FARM NOTES.

POINTS IN POTATO GROWING.

PREPARING THE SOIL.—Old-country people have for ages understood the full importance of a thorough pulverization of the soil for the purpose of potato growing. They commence to plow in the fall, and continue to plow until the piece to be planted has been turned over three or four times. This, undoubtedly, is a pretty effectual method, yet not one which we would wish to adopt. The American farmer is satisfied if he can plow his land thoroughly a single time, or at most twice, once in the fall and again in the spring, and the "thorough pulverization" of the soil has to be accomplished by less laborious and less expensive means. I am not entirely satisfied that repeated plowing aids in increasing the yield on all soils. A comparative trial made last year between a strip of sandy loam plowed once and another adjoining plowed twice (both times in the spring), gave an entirely negative result. On the same soil its thorough pulverization in the bottom of the furrow failed to increase the crop in a perceptible degree. On many other soils, however, this "trench" method is of decided advantage, and perhaps equal in effectiveness to the repeated plowings of our European brethren. But while we have harrows that might be called models of perfection, so far as their effectiveness in pulverizing the surface to quite a depth is concerned, such harrows as the Acme, the Disk, Cutaway, etc., I have not yet seen the tool that gives me entire satisfaction for pulverizing the soil in the bottom of the trenches.

POTATO ROT.—Owing to the excessively wet weather in many parts of the East, especially in New Jersey, New York and Pennsylvania, the potato fields are suffering from "rot," often in a terrible degree. This form of rot—and a most malignant disease it is—is caused by a parasitic fungus similar to that causing the downy mildew of the grape vine, which also has invaded many new districts this season, notably the heretofore exempt grape regions on the Hudson and in western New York. It is thought, and perhaps with good reason, that the same means of prevention used for the downy mildew will also prove efficacious in the case of the potato rot. This preventive treatment (the application of copper sulphate solution or mixture in spray form) involves, however, the possession of a spraying pump, early and prompt action, and often repeated applications, and just for these reasons, I think, it will be some years, if ever, before farmers will generally resort to it, especially since the dangers from this source in a dry season are not very serious.

What every farmer should adopt, however, are the following rules:

1. Never plant potatoes on a field where the rot has appeared the year before.
2. Select light, well-drained soil.
3. Use for seed only tubers that are free from every taint of the disease, or if suspicious, expose them for some time to a temperature of 110 degrees Fahrenheit just before planting, or soak them for 24 hours in a solution of sulphate of copper, four to six ounces of the sulphate in enough water to cover a bushel of potatoes.
4. Dig the crop as soon as the tops begin to show signs of the disease, but in dry weather only.
5. Store in a dry and moderately cool room, and sprinkle with dry, air-slacked lime.

The early varieties hardly ever suffer from the disease, and in localities where this has become very destructive, it may be a wise move to plant only early sorts.

Prof. F. L. Scribner, who has given this subject much attention, thinks it is an error to suppose the rot to be "due to an enfeebled condition of the potato plant, especially from many years of cultivation." "The disease," he says, "has never been more destructive than during the years 1843 to 1845, and the wild potato is no more free from the malady than the cultivated sorts." This in a certain sense is undoubtedly true. The attacks of potato-bugs are not due to an enfeebled condition of the plant, either; yet a thrifty plant often outlives and out-

What You Need Spring and Fall

WHEN you feel "all run down" is Ayer's Sarsaparilla. For restoring strength after sickness, or toning up the system at any time, this is the medicine of all others. Don't waste time and money on worthless compounds, whatever their pretensions; but remember that Ayer's has been the standard Sarsaparilla for nearly half a century and has no equal.

"Sometime ago I found my system entirely run down. I had a feeling of constant fatigue and languor and very little ambition for any kind of effort. A friend advised me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did with the best results. It has done me more good than all other medicines I have ever used."—Frank Mellows, Chelsea, Mass.

"I was all run down before I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and now I am gaining in strength every day."—Mrs. Alice West, Jefferson, W. Va.

"I was long troubled with nervous debility and severe headaches. By the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla I have been restored to health."—Anthony Louis, 55 Tremont st., Charlestown, Mass.

grows the injuries caused by potato-bugs, while a sickly plant speedily succumbs. I have an idea that the condition of our cultivated potatoes has a good deal to do with the extent and hold of the disease.

At the time mentioned by Prof. Scribner, the rot made almost a clean sweep of the varieties then existing here and in Europe, and it was feared that potato growing would soon have to be abandoned. Then Rev. C. Goodrich, Utica, New York, began his experiments in crossing our cultivated sorts with the wild potatoes introduced from Chili and Peru, resulting in the Garnet Chili, Early Goodrich, etc., varieties which most of us well remember, and which, for a while, proved to be rot-resisting. Our whole system of potato culture must invariably lead to an enfeebled condition of the varieties, and I think it is very important for us to make efforts to improve the vitality of the race either by a more frequent renewal through seedlings, or by a more natural system of propagation from "underground stems" than we have generally made use of in the past.

REMARKABLE OFFER!

Nearly everyone is familiar with the name, but it has been estimated that only one in every two hundred and eighty persons in the United States is fortunate enough to have access to the valuable information contained within the covers of the grandest work ever written by mortal man,

Webster's UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY.

That this is an unfortunate state of affairs will be admitted by all, and it is due to the fact that no one save the rich could afford them.

The Dictionary is a necessity in every home, school and business house. It fills a vacancy and furnishes knowledge which no one hundred volumes of the choicest books could supply, and all young or old, educated or ignorant, rich or poor should have it within reach and refer to its contents every day in the year.

The Loomis reprint contains all the matter as compiled and arranged by our esteemed and honored author and statesman,

NOAH WEBSTER.

About forty years of his life was devoted to this great work, and when we consider the fact that this book contains about 100,000 words with their correct spelling, derivation and definition we will appreciate that these years must have been well spent.

Some idea of the magnitude of this book may be gained from the fact that it contains over 440 cubic inches of paper and has about 300,000 square inches of printed surface. The printing is very clear, plain and distinct, the paper firm and durable, being manufactured especially for this volume, the boards are extra heavy and covered with an excellent quality of leather and thoroughly laced by hand to the book proper.

By special arrangement with the publishers, we are permitted to furnish this valuable volume: 1st. To any subscriber to our paper; 2nd. To any renewal subscription; and 3rd. To any person who has paid a full year's subscription within the past six months, on receipt of $1.50 for the paper one year, and two dollars and seventy-five cents to cover express charges, packing, etc., of the Dictionary.

Friday morning one man was killed and another badly burned by an explosion of gas in a tunnel near Santa Paula, Cal. In the afternoon there was another explosion, and five men clearing out the debris in the tunnel were buried alive.

Governor Godell of New Hampshire, being incapacitated by ill health, the Council has summoned the President of the Senate, D. Arthur Taggart, to discharge the duties of the gubernatorial office.

Adjutant General Vance, reported to Governor Fifer Friday that on account of the damage done by the cyclone of March 27, contributions will be gladly received at Metropolis and Grand Tower, Ill.

Sheriff Johnson of Atlantic county, New Jersey, was reported Friday to have sold within two days 200 farms to satisfy foreclosed mortgages. It is said that forty families in the town of Germania are homeless.

At Louisville, Ky., the relief now amounts to $135,000. Eight hundred applications for aid have been received.

In the absence of their parents Wednesday three children of William Brown, who had been locked in their home near Huron, S. D., were burned to death.

Sunday night about 12 o'clock a break occurred in the levee at Austin, Miss., which widened to 300 feet by 7 o'clock, and as the levee is on a sandy foundation for a mile fears are entertained that it will increase to an unlimited extent.

Saturday night, at Philipsburg, Pa., an unknown person fired through a window at the Rev. O. D. Bartholomew, pastor of St. John's Lutheran church. This is the second attempt upon the preacher's life.

Fifty-one kegs and twenty-five cases of beer were emptied Wednesday into the streets of Farmington and De Lassus, Mo., by the female crusaders.

An explosion in a mine at Nanticoke, Pa., Wednesday morning, caused the death of three men. Six others were wounded, four of them in a dangerous manner.

Six boys, ranging in age from 11 to 19 years, were killed Tuesday by the caving in of a sand bank near Vernon, Texas.

Word was received at Omaha April 4 that a young Indian named Eagle Horse shot and instantly killed Frank E. Lewis, school-teacher at Pine Ridge Agency, and then committed suicide.

Confederate Decoration Day attracted thousands of visitors to the cemeteries of New Orleans, La., April 6. The Ladies' Confederate Monumental Association, the Confederate veteran organizations, Sons of Veterans, and the citizen soldiery in uniform participated. The Grand Army of the Republic did not take part in a body as no invitation was issued, owing to the division existing in that organization. At the tomb where the body of Jeff Davis is interred, the Confederate veterans placed a magnificent presidential chair of yellow immortelles, inscribed "To Our Chief."

A Vicksburg (Miss.) special says: "Nineteen Negroes, the survivors of a large party of refugees which attempted to escape from the overflow down Bayou Falaya on a raft, arrived here on the steamer Hill City. They report that twelve women and children were drowned when the current lashed their crazy vessel against a tree and that they escaped with extreme difficulty. This is the most tragic event of the flood."

FOREIGN.

The Czar and Czarina recently paid a visit to the military prison. They conversed with the prisoners, and asked them to state the causes which led to their imprisonment. The Czar ordered a release of sixty of the prisoners and a reduction of the sentences of sixty others.

It is reported Mme. Tschebrikova, the Russian lady who recently wrote a letter to the Czar calling attention to the political situation of the country, has been recently conducted to Siberia. Another report received here states that Mme. Tschebrikova was released by order of the Czar, and that the Czar wrote upon the margin of the letter sent him by Mme. Tschebrikova: "This is bitterly written; nevertheless the author can be left alone."

The Prince of Wales, it is said, although only 48 last November, is aging rapidly, that he has a worn-out, wearied look, and walks like a feeble man, being obliged frequently to stop and take breath. These evidences of physical decadence, corroborate the recent reports that the Prince is seriously ill.

Emin Pasha has finally accepted the proposal made to him by Major Wissman, and has entered the German service. He will receive a salary of £1,000 a year. He has given up his intention of returning to Europe, and will leave Bagomoyo about the middle of April for Victoria Nyanza. He will be accompanied by a large caravan and 200 Soudanese troops, under command of German officers. His decision meets with strong disfavor in Zanzibar.

Emin Bey has issued a proclamation to the whole Arab population of Africa declaring that he is not in sympathy with Henry M. Stanley in any way, nor with the English policy in Africa. Mr. Stanley cabled his congratulations and best wishes to Emin on his recovery and in his new enterprise.

The recent demonstration at Fanueil Hall and Tremont Temple, to welcome Powderly to Boston, was largely a Romanist affair, and the green flags carried by the labor organizations predominated in size and numbers over the red, white and blue. This great labor question is one that has got to be settled. Furthermore, it has got to be settled right, or else America will have to pass through a conflict unparalleled in history. The lodge has already seized upon it as a most convenient instrument by which to gain political control, and now Rome is preparing to use both in her great design of capturing America.

Chicago enterprise, regardless of patriotic motives, or the objections of the good taste of the best people of the city, removed the old Libby prison from Richmond to this city, where it was rebuilt in every part exactly as it stood. It is now the chief attraction of a fine and popular collection of war relics. A more agreeable and instructive collection is proposed with the old John Brown fort from Harper's ferry as its nucleus. This "John Brown's Liberty Museum" will be a school for the first principles of patriotism,—liberty of conscience, of the press, of the individual—liberty under law, the law whose "seat is the bosom of God."

Sincerely as we hope the expectations of the Iowa Congressmen, expressed in our Washington letter, may be fulfilled, it is with misgiving that we read how local option, as a substitute for prohibition, was defeated in the Iowa House by the close vote of 51 to 49. The anti-Prohibition Republicans also threaten a separate ticket at next election. Clarkson, the assistant Postmaster General, who has managed the politics of that department, and is now soon to seek other fields to conquer, is very influential among Iowa Republicans, and is said to be in favor of license. But it seems incredible that the good people of Iowa should return to the worse than Egyptian bondage of the saloon.

A bill has already passed the House at Washington, and is now under consideration in the Senate, respecting the enumeration of the Chinese population in the next census, the effect of which, if adopted, will be to exclude from entering the territory of the United States all Chinese people, whether merchants, tourists, or students, and to provoke retaliation which would practically put a stop to all missionary work in the Chinese empire. The action of the Presbyterian Foreign Mission Board last week, protesting against the bill, is given in our religious department. The board of managers of the Bible Society also considered this grave question at their New York meeting. After reading a letter from Hon. John W. Foster of Washington, they voted to urge upon Congress that such dangerous legislation should be defeated.

The base-ball season now opening suggests immediately the Sabbath question. Several States have passed laws prohibiting the game on the Sabbath day, for it inevitably proves a nuisance and prolific source of demoralization in every community where it is allowed. Some of the Chicago papers which print a Sunday sheet have little news for next day, and so fill up with column after column of reports of local games. The National League has not allowed games heretofore on the Sabbath, but since the secret society grip has been fastened on the base-ball business, it is feared there may be a change. The Hartford, Conn., players lately voted unanimously that under no circumstances whatsoever shall their club be allowed to play any game of ball on the Sabbath. This good example should be commended by all people.

A movement is on foot, it is said, for a simultaneous international European labor movement on May 1, in which 1,000,000 workingmen are expected to participate. What will be the nature of their participation is not said. It may be only as curious spectators in large part. The annual strikes, which the labor lodges precipitate in the busy spring season, are already begun in Chicago. The plumbers' strike was soon settled. Too many day's work, worth $5 or $6 each, were being squandered to permit it to last. The carpenters have been out a week. The contractors now propose engaging non-union men and war may begin any day, if the threats of the crowds of idle men hanging about the saloons under the labor lodge building on Peoria street and under Zeph's Hall may be credited. The contractors are blamed for unwillingness to arbitrate. Doubtless there may be wrongs to be righted on both sides, but back of all these every difference could be quickly settled were it not for the secret society demagogue and the power given him by secret oaths.

It is supposed that our Senators and Representatives are sent to Congress to provide necessary legislation and care for the interests of our government so far as it is in the constitutional power of that body. If they can do nothing of a positive nature, it is at least understood that they should be guilty of no acts that are degrading to their position, and are dishonorable to themselves, their constituents or the nation. But the Washington Star of the other day has the following account of a pagan ceremony in which Senators from Colorado and Oregon, and Representatives from Ohio, Missouri, Georgia and Arkansas participated. This is the Star's account of an affair

Ezekiel might have denounced along with the Tammuz worship of the temple: "Last Thursday night the seven mystic lights in the cathedral of the Scottish Rite, on G street, were extinguished. The ceremony of relighting the mystic lights is one of the most impressive in all Masonry, and this event took place at Scottish Rite Hall yesterday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the presence of a distinguished gathering of Masons, numbering upward of two hundred, all of whom are above the 17th degree. Besides the Masons of this community there were present a number from other jurisdictions, including Senators Teller and Dolph, Representatives Yoder, Hatch and Stewart, all of whom are of the 33d degree, and Representative McRae, of the 18th. The cathedral was draped in red and appropriate music was rendered by a choir of twenty male voices, led by Mr. Edwin S. Holmes and accompanied by Mr. Wm. E. Middleton on the organ. The ceremonial of the lights was conducted by the following officers of the chapter: George E. Corson, 32°, vice master of the chapter; William O. Roome, 33°, senior warden; James Lansburgh, 32°, junior warden; Alex. H. Holt, 32°, secretary; Thomas Somerville, 33°, treasurer.

WHAT WE CAN DO FOR INDIA.

BY REV. C. B. WARD.

SECUNDERABAD, Deccan, India.

Many a day has past since I wrote a letter for the Cynosure. But week by week it has come to us with its budget of reform news. We wage war on heathenism original, and you on heathenism revised, or recast. The last year's disclosures of secret societyism and Mormonism begin to give a better chance for the people to understand the innate wickedness of secret systems. Everything that more clearly brings out the solemn fact that secretism is not made bad by bad men in it, but is in itself essentially evil, is a public boon. Many would not see this if they could avoid it. Oathbound secrecy is a violation of the letter and spirit of God's Word.

As we have had occasion to say in your columns before, little anti-secrecy work is done in India, just such as already overburdened hands can do, and thus lodgeism goes almost unrebuked in the empire. The questioner of the system is smiled at as a crank. Yet some good seed sowing has been done, and the emergent need of the hour is to sow down the land with sound literature on the subject, and intersperse a little practical theology on the subject into periodicals open to such work. A public opinion is all to be created yet on this subject. While we are doing missionary work for the evangelizing of the heathen, it ought to be that we should so give them the Gospel that no new chains be forged upon them. Not a few missionaries in India are Masons, and this, coupled with the fact that many prominent officials and public men are the same, produces an almost unrestrainable curiosity among even ordinarily-educated natives to taste the sweet of this stolen water. As matters are at present many, uninformed of the true character of Masonry, enter in unwarned. We can easily foresee that this evil will yet become a great one in the Christian church of India. Worldly entanglements will compromise the usefulness of ministers, and the character of their work will be so modified by recognizing, as "brethren," heathen and Mahomedans in secret lodges, their effectiveness will depart. For the Lord doth not brook Jehoshaphat yoking up with Ahab.

In so far as the Lord giveth us help, we mean to do all we can for him by way of evangelizing among the heathen, but free (of set and clearly defined purpose) of all these modern devices and urses. We feel it our duty to lift up our voices against the evils of secrecy, against its essentially evil character and unholy associations, before all the people we can in India.

We know the Cynosure readers will understand well this line of work is not popular. They will not accuse us of self-seeking in the choice of such a course. Indeed, we would not open our mouths on the subject of secrecy did we not, deep in our conscience, realize silence as treasonable. Sometimes we wish and pray some servant of God could see the need of India's growing church (perhaps the increase of Christians will never again be less than 5,000 to 10,000 a year) and set aside $25,000 for a publishing and depot agency in Bombay or Madras. One-sixth of the globe in India if we count the souls. What a field for money and workers!

We are not sure we would confine the work for India to anti-secrecy. Anti-Romanism and anti-liquor and anti-worldliness should not be left out. Oh, what a field! And at present nobody in India who can jeopardize their reputations and work by taking up these unpopular lines. It must be done for the Lord's sake by those who have already sacrificed all for Christ and have no more to lose. There are often such in India, and many in grand America. Shall not America help us? We feel, too, that Cynosure friends should undertake a little work in India and help us in our general missionary work. Our hands are more than full, day and night. We gladly give our service, soul and body, to God, without any guarantee of support or charge upon any society. Some thus engaged have means of their own. Others earn as they go, in part or wholly. We have done this for ten years past. Others depend on God alone in prayer, and go wholly into direct soul-saving work. We take the middle course, believing we have the Bible warrant in Paul's example. We have four needs, any one of which would put us under but for the promise of God:

1. Reals 5,000 ($2,500) capital required for the restoration of tanks and waterways of the village recently secured here for our Christian colony.
2. Reals 2,000 ($800) for permanent Eurasian Orphan Cottages.
3. Reals 2,000 ($800) for permanent Mission House.
4. Manna for the laborers (salaries Scriptural).

Over ten years we have been pilgrims with no abiding home. We number now nearly 100 souls, and have lived in five different districts of the Nizam's Dominions, unable to get a permanent house. God has at last been good in giving us about 2,000 acres of tillable and pasturable land and forest. It is a veritable Canaan to us all. All this property is the Lord's for unsubsidized work. We do not think so much money should be spent on converts. But they should be given a chance to help themselves. Our Christians support themselves, and their tithes cover the cost of a preacher to the heathen. We want to restore the village and make it the base of supply for a large force of Christian workers, and a field for Christian work, for we shall soon have 1,000 souls in our village. We hope Cynosure readers will take a share in this good work. Address us direct, or at Cynosure office.

MORAL VS. MATERIAL FORCE.

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

It is a trite saying that "the pen is mightier than the sword." It is only so when it demands conformity to the moral sense of mankind. A good illustration is in the influence which the recent discussion, by the press and on the platform, of the Siberian exile system, has had on the government of Russia. Remote, absolute and despotism, with little direct intercourse with us as a people, yet her rulers are not impervious to the power of enlightened public conviction, and they have shown that they need some stronger defences than great armies and navies. Whether Russia will modify her policy in the treatment of those who fall under her displeasure remains to be seen, but surely it is something to know that she feels the universal rebuke.

Nor is this the only instance of the power of public conviction. The slave trade, in which nearly or quite all of the maritime nations of Europe were engaged, and which we expressly tolerated until 1808, went down under the force of public condemnation. This led to emancipa-tion in the British West Indies. Not without a struggle did the vast money power yield to this demand, but when the House of Commons saw a petition signed by more than three millions of people, demanding it in the name of God and universal humanity, they could do no other than obey. This was equally true of the repeal of the "corn laws" and of every vital reform that has been carried out in that or any other Christian land.

It is remarkable, too, that the abolition of slavery in the British West Indies gave an impulse to the anti-slavery movement that, in spite of all opposing influences, never stopped till legalized servitude, except as a penalty for crime, was swept from every nation in Christendom. It is one of the most hopeful signs of human progress that this anti-slavery reform has not stopped and does not content itself with a mere negative virtue. The Christian world has begun to concern itself with the rights of all men everywhere. The cruelties of the slave trade in Eastern and Central Africa have arrested the attention of the world, and the demand of humanity is that it shall cease.

At the recent International Conference, all the governments of Europe, except that of Turkey, united in their purpose to seek its suppression. Turkey, too, must soon yield to the same moral pressure or she will fall before it. Within the last fifty years there has been a vast increase in general education and in the rapid diffusion of knowledge. The moral sense of mankind has also been largely developed, and so has the means of concentrating its power on any particular object. While the cost of war has enormously increased, the cost of public enlightenment has greatly diminished. Instead of going to war for the redress of international difficulties, the world is beginning to find that it is so far cheaper, and infinitely better, to put them into the focus of public observation and turn on the light.

But there are other enormities that are nearer home than those of Siberia on which the moral power of mankind ought to be brought to bear. Take for example the plan of leasing convicts, as practiced in most of our Southern States. Not many months since the Grand Jury of Hind county, Miss., made a presentment showing that these convicts were in many instances literally murdered, and in all cases treated with shameful cruelty. A similar state of slow torture, ending often in death, was found to prevail among the convicts of Georgia and other States. These things are inevitable under the "lease system," and until it is abolished we have small occasion to grow indignant over Russian cruelties.

Notice, too, the almost universal practice of lynching Negroes that are suspected of crime. Scarcely a day transpires that does not bring news of some such enormity. Four dead Negroes found in the woods near Birmingham, Ala., is the last item,—all shot, and one with his head chopped off. No trace of the murderers. No class of criminals would be more certainly punished if found guilty than colored criminals, yet a large share of those charged with crime have no chance of trial. They are simply murdered. Within the last few months several unoffending Negroes were shot and hung near New Iberia, La. One was hung on the bridge over the bayou that runs through the city, and others were whipped and driven from their homes. An excellent Christian minister, Rev. Byron Gunner, whom the mayor of the city certifies to be a law-abiding citizen, was forced to leave there, and threatened with immediate death if he dared to return. The officers of the law are well aware of the facts. Some of them are implicated in the crimes, but the law is powerless to punish the criminals. The better citizens are overawed by the mob.

This is but a specimen of what is taking place in other parts of the South. Good citizens deplore it, but the lawless element prevails. The increased education and intelligence of the Negro, instead of commending him to his white fellow citizen, has made him more and more an object of hatred by the low element among the white race, and they (with the cognizance of the politicians) manage to deprive him not only of his political, but of most of his civil rights. There is not a small number of people in some of our States who regard murder—especially of Negroes and Chinamen—as merely a pleasant pastime.

We would abate nothing from the horror with which the Christian world regards the exile system of Siberia. We would, if it were possible, greatly intensify the abhorrence of the raids of the slave-hunting Arabs in Central Africa, but we demand in the name of humanity and Christian civilization that American lawlessness shall cease, that there shall be no more oppression and cruelty under the forms of law, that the Negro shall have all his rights, civil and political, and that his mental and moral weakness shall not be made the means for his oppression, but rather the reason why he should have our sympathy and our help.

There are all over the South multitudes of Christian people who know that the Negro can never be deported, that he can never be remanded to slavery, that his citizenship can never be legally taken away, and that the only way to secure unity and peace is to recognize him as our neighbor and love him as such. When we cast the beam out of our own eye, we shall see clearly to pluck the mote from our neighbor's eye.

Berea, Ky.

ALL IS NOT GOLD THAT GLITTERS.

BY ELDER B. WILLIAMS.

The old folks who lived in western New York in '26 and '28 at the time of the Morgan murder have watched and studied the system of Freemasonry, and have found that its adherents claim by words and actions that it is better than, and above, the state or church. Thereby they are disloyal to both. We have heard the same thing reiterated time after time, and very recently a man belonging to the lodge remarked to me, "The lodge is better than the church." He claims that by putting money into the church you will get nothing back, but by putting it into the lodge you can get help and be kept from the penitentiary or gallows if you ever get into a scrape. And further, if you died you would be voted into the "Grand Lodge above."

A Royal Arch companion has also remarked to me that there is no room for Christ in their lodge. If they will not admit Christ and women to their lodge here, they undoubtedly will not admit them to the "Grand Lodge above," and as a necessary result of this, how can they expect Christ to admit them?

To show the "disloyalty" of the lodge to the state, I would cite a case or two which has come under my own observation. Some years since I was summoned to sit on a jury in the United States court in Chicago, Judge Drummond being on the bench. A man was charged with fraud. The jury was convinced that he was guilty, but two of them refused to bring in such a verdict because they and the accused were high Masons. Thus they saved this man from the penitentiary, by violating their oath to the state and to God.

Another case was in Warren, Ill. A man was brought before the court: the magistrate, the accused and the witness all being Masons. The witness before testifying took the oath to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. But when questioned on a certain point which the court sustained as proper, refused to say anything; replying to the magistrate, "I have received this on the square and therefore have no right to tell." The case proceeded without any more questioning.

These are specimens of the principle and character of the thousands that drink wine out of human skulls and invoke double damnation on their souls if they should reveal the secrets of their dark order. These are the 20,000 that tramped the streets of Washington not long since with their toggery, feathers, caps and plumes; blowing their horns, beating their drums, to get the gaping crowd to look at them as though they were some superior beings, of some royal blood; the 20,000 who were received in Washington with decorated streets and open arms as if some royal retinue of some foreign potentate.

Stop here for the moment and inquire, where are their wives? You see or hear nothing of them. Why not bring them out decked with feathers, plumes, ribbons and other toggery; with the blast of trumpets and the rattle of drums so that the crowd could see them? Why not? Because they are at home tending the babies, for they are yet in darkness, weakness and ignorance, 'having been wandering amid the errors and being covered over with the pollutions of the outer world, not having received Masonic new birth; the veil not being withdrawn that screens the divine truth from their uninitiated sight." Therefore, they are not allowed to enter the Masonic temple, or revel for a week on the good things and feast on the fresh fruit and wine from California. It seems to me that the devil would be ashamed of such extremely and supremely ridiculous balderdash; and yet the capital of our nation receives it as pure coin.

The Bible teaches us that "As we sow, so shall we reap." Although these things are so well known, yet our churches and ministers are like dumb dogs that cannot even bark. While the devil is leading their flocks of precious souls for whom Christ died, they keep silent. With never a word from these ministers and churches of warning, what, "O what will the harvest be!"

SOME SOCIAL PROBLEMS.

BY REV. A. B. CURTIS.

There is an old tradition that the early inhabitants of Greece lived upon roots and nuts. The ancestors of every nation now in existence were, according to our earliest knowledge of them, semi-barbarous tribes. The Germans, with whom we become acquainted in Cæsar's Commentaries, could neither read nor write. Their religion was crude and their moral sense was extremely undeveloped. They were subject to all manner of tyranny. The early English were also a race of barbarians in the days of Cæsar. We can trace the history of Cæsar's Romans back to the days when property was acquired, not by purchase, but by theft; and when the marriage relation was not yet an established social order. The history of Greece begins in much the same way as Rome. Those Greek legends that teach that the gods showed them the necessity of marriage seem to indicate that the Greeks had a vague recollection of the days when marriage was wholly unknown. And if marriage was unknown, there was of course no society at all. But the races were like the wild horses upon the plains. Each one held the store of food in common with all the other members of the tribe. Whether the nations of Asia also sprang out of primitive barbarisms we have less evidence to determine. By common consent these are older races. The philologist tells us that our Greek, Latin, German and English are sister languages of the ancient Sanskrit; and the beginnings of that language and the people that perfected it are buried in the mystery of a forgotten past. If we turn to the Bible account, we will receive but little aid in determining the age of those ancient peoples,—the Chaldeans, the Persians and the Chinese. The evidence seems to point to the fact that the oldest written language is the Phœnician. But the Phœnicians have left us no literature. They lived, however, on the coasts of Palestine, and doubtless spoke a language akin to the Hebrew, for Queen Dido of Carthage and King David of Israel are from a common Semitic root, meaning "to love." Hannibal was a man who enjoyed the favor of Baal, and so on. But the Phœnicians give no traces of being acquainted with Israel's Jehovah. Baal was their god. And Baal to the Hebrew was an idol, though an idol often longed for.

In the history of the Hebrew nation, which is fuller than any other of the Semitic peoples, we see many evidences of a decided advance upon the social order in existence at the dawn of history. In Israelitish story the history of the post-deluvian world begins with the resting of the ark on Mount Ararat. Noah was a pure-minded man, but his sons were not like him. And from that time on matters went from bad to worse. "Abraham believed God and it was imputed unto him for righteousness." He was called out of Ur of the Chaldees, and began the building of a nation that should remember and worship Elo Shaddai. Abraham lives a life of many successes and reverses, but his faith in God never wavers. But the Ten Commandments were not yet written. The beautiful "worship of Jehovah," introduced by Moses, was yet to be. To be sure, in the days of Noah's favorite son "men began to call upon the name of Jehovah," but as for any set and regular forms of popular and public worship they were the products of a more advanced civilization, and a more comprehensive grasp of spiritual and moral truth. No doubt previous to the writing of the commandments they were the far-off ideal of many of the nobler spirits among the patriarchs. But as for their having been in any way obeyed previous to the age of Moses by the mass of the people, the evidence is directly to the contrary. And subsequent to the "giving of the law" we notice many lapses into idolatry, which stain almost every chapter of the Biblical record. I emphasize this fact because the purity of the marriage relation is the ground, the sine qua non, of all social reform. In the days that followed the slowly fading tones of the prophet Malachi there seems to have been no "open vision," no great prophet, historian or poet, but there was no lack of lesser lights and idolatries such as flourished in the days of Ahab were a thing of the past. Judah remained faithful to the worship of Jehovah; and among the masses there were great gains for morality on every hand. The home life had made marvelous strides since the days when an Abraham could have his concubines and a Solomon his harem. But still there was room for advance.

Jesus came and placed the moral life upon an entirely new basis.

"All's law, yet all's love."

He said unto the wisest and best of his own times, "Ye have heard that it hath been said, Thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, love your enemies." Here is a mighty advance. But if we compare the first Christian century with our own, we shall find other advances just as wonderful, for as Jesus said again, "Greater works than these shall ye do because I go unto my Father." Let us trace this advance a little more in detail.

WORDS OF GREETING.

Bro. W. B. Stoddard, Eastern Agent of the N. C. A. at Washington, D. C., was called to the platform of Lincoln Music Hall, in that city, April 3rd, and gave the following words of greeting to the National Reform Conference. The report is sent by Secretary M. A. Gault:

"I am sure, Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, I voice the feeling of all my associates of the National Christian Association when I say we are gratified to note the kindly regard your secretaries and representatives have ever had for us, and the attention they have given to the dissemination of truths especially advocated by us. Many of your officers have been ours. Indeed, so frequent have been our companionship that we have been regarded as belonging to the same family. We are but different wings of the great army contending for the rights of King Emanuel. We trust our friendly relations may ever continue, and that we may be of mutual help in the great work to which we are called.

"The coming of your body recalls to mind the gathering here of another body but a few months since. They professedly came on an errand similar to your own. But how different was their approach. They came not as the meek and gentle Nazarene, whose cause they professedly espoused, to appeal with arguments to the enlightened Christian conscience. Heralded by bands of music, with feathers in their caps and swords by their sides, they marched up and down our streets and avenues. The local papers recognizing the popular feeling of the hour, were filled with grandiloquent titles and advertisements of where the choicest liquors were to be obtained. Like the mob which came to take their professed Master, they were armed with swords and staves abundant. They were dined, and wine and danced until the plumed knights of the nether world might have well joined their revelry. And this was Christian Masonry: the only branch, we are told, that will allow a Christian man to participate without denying his only hope of salvation.

"Not with sound of drum and tramping host come the brethren and friends of this association. In the name of the King Eternal you have lifted your voices and unfurled your banner. You have not appealed to the groveling passions, but to the enlightened conscience of men. Not for self-glorification, but for his glory whose you are. You have drawn to your councils and placed upon your program many of the best minds of the nation. As I have listened to the reports of your devoted secretaries, and inspiring words of your speakers, my heart has been warmed with sympathy. After battling for an unpopular truth the reformer needs the strength and sympathy which comes with such conferences. Though the masses may not be present to applaud, he rejoices to know that others enjoy the sweet peace which comes with the performance of Christian duty.

"The opponents of Christ's kingship have varied means of attack. It seems strange that, after all that has been said from this platform of the earnest and uncompromising warfare the N. R. A. is waging against Catholicism, any should go out and say that they were in league with the papists. Yet judging the future by the past that will be done. Why, sir, there are in this city those—and not a few—who teach that the N. R. A., according to the prediction of Scripture, is in league with the popish beast, and that they are to unite in the torture of those who can not conscientiously keep the first day of the week as the Sabbath. I understand they would secularize everything political; have our laws based on what they call right and justice, without recognition of the only source of right and justice. They seem to have overlooked the fact that all the religious freedom they enjoy to-day comes from what little recognition of Christ and his law there is in our government. Should the government become thoroughly secular, as I understand them to desire; if there were no reading of the Book of books in our public schools; no incense of prayer arising to the King's throne from our public altars; should Christ and his law be completely excluded from our political life, then might they have some occasion to represent themselves as martyrs, unless they were completely given over to believe a lie. We trust that the friends (to many of whom we must accord sympathy) who have thus been misled, will see the fallacy of their position. We rejoice to see that you are answering the many fallacious arguments which are brought to bear against your work so well. Then, Mr. Chairman, permit me in behalf of the National Christian Association to congratulate you on the accomplishment of so much, and to express the wish that you may be enabled so to bring the truth to those in authority that the great work which you have undertaken for the Master may be speedily accomplished."

THE BIBLE IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Apart from its direct uses in teaching the greatest lessons of national and social ethics, in the most effective way, the Bible has an educational value which belongs to no other book, in its effect of elevating the whole tone of thought by bringing it into vital relations to that background of the infinite and the eternal, which is implied in the existence and the policy of the state no less than of the church. That the American state is an institution of a purely secular character, which dispenses with that background, is a very modern notion which has no sanction in the teachings of its greatest statesmen or its own practice.—Philadelphia American.

Wisconsin and Nevada are the only two States having constitutional provisions against sectarian instruction, but there has been much litigation on the subject in other States. In 1854 the Maine Supreme Court decided the matter against the recusant Catholics. In Massachusetts it was held that children in the public schools must listen to the reading of the Bible, but any child might be excused at the request of its parents. The famous Cincinnati case, which lasted from 1869 to 1872, was a question simply of the right of school boards to decide pro or con in the selection of the Bible as a text-book. The matter was once before the Supreme Court of Illinois, but was decided on a defect in the pleading. In Iowa it was held that there was no objection to Bible reading in public schools, as it is not religious instruction.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

The New York Mail and Express speaks of that wonderful pronouncement of the Wisconsin Supreme Court as to the "unconstitutionality" of the Bible in any building belonging to the public, as "the most infamous and alarming decision since the Dred Scott Decision elated the Slave Power and startled the North." And the Detroit Tribune, in a strong editorial, denies that the Bible is a "sectarian" book. All the sects, those to whom the Wisconsin Supreme Court refers and those not mentioned by it, use the Bible and insist that it contains their views. None of them, it declares, would utter a syllable of complaint, if the Bible were read in schools, reverently and without comment. "Sectarian" is defined by Webster to be "peculiar to a sect." But the Bible is peculiar to no sect. It is the common book of them all. "If there is one book above all others that is not sectarian, but is the common heritage of all, it would seem to be the Bible."—Advance.

NATIONAL REFORM AT WASHINGTON.

ON TRAIN, April 5, 1890.

The Washington National Reform Conference closed Thursday evening, April 3d, after seven sessions closely filled with addresses by some of the clearest thinkers in the country.

The Conference began Tuesday afternoon; a meeting of the Executive Committee was held in the forenoon. I reached Washington late Saturday night preceding. It was my first visit to the capital. Sabbath evening I filled an appointment made by Bro. W. B. Stoddard to preach in one of the Congregational churches. The same evening Bro. R. C. Wylie occupied another of the city pulpits. We were both kindly entertained by Bro. and Sister Stoddard, whose pleasant home on 4½ street is in the most central and convenient part of the city. Bro. Stoddard is steadily gaining a stronger foothold in the city. He takes the belt as canvasser for the Cynosure, putting it into new homes every day, and as a lecturer he is clear, earnest and convincing; in fact he is the right man in the right place. In a neat and appropriate address he extended the greetings of the N. C. A. to our National Reform Conference, and in response to his request several delegates were appointed from this Conference to the Conference of Churches opposed to secret societies soon to meet in Chicago.

We attended President Harrison's church Sabbath morning, and heard a good practical sermon by his pastor, Dr. Hamlin, on the text, "What lack I yet?" The sermon was preceded by a familiar hymn sung to "Ortonville," and the service closed with "Jesus, lover of my soul." The preacher, in a heart-searching manner, drew a picture of how near perfect one might be in mere outward morality, but if he was self-centered and had not made a cheerful surrender of all to Christ; if there was not self-abnegation, it would not stand the test. There were men, he said, who would buy heaven if the price was only money. Christ's reply aimed at the surrender of the will, and went below all morality. The President and Secretary Blaine sat in the same pew four seats from the front, and to the left of the middle aisle. There seemed to be no more notice taken of them than if they had been common citizens.

On the last day of our Conference a committee was appointed, led by Dr. Jonathan Edwards, to present the National Reform cause to President Harrison. About fifty of us accompanied the committee to the White House, where after passing up stairs, and through a number of rooms, we were ushered into Mr. Harrison's presence. He seemed somewhat confused in our august presence, and after shaking hands with us all around, and saying he was glad to see us, he conferred with Dr. Edwards in a low tone, telling him that he knew so little about the movement that he did not like to commit himself in any public address, but if we would commit to writing the central ideas of National Reform, and leave them with him, he would give them careful consideration at his leisure. Some of us knew that he had committed himself without hesitation in reference to Knight Templar conclaves, and to Cardinal Gibbons, and to the liquor oligarchy. Why, then, such hesitation in regard to an elder in the Presbyterian church taking his stand for Christ in American politics? We derived some comfort, however, from the fact that soon after our visit Dr. Scott, Mr. Harrison's father-in-law and a member of his household, came down to our Conference and was given a seat on the platform. It looked as though Mr. Harrison, after thinking the matter over, concluded that as he could not come to our Conference himself, he had better send a hand. Dr. Scott, who is in his ninetieth year, looks like a man of seventy. He was introduced to the Conference and made a brief address in which he said he was in full sympathy with the movement. Mr. Harrison's pastor made about a dozen announcements before the sermon on Sabbath, but did not announce our Conference, though he had been requested to do so. It was announced from very few of the pulpits of the city, and none of the pastors identified with the movement more than to slip into a back seat for a short time. No city on the continent, perhaps, was so uncongenial for such a convention. It may truly be said that the nearer you approach the head of our government the more hostility do you find to Christian politics. Most of the audience was from outside the city. Dr. McAllister's congregation, formerly Dr. A. M. Milligan's, sent the largest delegation. We never heard so many able addresses at one convention; in fact it was a continuous round of artillery, with not more than one or two pistol shots. M. A. GAULT.

THE MOUNTAIN REGIONS OF KENTUCKY.

CAMP NELSON, Ky., April 7, 1890.

What are known as the mountains of Kentucky are certainly not great elevations and not to be compared with the Blue Ridge in North Carolina or the White Mountains of New Hampshire. Nevertheless they cover a large part of the State and are distinctly mountainous. The remarkable fact is that the coal strata, which is very extensive, of fine quality, and in some places more than six feet thick, lies near the top of the mountains and crops out high up in the sides of the valleys. If this strata, as is supposed, was once a forest, and was submerged, it must since have been lifted up by some great internal convulsion.

At all events it constitutes a source of undeveloped wealth, so situated that its own weight would carry it far on the road to a market. As it is, farming and stock raising, to quite a limited extent, lumbering and the preparation of bark for tanning, constitute the legitimate business of the people. Their illegitimate business is the making of whisky and fruit brandies by moonshine. It must not be inferred that a majority, or even more than a fraction of the people, favor these violations of law. Several of these mountain counties, including Jackson and Rockcastle, are under local option; and while this has not suppressed drunkenness it has greatly diminished it and tended to promote a much better state of society. Nearly the whole mountain region is poor and perhaps always will be, though locally there is considerable development. If there was a better education of the people and a higher tone of morals and religion, there would be doubtless more enterprise and more general prosperity. As it is, the outlook is not unfavorable.

The public school system, which was very slow in going into effect, is beginning to tell on the face of society. In some of these counties a majority of persons over thirty-five are illiterate, but of those under that age and over twelve there are few who cannot read. There are manifestly more papers and periodicals taken than there were some years since, and a greater interest in public affairs. Lawlessness and violence, though still prevalent in some sections has disappeared in others.

In Rockcastle county John G. Fee was, thirty-odd years ago, repeatedly mobbed. As late as four years ago there were repeated lynchings and some unoffending persons were killed. But the law-abiding were aroused and drove out the lawless element. Now, all seems as orderly and quiet as in other parts of the State. I have recently preached five times in this county to most attentive congregations and was glad to find some most excellent Christians.

Nevertheless I saw much that I deplored. Houses and farms are run down. There is too much of the disposition to be content with such things as they have. Roads run along the beds of streams and often become quite impassable. I saw, too, gathered at the little railroad station, quite a company of poorly-clad men (among whom it would have been impossible to have raised five dollars for any educational or religious enterprise) making up considerable sums to buy tickets in the Louisiana Lottery. Verily, "fools and their pence are soon parted."

The colored people who are rarely found in the mountain region, have their faults and they are often grievous, but so far as giving is concerned they do vastly better than these mountain people; and this is mainly because of difference in training. Their churches have been of necessity self-supporting, and the people have been largely those working for wages, who generally have some ready money to give, and while they have anything they literally "take no thought for the morrow." Their folly is manifested in thinking they will be amply provided for if they join a secret society, a delusion not worse than that of expecting to get rich by buying lottery tickets.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

A trite truth—The new paper for women—A Masonic celebration of Easter—A marvelous story related in a Boston Catholic church—Does high license pay?

"The error of a moment is often the sorrow of a life." This is one of the philosophical nuggets which are constantly going the rounds of the press, packed so full of wit and wisdom that one gets a new insight into the capacity of our English tongue to put much in little. Not necessarily a sin, but just an error, a mistake, a slip by the way. Any life that has failed to set for itself a high standard in the beginning must be largely made up of vain regrets; so reforms that accomplish much will aim to prevent these early mistakes as far as possible, although as a rule I believe they generally begin from the least hopeful end until they learn better. It took the W. C. T. U. with its mother's heart to see that drunkards are made by the first fatal sip taken in ignorance and inexperience; and scientific temperance instruction is only an outgrowth of the idea that they must be wise for their loved ones, so often destroyed for "lack of knowledge" on the part of teachers and instructors. How many a young man has joined the Masonic lodge to find his momentary "error" indeed "the sorrow" of a lifetime. The general ignorance of women on this subject is often amusing, but it is also deplorable. The chief aim of our little paper, the Home Guard, which is just out, is to qualify earnest, thinking women to be instructors on this subject,—first of all to their children, and then, as occasion may arise, to their husbands and grown-up sons. It is neatly got up, and reflects much credit both on publisher and printer. Single copies per year are only 15 cents, while ten copies per month will be sent to one address per year for one dollar. Where is there an anti-secret woman who loves the cause, and cannot spare at least this trifling sum annually to enlighten ten of her sisters on this subject, and save them perhaps many a heartache, if not something worse. Women of the N. C. A., give this first independent venture of woman in the warfare against the lodge your hearty and generous support.

Granted woman's alleged incapacity to learn Masonic secrets, the question does not hinge on the nature of those secrets any more than the truth of Christianity rests on the basis of miracles. Women need to be instructed to think on this subject more logically than they do; to see that it is the fact of having secrets at all, and being perpetually sworn to conceal them that makes the sin and works the mischief. I have noticed that the argument which a female defendant of the lodge generally has recourse to is the one of charity. "They take care of the widows and orphans, and they do so much good, you know." A few statistics which shall punch this air bubble of lodge benevolence, and show these good sisters that the churches which they so largely support are really doing all the world's charitable work that is worth speaking of; a little insight into lodge mysteries, and the relation of these secret shrines to Christianity and temperance; all these the Home Guard proposes to offer them. Send in the funds, sisters, and let us have as many copies printed as possible. Let faith and works join hands together.

Easter was celebrated in the city churches with the usual ceremonies more or less elaborate—that is to say, more or less savoring of Rome. What would good Governor Bradford have said to it all?—the anniversary of whose birth, by the way, occurred last Saturday, April 5, just 332 years ago. And particularly what would he say to a Masonic celebration of Easter, such as the Worcester Daily Times—which is doing grand service for the cause of truth—reports as being held by Lawrence Chapter Rose Croix of that city, with the addition to the exercises of a sermon by Rev. J. F. Lovering, Worcester's Masonic pastor? What further need of proof that Masonry is a religious institution with a strongly Roman bias?

Speaking of Rome, the British American tells a story actually related in a sermon in one of the Catholic churches of Boston on a recent Sunday. It sounds rather odd, taking into consideration Boston culture, and also that this is the nineteenth century. A certain doubting Thomas who had buried his father, asked the priest if he was sure his parent's soul was in purgatory, refusing, until he could have authentic proof that it was so, to pay for any masses to be said for his release. This proof the priest proceeded to give by saying something in Latin, which was followed by a noise as of clanking chains which seemed to proceed from the cellar. But doubting Thomas refused to believe his father was there unless he could see him, or at least hear him speak. The priest then called the deceased by name, asking him "if he was there." Receiving an affirmative reply, he further asked, "Where are you?" to which came the answer, "I am in purgatory." And at the same time a blue smoke oozed through the seams of the floor, with a peculiar sulphurous odor, as still further proof of the priest's assurance to the young man that the spirit of his father was just beneath the floor, held fast in the clutches of his Satanic Majesty. That an audience could be found in any American city, let alone Boston, to swallow such a hobgoblin tale, is a specimen of what Rome will do when she gets the matter of education into her own hands.

A late article in the Christian Commonwealth draws attention to the number and variety of the burning questions which are biding their time to spring on the British public, held in abeyance meanwhile by the Irish question and the Parnell Commission, which drag their slow length along, much as the tariff issue in our own Congress. Perhaps the time will come when even European politicians will have something to talk of besides the everlasting "war-cloud," for it certainly looks as if the nations of the world were going to have enough to occupy their attention within their own borders, unless indeed their governments choose war as a means of turning away the public attention from issues they are unwilling or unable to meet.

There is a common saying that "figures will not lie." But they can certainly be very misleading if not correctly balanced. For instance, Auditor Ladd's Report on the High License experiment in Massachusetts gives much joy to the papers which advocate that measure, as it shows that there were 2,571 fewer licenses granted this year, while $526,504 more money was received in revenue. But these figures do not tell the story. Was there any less liquor drank, and was that sold in these high license saloons any less murderous to body and soul than that sold elsewhere? Is there not, on the contrary, a greater temptation to use all manner of poisonous adulterants where such enormous fees have to be paid, and does not a monopoly which crushes out the smaller dealers make a larger and better business for the men that can pay them. Gentlemen, whatever your party, Republican or Democrat, before you exult over the increase of blood money that goes into your State coffers, see that you have the columns correctly balanced.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

The shooting of John Rusk, of Westchester, Pa., by Thomas Hart, on Dec. 18, after the former had been joking with him, reveals the workings of secret bands of oath-bound conspirators. This time it is the Ancient Order of Hibernians, not the Clan-na-Gael. It turns out that Hart was a member of the Hibernians. After the shooting, although another coroner had been telegraphed for, a coroner who is a member of the same society, and six jurymen, and two doctors, all Hibernians, except one of the doctors, who was the friend of the other, held an inquest, and regardless of the testimony of the only person who saw the shooting, they declared that death was the result of acute congestion and adema of the lungs, and exonerated Thomas Hart. With a certificate to this effect the coroner went to White Plains and demanded the release of Hart, but the sheriff refused, and the district attorney took up the case, had a second autopsy by different doctors, who rendered a verdict that death resulted from peritonitis caused by a gun-shot wound. The case will come before the grand jury in February, but the Hibernians try to make people believe that nothing will come of it.—Christian Nation.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

A GENUINE CHARITY IN BOSTON.

309 TREMONT ST., BOSTON, Mass., }
April 7, 1890. }

Among the beneficiary institutions of this city Bethany Mission ranks among the younger but most efficient in its line of work. It is evidently a child of the Holy Spirit, through the willing agency of Miss M. L. Richards, whose faith and works have made it what it is. Others have co-operated nobly, but to her persistent prayers and efforts is due more largely than any one else the success which has attended this effort to "rescue the perishing." While occupied and alone in her room she received her calling and baptism for the work, and with forty cents in her pocket she started out on her mission of mercy.

In the two years of her labors appear many and wonderful interpositions of Providence, shielding her from the violence of enemies and supplying every needed grace and gift. Her first room was on Hanover street over a saloon and surrounded by gambling dens and places of infamy. Her presence and work soon became an offence to those about her, and at one time when alone in her mission room she was confronted by some thirty rough men, who came with the avowed purpose of ejecting her from the premises. She met them calmly but fearlessly, and with the sword of the Spirit in hand so effectually, that many wept and some knelt with her in prayer before leaving her the victor "in the name of the Lord."

Among the results reported at the second anniversary held in Park Street church, March 20th last, there were five rum-sellers who had given up their hellish business and accepted Christ, over 2,000 who had asked for the prayers of Christians, and some 1,600 hopeful conversions. A midnight brigade visit dance halls and saloons and hold prayer meetings in these dens of infamy, winning some from among the many to a better life.

It has been my good fortune to attend occasionally and speak in this mission, and there is no restriction on liberty of speech against the lodge, as against other devices of the devil. I am confident that more has been done in Bethany Mission by this devoted Christian girl and her volunteer helpers to relieve the suffering, reform the fallen, rescue the perishing, and bring comfort and peace to homes and hearts in this city than by the 599 secret lodges, with all their wealth and boasted charities. J. P. STODDARD.

FROM WASHINGTON TO NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, N. Y., April 10, 1890.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—It was my privilege last week to attend the annual meeting of the National Reform Association held in Washington, D. C. Pressing duties prevented a report at that time as I intended.

While for lack of means there had not been as many district secretaries employed during the past as during some previous years, yet the reports of those who had been at work showed great activity. Secretary Foster had given over one hundred address during the year and Secretary Gault more than one hundred and fifty. Secretary Foster had presented their cause in thirty colleges and seminaries. Sharp, pithy addresses followed one after another till the mind was weary of comprehension. The Conference was a rare intellectual treat, but, as is usual at reform conventions, the masses were not there to hear. We are forcibly reminded on such occasions that the world and some church members are still crying, Give us Barrabas!

I addressed audiences in the colored Presbyterian and Baptist churches before leaving Washington, having an aggregate attendance of about seven hundred. Respectful attention was given, though some of the Masons were much stirred, and reported, as is common, that I had misrepresented them, but failed to specify wherein, as is also common. I am promised another hearing in the Baptist church on my return. My time in this city has thus far been occupied in getting things in battle array. The friends interviewed generally express pleasure that an effort is to be made here to enlighten those in darkness. Of the dozen or more pastors visited all agreed to do what they could to further our cause. The names of over one hundred leading men in various congregations have been given by pastors that I may further enlist them in our work. It is my purpose to remain here some weeks. Any in this section desiring work at this time can address me 247 W. 36th St., New York. W. B. STODDARD.

FROM WESTERN ILLINOIS.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—After speaking at Hopewell, Bethel and Gilchrist, I visited Viola, Aledo, Alpha, Alexis, Gerlaw, Monmouth, Roseville, Abingdon, Galesburg and Little York. I had hoped to get in some lectures at Monmouth, but I found them engaged in earnest prohibition work. The saloon must be kept out of Monmouth. The city election occurs the 15th of April. Lecturers from abroad were employed who were speaking for prohibition every night and Sabbath afternoon. These meetings were begun two weeks before the election and were to be continued until the final contest with ballots.

I have been working for the coming conference in Chicago, and while thus engaged have secured one hundred and fifty-five short time subscriptions for the Cynosure. I would gladly have done better, but must be content with doing what I could. Much more might have been done in the territory gone over if I had put in more time. But I hasten forward that I may be at Chicago before April 22. C. F. HAWLEY.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE GODS OF GREECE AND THE GOD OF CHRISTIANS.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The Chicago Evening Journal has a column by David Swing which endorses the views of the lecture by a Mr. Dyer, but which must be felt by many believers to be contrary to, and subversive of, the plainest teachings in the Holy Scriptures. For surely if anything is condemned in the Scriptures, idolatry is pre-eminently so. "Hear, oh Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord," was the divine command; and the 3,000 slain at Sinai, because of the worship of the golden calf, forever stamps as utterly preposterous all such assumptions as the "unity of all religious symbols" and "of religions." Yet this is the purport of the article referred to, in which it is affirmed that our American churches ("temples" is the word used) are the "logical successors" of the ancient heathen temples. If the lodges of the pretentious "hand-maid of religion" had been intended instead of churches, there need have been no question raised, for she is the "logical successor" of the ancient sun-worship, and professes to tolerate all religions that bow to her authority.

The article says: "Christianity is not wholly of Hebrew ancestry. It was not possible to exclude the influence of surrounding forms of belief and worship." "Even Solomon fell a victim to the anti-Hebrew theology." "Christ established a bread feast and wine feast." But this bread and wine represents his agony and death for our sins. Oh, how could Prof. Swing ignore these Gospel truths and misrepresent our Redeemer as thus: "He made more spiritual and realistic the great bread and wine offerings [of idolatry] which had prevailed for centuries before the altar of Demeter, the Greek divinity for fruitful fields... the Ceres of the Latins." "Thus bread and wine had become emblems of heaven's goodness to man, and were the more ready to be utilized in the Christian form of religious service." How could he more plainly deny that God speaks to us by the Son, who said, "No one cometh to the Father but by me."

But the next paragraph repudiates also the ordinance of Christian baptism, presenting it also as an adaptation from idolatry. Thus the professor treats both of these Gospel ordinances as if at best only an improvement upon, or development of, the other religions, and in proof of their unity in their symbols and character! Reader, read his words for yourself: "To the religion of Greece and Rome, to the Eleusinian mysteries, to the worship of Esculapius and Apollo, to the adoration of the Aphrodite, is due more of the fullness and comforting power of the church than many leaders have been willing to allow."

This closing paragraph endorses the preceding summary: "The unity of religions" is affirmed. The drift of the Greek worship was toward a deity of mercy and righteousness. This "was hurried forward by the peculiar power of Christ." "Yet the meeting houses or ruins in Delphos are related to the meeting houses in this new world. Our temples stand in a clearer light, but they are the logical successors of those in which the ancients prayed and sang."

Such is the conclusion. Behold then and admire, ye American Christians, your idolatrous predecessors! May we not as truly regard our nation as the descendants, etc., of the native tribes of this continent? For men who profess to be believers in the Lord Jesus Christ of the New Testament to class his religion and ordinances with those of the ancient false worships reminds us that the seven churches of Asia had many members upon whom the severest condemnation is recorded. The Balaams and Jezebels and Nicolaitanes should be expelled from every church of Christ—not flattered by false teachers with the idea that these characters are serviceable to any god, but utterly condemned by the God and Father of our Lord and Saviour. Churches need to be purified from false worships and inventions and traditions of men in order to be "one body" under the "one head." Then watchfully march onward, Col. 2: 8, under the banners of the great Captain of Salvation as one army for the salvation of the world.

A SCOT.

CAN THESE THINGS BE SO?

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I come to you as an inquirer. I am a sort of doubting Thomas. Will you give me some light? I have here before me a little book entitled, "Freemasonry Illustrated." It professes to give "a complete exposition of the first seven Masonic degrees." Jacob O. Doesburg is the author of this book, and President Blanchard of Wheaton College gives it his endorsement.

The more I have looked through this little book the more puzzled have I become, and the more amazed. The inquiry not once nor twice has come up, Is this Freemasonry? Can the things here set forth be true?

I have known not a few very respectable and sensible men who were Masons. I have known some who were doubtless good Christian men, who were said to be Masons. Now am I to believe that these men have taken the oaths and passed through the ceremonies which I find revealed in this little book? I tell you I am slow to believe that respectable men, Christian men, can take these oaths and go through these ceremonies which seem to me so horrid and senseless—yes, worse than senseless. For it is worse than senseless to go through forms of prayer from which the name of our divine Mediator has been studiously omitted. It is worse than senseless to take the Word of God and turn it to such uses as we find here. It is nothing short of solemn mockery, blasphemy and horrid wickedness. How dare any of us approach God except through the name of Jesus Christ! How dare any of us take the solemn words of the great "I AM," and use them in ceremonies to their utter perversion: for if there is not a horrid perversion of Scripture all the way along in the rites as given in this book, then I confess my utter inability to understand what a perversion of Scripture is.

It is hard enough to believe that men of good sense will submit to be hoodwinked, dragged about by the cable-tow, stumbled over chairs, benches and stoves, killed and laid out to stink, raised, etc., etc. It is hard enough to believe that men of good, sober sense will go into any sort of lodge and go through such silly, absurd and contemptible performances as these; but it is harder to believe that Christian men will not only go through all this, but will pray Christless prayers, take the name of the I AM in vain and use the solemn words of God in ways that are blasphemous and wicked.

Now, I come up with my inquiry. Is this book true?

This I have to say, if it is not true it ought to be suppressed and the truth in regard to it made known. If it turns out to be true then any good opinions which I have ever entertained of Freemasonry must vanish forever. Will you give me the light which I seek through the Cynosure?

INQUIRER.

TRACT-BURNERS IN WEST AFRICA.

MONROVIA, Liberia, West Africa, }
Feb. 27, 1890.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Your letter of Nov. 27, 1889, was duly received. The Cynosure is coming again, for which I am thankful. I have given a large number of the tracts to a Methodist brother, who promised to distribute them among ministers who will use them where they will do good. A young colored man in the mission is anxious to preach the Gospel, and also anxious to learn more concerning Masonry. He says he is a Mason. Tracts were given to him.

Not long ago, one of Bishop Taylor's missionaries, who is a Mason, was in the neighborhood where I am teaching, and I supplied him with tracts. He said that the secrets of Masonry have never been published.

Sometime ago a lady in Monrovia asked me for tracts, and when I went to Monrovia last month she was supplied. Her son-in-law is a Mason. The tracts were in her possession only a few hours when she received a call from the Judge of the Monthly Court, who is one of the leading Freemasons in the city. He had been informed, he said, that she had some papers on Masonry, and he would like to see them. After she handed them to him, he said they were his property, and carried them off. I have not learned to what extent they were distributed and read among the Freemasons, but word came to me that they were finally burned. There are American missionaries in Monrovia who I believe are opposed to secret societies, and perhaps would be glad to distribute your literature there if sent to them. They are Free Methodists. Respectfully yours,

(Miss) E. BEEKEN.

A TEACHER'S LIFE IN NEW ORLEANS.

NEW ORLEANS, La., April 3, 1890.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The past two months which I have spent in Straight University have been months of pleasure and profit, although not without some trials. Straight University is considered the best school in the South. There have been about six hundred pupils in attendance this year and many have been refused admission for want of accommodations. Another building is nearing completion which will increase the facilities next year.

The president seems to have his whole heart in the work and his life is a very busy one. The teachers are all Northern people, and while we do not mingle in Southern society, we are a pleasant family by ourselves.

As a class I find the colored people far ahead of what I had anticipated. Of course only the best class attends here. I have over fifty scholars in my room and many of them are as bright as one could wish to see anywhere. As a rule they are anxious to learn and grateful for assistance. I am helping in a mission Sabbath-school about four miles distant. Here you see specimens of poverty and ignorance which are truly pitiful. I go on Sabbath with two students who are earnest Christians, and they are doing patient, effectual work for the Master. I hope to find time to visit some among them and establish a prayer-meeting. There are three mission schools carried on by students. There is a grand opening here in every direction for Christian work but the laborers are comparatively very few.

This week is our spring vacation. Three days of it are to be spent by the State Ministerial Association which meets here. The session began yesterday and had a goodly representation of white and colored delegates. Last evening I listened to a very able sermon by Rev. C. S. Shattuck and an address by Rev. C. I. Scofield. The subject of the latter was "The Inspiration of the Scriptures." It was presented in a very convincing, Christian way.

While many have suffered from the overflow of the river, we have been very fortunate. There are some very alarming reports in regard to our safety, but I have no fears.

While New Orleans abounds in sites of historical character, I have had time to visit but few of them. Yesterday I visited the cemeteries, which truly seemed like cities of the dead. The tombs, many of them built to resemble houses, churches, or cathedrals, present a sight worth seeing. Many of them, I should judge, cost thousands of dollars. Among others I visited the tomb of the much lamented Jeff. Davis. One could very profitably spend some time in seeing the places of interest in this city. Very sincerely,

M. LOUISE STODDARD.

LITERATURE.

Vick's Illustrated Magazine, beside the usual amount of interesting reading on flowers, contains in the April number a lengthy article on "Cemeteries and Public Health," which refutes the dismal stories of graveyard pestilence. A plan for a neat and inexpensive house is contributed by an able architect. The department of Pleasant Gossip is even more entertaining than usual.

Bibbia for April opens with a scholarly article on the Peshito-Syriac Version of the Testament, which is followed by a list of proper names found in Genesis, with their derivation and meaning. Considerable space is given to the Epworth League of the Methodist church, and the balance of the book is given to plans of thorough and discriminating Bible study. It is a magazine of great value to Bible students.

Good Health comes to us from Battle Creek, Mich., full of interest. An illustrated article on Hindostan takes up the opening pages, which is followed by short talks about the body and how to take care of it. Dress is treated in an instructive way. Two articles are contributed on Social Purity. Dr. Kellogg speaks of a new danger from tobacco smoke. The editorial department is not the least important or interesting.

In the American Garden the frontispiece is a beautiful reproduction of an old etching—a vase of poppies. "The first article is by Charles Barnard, entitled 'Look Over the Fence.'" E. Williams, of New Jersey, answers the question, "What Grapes Shall I Plant?" Mrs. Fanyer contributes another of her charming letters. The department devoted to horticulture proper will be read with interest by all, while "They Say" is full of valuable information.

The Converted Catholic for April is full of interesting short sketches and letters from converts from Rome. It yet devotes over half of its pages to valuable contributed articles, such as "The Primacy of Peter," "The True Christ and the False," "The Church of Rome not the Church of Christ," and "The History of the Jesuits." Father O'Connor's thirtieth letter to Cardinal Gibbons is published. Also a biographical sketch, with a portrait, of Rev. Edward McGlynn, D.D., the deposed Catholic priest of New York, and extensive notes from "Life Inside the Church of Rome," the Nun of Kenmare's new book.

The April St. Nicholas contains the first of several important papers by E. J. Glave, one of Stanley's pioneer officers on the Congo. It is called "Six Years in the Wilds of Central Africa," and is so told as to vividly present the lights and shadows of the explorer's life. Both young and old readers will find what they are seeking: the former, facts and adventures; and the latter, information as to Stanley's methods and achievements. A novel and attractive paper is Miss Scidmore's "How to Use a Pair of Chopsticks." There are natural history papers by Ernest Thompson, and by Charles Frederick Holder; verses by Kate Cleary, Helen C. Walden, and Caroline Evans; and pictures without stint.

The Century for April is remarkable for the variety of its contents. Two of Mr. Cole's charming artistic engravings accompany a paper on Giovanni Bellini, by Mr. W. J. Stillman, in the series on Italian Old Masters. One of these engravings is printed as a frontispiece, and the conductors of the magazine claim that American wood-engraving has never before been put to such important use as in this series. Three timely articles are "The Latest Siberian Tragedy," by George Kennan, in which is given a new account of the outrage of Yakutsk; "Suggestions for the 'Next World's Fair,'" a practical and helpful paper, by Georges Berger, Director of the French Exposition; and "The Slave-Trade in the Congo Basin," by E. J. Glave, one of Stanley's pioneer officers, with text and pictures from life during Mr. Glave's residence of twenty months among the natives. Three articles of special interest are "An Artist's Letters from Japan," by John La Farge, with illustrations beautifully engraved by Mursh, Kingsley and Whitney; "The Serpent Mound of Ohio," by Prof. F. W. Putnam, of the Peabody Museum, Cambridge, Mass., an exhaustive treatment of the facts and archaeological significance of these remains; and "The Old Poetic Guild in Ireland," a special study by Charles de Kay, with illustrations by Alexander and Bacher. The central West comes in for attention in "The Non-Irrigable Lands of the Arid Region," by Major Powell, Director of the U. S. Geological Survey; and "The Shoshone Falls," by Captain John Codman, with two beautiful illustrations. There is a short literary essay by Col. T. W. Higginson, and a curious special account from Captain Charles Bryant of his experience "In the Fur-Seal Islands," Alaska, Captain Bryant having instituted the present method of catching these seals. An article in the series of Present-Day Papers is contributed by Prof. Richard T. Ely, under the title of "A Program for Labor Reform," which is a very complete, though not an elaborate review of the whole labor system.

RAILROAD RATES TO THE CONFERENCE.

To every friend who will attend the April meeting:—If you think that you may possibly attend the Conference on April 22 and 23, you ought to inquire of your railroad station agent whether he has on hand the blank receipts, which will show that you have paid your full fare to Chicago, and hence are entitled to the return at one-third rate. It would be better to inquire AT ONCE of your agent, so that if he has no blanks he may get them. No reduction will be given by the railroads unless you have this certificate. If you are on some little branch railroad there is all the greater necessity for attending to this matter at once.

HOTEL RATES.

Among those who have already engaged hotel rooms for April 22 and 23, during the Conference, are the well-known names of C. C. Foote, Detroit, Mich., Rev. John Stahl, Augusta, Ill., and Rev. Dr. Wardner, of Milton Junction, Wis. Some who have written for rooms wish them near the ground, and near the hall where the convention is to be held, and for 50 cents.

It may be sufficient to say that the above requirements cannot be filled except at the rate of one, one and a half and two dollars per day. If one wishes to be near the hall, and can climb three or four pairs of stairs, rooms can be had for 50 and 75 cents per day.

The Cynosure office is about one mile from the First M. E. church, where the Conference is to be held. Near this office is Columbia Hotel, 238 West Madison street, where good rooms can be had for men only for 25 cents to 50 cents per day. Street cars pass this place direct from the Conference hall.

THIS IS THE LAST PAPER which will be mailed before the Chicago conference meets on Tuesday afternoon next. We urge again that no light considerations be allowed to keep any one away from this important gathering. The speakers are able; the subjects discussed are of the utmost importance to our American churches as well as to the Government; and considerable delegations are already promised. The Free Methodist conferences have chosen delegates, as have several classes of the Reformed church, the National Reform Association, and other bodies. Numerous local churches will be represented. Let there be such an host come up to this meeting as used to assemble when the trumpet was blown among Judean hills to rouse the people against the invasions of heathenism. With such an invasion are we now struggling. God give us a victory like Gideon's.

ARE THE HOLY DEAD IMMEDIATELY HAPPY?

The Bible furnishes abundant proof that they are. The Jews, who are a monument as well as a people, are Abraham's children, visible and tangible. And Paul, speaking in the name and by the authority of Christ, says all who are in Christ are Abraham's children and heirs of God. And the Saviour says that Abraham, Isaac and Jacob were alive in Moses' day, as a proof that the dead arise, Mark 12: 26; and in Luke 13: 28, he speaks of those patriarchs as with the prophets "in the kingdom of heaven." Enoch and Elijah went into heaven without death, and so needed no resurrection. And Moses and Elias were communing with Christ in glory ages after their death. Indeed, the inhabitants of the unseen world appear, from the first verse of Genesis to the last of Revelation, mingling in the affairs of our race and retiring to their home in the dwelling-place of God.

But the Saviour brought this "life and immortality to light." He speaks of heaven and its inhabitants with awful familiarity; says those admitted there from this earth are "equal to the angels;" speaks of their abodes there in "mansions," words taken from human dwellings here; promised the penitent thief that he shall be in paradise "this day," and promises to meet his disciples at death and receive them to himself to dwell and abide there. And Paul, speaking by inspiration, says it "were better" for him to "depart and be with Christ," as an event following his death at once. Our mortal bodies are in no two moments composed of the same material atoms, and change entirely every few years; yet these bodies are "temples of God," and parents never mistake the identity of their children when growing up from infancy. And Paul says we are raised "a spiritual body," which is doubtless our own identity, though immortal and glorious. Such seems to have been that one of "the prophets" sent to reveal the apocalypse to John in Patmos, and whom John twice attempted to worship, but was forbidden, Rev. 19: 10 and 22: 8.

The sublime drapery and costume of scenic resurrection which end Christ's mediatorial kingdom are shadows which doubtless represent realities, and will have their fulfillment. In a subject so vast, diversified and wonderful as the unseen world, which is the abode of God, and the home of angels and "just men made perfect," which stretches from the opening of Christ's kingdom to its close, when it merges into that of the eternal Father,—such a theme must, of course, contain things which we mortals can neither utter nor understand. But the unseen world to which we are all moving, and which we must soon enter, is put in the Bible for our "instruction." And what chiefly concerns us to know is that Christ who was crucified for us is its glorious King; that patriarchs, prophets and saints are there with him, where there "shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain;" that Christ must reign till he hath put all his enemies under his feet; "that every knee shall bow and every tongue confess, of things in heaven and things in earth and things under the earth, that Jesus Christ is Lord," Phil. 2: 10; and that where he is there also shall his servants be, John 12: 26; and that our loved ones departed are of that number, as were Moses and Elias on Tabor serving the same Master as when they were here; and that as part of a "great cloud of witnesses" they await our coming.

LIGHT ON THE COLLEGE SECRETISM.

At the request of several members of the fraternities, Mr. C. S. Bullock consented some time since to address the "fraternity students" of Northwestern University at Evanston on the merits and demerits of college secret societies. By his consent invitations were given to none but members of secret societies, except to those whom he invited and who were present with him. After several selections by the band, none of which was "See the conquering hero comes," as stated by the member of the Beta Gamma fraternity, who supplied the Chicago dailies with the report of the meeting—in this report we are assured there is scarcely a word of truth—a chairman was chosen who in a few happy words introduced the speaker. "All questions," he said, "have two sides—an inside and an outside:" to which the fraternities responded with a yell and hearty applause. "We know the inside, and the speaker who will pummel us to-night knows only the outside. But of all people seeking light the student body is the most earnest, and will gladly hear what our friend has to say."

Mr. Bullock replied in as happy a vein: "All square questions have four sides—an inside and an outside, a right and a wrong side. I shall take pleasure in showing you the wrong side of college secret societies as seen from the outside."

At the close of the address several ineffectual attempts were made to trip the speaker by questioning and denying his statements. One young lady, a member of the Kappa Alpha Theta Society, rose and said, "I deny the charge, and brand it as false, which the speaker has made concerning our 'fraternity.' Our chapter hall was never broken into."

Mr. Bullock accepted the refutation and replied, "I based my remarks on the words of a young man here present who knows the two young men that entered the hall." They were members of another fraternity. The hall had not been "broken" into, but one of the young men had a key that unlocked the door. For going into the hall they were called before an indignation meeting of the ladies' fraternity and considerably scared by the mention of a law that does not exist.

One of the fraternities that was considerably shown up by the speaker endeavored to make a defense through one of its members, who is seldom found in church, but generally in his office, on the Sabbath,—who seldom, if ever, prays, but can swear and talk "smultry," and who knows from experience that the members of the "frat" play cards and smoke, and that some of them have in earlier days been expelled from school.

Mr. Bullock's argument was not without its effect, at least upon the non-fraternity students present, who spoke with amazement at the revelations of the societies given in the address and made by their members at the meeting. We hope to publish the address in our next.

A MASONIC FESTIVAL.

Our Washington letter notices some of the features of the "Easter" festival in the nation's capital. As much might be said of all our cities. On that day, as on all other festival days when the ordinance of men has been set up for religion, the spirit of the world generally prevails in the churches of Christ.

But it is entirely fit that the Masonic lodge should make it an high day. From every quarter we learn of it; but correspondents have sent us especial notice from Ironton, O.; Worcester, Mass.; and San Jose, Cal. In the first the Congregational church was thrown open to the Knight Templars and the pastor officiated as prelate. In Worcester the Masons met in their own hall; but Rev. J. F. Lovering, whose name is more celebrated in lodge circles than in those of the church, addressed them, and then the gay company repaired to a hotel for a banquet. In San Jose the First M. E. church was taken possession of, and the pastor, Dr. Jewell, whom our correspondent regards as one of the best men in his denomination on the Pacific coast, a professor of holiness, joined with the "Sir Knights" in responsive reading of God's Word. "There must be many," says the letter, "among his 600 members who object to this heathenish toggery in church."

But why do we object to Easter? Because it is very nearly unadulterated paganism. The "egg" part of it is direct from the serpent worship of the East; and we do not see why it is not as offensive to God now as ever it was. The day itself is not a fixed anniversary, but changes from the 25th of March to the 25th of April, and does not pretend to be the anniversary of Christ's resurrection any more than Christmas is of his birth. It is named from a goddess of the old Germans whose festival was at this time. But far back of that it was a Chaldean ceremony in honor of the goddess Ishtar. Why should not the Christian church have a Bacchus festival, or Venus festival as well?

The early Christians, filled with the Holy Ghost, celebrated the resurrection day of Christ week after week. They called it by the precious name, "the Lord's day." Is not that enough for all who are dead to the world and alive to Christ?

THE SOUTHERN FLOODS.

A brief letter from Bro. R. N. Countee of Memphis reveals a painful condition of affairs among the poor colored people in the overflowed region above and below that city. Surely it is a time for all Christian people to beseech the God of mercy to deliver these poor from the destruction that threatens from the floods, and from men who will yet be cruel and oppress them. Bro. Countee says:

"We are just now surrounded with a vast multitude of people from the overflow districts. Four flatboats, loaded with colored people, were brought here last Saturday. Hungry, homeless, moneyless and half-naked, they are here quartered in an old cotton warehouse. I went to the place on Sunday with nearly all of our church, and I preached for them at 3 P.M. The colored ministers of the city are making this their common cause, and all are helping nicely. The planters in the bottom lands are refusing to accept help for the colored people on their places in many instances, preferring to feed them themselves; and we shudder while we know in many instances this means slavery for our people for the next two years, and the conscienceless white planter will continue to rob them. The overflow gives us a stagnation in business, but God ever lives, and we trust him."

—At his last writing Secretary Stoddard was expecting to spend last Sabbath at Dexter, Maine, and probably remain there during the present week.

—The N. C. A. Board of Directors meets on Saturday next at the call of the chairman. The concluding business of preparation for the conference will be of importance and will call together the full Board.

—Bro. W. T. Ellis of the Fire and Hammer writes to correct us as to his location, which by some error was lately printed in the Cynosure as Eugene, Oregon. He is located at Portland and is still publishing the Fire and Hammer and preaching the Word. He says of Judge Williams, former Attorney General, that he has a large law practice and is a reputed millionaire. His first public acknowledgment of Christ was when Moody was in Oregon. He has since been delivering able lectures in different places on the divinity of Christ.

—Secretary Stoddard's letter on the Bethany Mission in Boston will be read with a new interest when it is known that a meeting was arranged at the mission rooms in which Bro. Wm. F. Davis of Chelsea, Miss Ida Haines of Maine, Rev. C. Cunningham, Sr., Miss Richards and possibly Mrs. Gleason, who spoke so eloquently on Narcotics at the last Illinois State Convention, will take part. They will consider the lodge system in its relation to Christian charity and the work of saving men. We shall hope for a good report from this discussion.

—Bro. W. J. Gladwin, the devoted Bombay missionary, is spending a few weeks in California, making every effort to arouse a missionary spirit among the churches. His spirit is stirred, as was Paul's at Athens, with the lodge idolatries. He has lately written of a good man who will undertake reform work in California, and his stirring appeal in another column will receive notice from the N. C. A. Board at its meeting next Saturday. Let us all bestir ourselves in prayer for a blessing on this effort, and if thought best to begin this new work, let every friend hasten to be represented in it by a contribution.

—We print again the long list of influential names which have from time to time been subscribed to the call for the April conference. In order to secure prominence they begin on the last page and are continued on pages 7. This list is worth reading again and again, with a prayer for each and all, that God's most precious truth respecting the purity of his worship and the honor of his Son Jesus Christ, may be so powerfully presented to them that they shall all become Josiahs for the casting down of the lodge abominations, and the utter destruction of these high places of false worship, with all their chambers of imagery.

—A Presbyterian pastor of Arizona asks on page 6 if the Doesburg exposition, "Freemasonry Illustrated," is genuine Freemasonry. He may rest assured that it is so, by testimony that would hang a man, that could not be broken down or controverted by any court in the country. A "cloud of witnesses" attest it. The Leroy convention with its 128 witnesses, July 4, 1828, affirms it. So does the action of the Rhode Island, Massachusetts and Vermont legislatures. Some 300 modern seceders have given their names to certify that Masonry is truly revealed in this book, and Bernard's, and Ronayne's, and in all that correspond with them. The cypher publications of the Freemasons prove it. The books of their standard authors prove it; and so does the late death of Johnston at Huntington, W. Va. That it is not true because so many good men have been persuaded to take these blasphemous oaths and go through such degrading ceremonies, is an argument that will not hold until it can be explained that human nature has changed since Peter denied Christ and David committed one of the meanest murders on record.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts has resigned his position as Publication Secretary of the American Sabbath Union, which he found would confine him to New York and vicinity, in order to be free to make a transcontinental trip in the interest of Sabbath Reform. His trip will take him in April to Ohio, Illinois, Kansas and Colorado; in June to Nevada, Utah, Colorado, Nebraska, the Dakotas and Minnesota. In the autumn he expects to return to pastoral work.

—Secretary M. A. Gault, of the National Reform Association, is succeeding now in arranging all his appointments one month ahead. Last week he lectured twice at Laclede, and twice at Unionville, Mo. His appointments till May 1 are in Kansas, as follows: April 13, Longton; 14, Winfield; 15, Freeport; 16, Bluff City; 17, Harper; 18, Danville; 19, 20, Anthony; 21, Attica; 22, Crisfield; 23, 24, Anthony National Reform Convention; 26-28, Sterling; 29, Hutchinson; 30, McPherson.

—Mrs. T. B. Carse was at the annual meeting elected for the fifteenth time president of the city W. C. T. U. of Chicago. This union has charge of the Bethesda Kindergarten, where 6,000 little ones have been trained; the raising of money for the temperance temple, to cost more than $1,000,000; the Talcott day-nursery, where 6,665 babes were cared for last year during the day, while their mothers were out at work; the Anchorage Mission, where 700 friendless girls were given protection last year. Thirty-six thousand three hundred and seventy-two dollars and thirty-two cents were raised and expended in this good work last year. Mrs. Carse is the prime mover in the Temperance Temple enterprise, and her labors seem likely to be crowned with success.

LITTLE GIANT. WESTWARD HO!

THE PACIFIC COAST NEEDS A STRONG AND SPEEDY ANTI-SECRECY MOVEMENT. THE WAY IS OPEN. BEGIN AT ONCE.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.

Goliath is here in all his Philistine glory, defying the armies of the living God. San Francisco, at the Golden Gate of the great West, claims about 380,000 souls. Here Goliath has over 400 secret lodges, according to the city directory. Counting the secret societies of the Romanists, and others called clubs, unions, vereins, etc., it is safe to say there are 500. The churches and missions, Protestant, Romish, Jewish, Mormon, etc., number about 130 in this city. More than three times as many lodges as churches! In the State of California there are about 4,000 or 5,000 lodges, judging by the proportions of Masons and other societies given in the directory.

Around California you have a group of States, immense in area and growing very rapidly in population. Of course lodges have been spread all through this vast region, and are a mighty power everywhere.

Where is the "Little Giant?" What is the National Christian Association doing for this "Western Empire,"—about one-third of America's States? A few books and papers have been sent,—good work for the limited resources of that young and aggressive society,—but how very little compared with the great and pressing needs of this vast country. What can these few scattering shots do when fired at a distance of 2,000 miles? Forward! Get to a closer range. This is a day of forward movements. The N. C. A. has made some noble strides of late. Its promoters and supporters should point its "star of empire" westward. The great convention at Chicago will give a mighty impetus to the whole anti-secrecy movement. The deep consecration which will there throb in many Christian hearts will seek wide channels for its holy activities. California calls. Send a broad ray of your light this way. Let the dark chambers of the secret kingdom be exposed. Strip away the blindfolding rags, and let the ignorant public see the skeleton in broad daylight.

What can be done? Well, if you cannot as yet send a siege-gun across the Rockies and plant a battery (convention) here, at least send a sharpshooter at once. Let an agent open work on the Pacific coast. There are many friends of your movement who are waiting to be aroused to activity and co-operation by some leading worker here. Carefully managed, the cause would, in due time, support itself here. But it needs pressure from the East to open the work. Having been traveling about much in California during the past three months, I feel confident that a wise and consecrated N. C. A. agent would accomplish much good here.

How shall the work begin? Let fifty friends of the cause write at once to the Treasurer of the N. C. A., offering one dollar per month for a year for the California campaign. (Some may offer a dime per month, and some ten dollars monthly, but let it aggregate $50 per month.) Pray as you pay. A humble worker could provide his personal expenses, railway fares, outlay for correspondence, etc., on fifty dollars. More would be needed as the work enlarged, but the field itself would soon give aid. "The light shineth in the darkness." W. J. GLADWIN.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, April 9, 1890.

Last Sabbath was an ideal day here for the annual dress parade of fashionable religionists, and the event was probably never more brilliant on the popular promenades of the city. The hearts that had been beating penitently under Lenten-like garbs for the past forty days fluttered triumphantly under the bright array that marks Easter, the most important bonnet and gown epoch of the year. There were striped girls, and plaid girls and plain girls. There were thousands of miraculous bonnets and incomprehensible hats. In the churches large congregations, elaborate floral decorations, brilliant musical programs, and sermons appropriate for the occasion were the rule. Some of the prominent places of worship could not more than half accommodate the throngs who came to hear the music and see the dresses.

It was noticeable, however, that the heads of the administrative families had not been turned by the Easter frivolities. Most of them attended their different churches in the morning. The President and Mrs. Harrison, the Vice-President and Mrs. Morton, with their daughters and daughter-in-law, were there, but the toilettes of the ladies were quiet and sombre. They were not Easter dresses, and they were not new.

On last Saturday, when the Senate was rapidly passing a number of bills, the only one which caused even a brief discussion was a measure extending to the whole District of Columbia the laws in force in Washington against selling liquors on Sundays or to minors. Senator Blair expressed his intention of offering an amendment to this bill absolutely prohibiting the sale of liquor in the District of Columbia, and he asked Senator Ingalls, who is Chairman of the District Committee, if an early report might be expected from that committee on the prohibition bill before it. The Kansas Senator replied that the bill had

THE HOME.

OUR FATHER'S CARE.

"Your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things."—JESUS.

The golden lights of the summer
Lie on the laughing land,
The voice of the song is borne along
By the breeze on every hand.
The flowers spread out their beauty,
And the water's rush and the forest's hush,
Make tender the glowing scene.
But the cooling kiss of the summer air,
And the joy and beauty everywhere,
Are proofs of Almighty loving care.
For our heavenly Father knoweth
We have need of all these things.

There are sounds of a gathering tempest,
And the clouds are black as night;
O'er the earth is spread a shade of dread,
And all things sigh for light;
The leaves of the green woods quiver,
And a silence falls around.
Till over the hills with a haste that thrills,
The thunder peals resound,
And angrily falls the pelting rain,
And sullenly roars the mighty main,
And the heart grows sad with a fear of pain;
But our heavenly Father knoweth
We have need of all these things.

We joy in the radiant season,
The time that we love the best,
When the sea's calm flow, and the sunset glow,
Are bringing the needed rest.
Oh! sweet is the summer golden,
And glad is the early morn;
And soft is the light that falls at night
Upon the whispering corn.
For all the world sings happy lays,
And our hearts are stirred to song and praise,
And God comes near in the holy days.
For our heavenly Father knoweth
We have need of all these things.

Yes, need of all the light and shadow,
Need of the loss and gain,
Need of the rest and labor,
Need of the ease and pain;
For some great useful lesson
Is taught by all that falls
On our spirits here, till the rest be near,
And the voice of the angel calls.
Praise unto God! His love shall guide
To the sheltered place by the Saviour's side,
And all is good whate'er betide:
For our heavenly Father knoweth
We have need of all these things.

THE RELIGION THAT MAN NEEDS.

Some form of religion is essential, because man is a religious being. All tribes and nations have had some form of worship. The question for us is, What shall this religion be? If man made his own religion, what would be its characteristics? In the first place, he would have a religion that he could understand. There must not be any mysteries beyond his comprehension. In the next place, its moral standard must be such as would fall in with his way of life. It may forbid the grosser sins, to which men in the better walks of life may not be tempted, but it must be a law so broad and liberal as not to traverse the ordinary ways of the better sort of worldly men. It must also represent God as mild and gentle, tender-hearted, a colossal philanthropist, ready to forgive all the faults and crimes of men, and bring them out right in the end. His symbol will be the sunshine and the gentle showers, all the gentlest and softest phases of nature: but he must have nothing in common with nature in her severer moods—the lightning, the storm and the earthquake. Its future should be one of leisure and of culture, of social enjoyment and increase of knowledge. Such a religion would be attractive to prosperous people. If the Bible declared such a religion it would be the most popular book in the world. Men would have no trouble with its prophecies, or its miracles, or its atonement.

If this is the religion which man prefers, is it the one which he needs? Man needs a religion which reveals truths which are beyond his present knowledge, for the highest progress is secured by the deep problems of life. Man is led on in science by the deep mysteries of nature. The enthusiasm of inquirers is awakened by the unknown principles which underlie the common objects of observation. If science answers some of the questions we ask, it starts more questions. So there must be secrets in a religion which is to lay hold upon the deepest nature of man. It must be thickset with mysteries. "What thou seest thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter." The religion which man needs must also reveal a moral rule of absolute truth and righteousness. It must not compromise with his sinful desires. Conscience requires absolute purity, just as the mathematician requires a perfect circle. Man must have a perfect standard, —a law that will not bend to this or that. There is no satisfaction for the soul without that. Men may hate the perfect law, but they need it.

With this perfect rule of conduct, the religion which man needs must provide some method of forgiveness, else it would cut him off from all hope. Some men say, indeed, "We do not want an atonement or forgiveness. We want to stand on our merits." But the perfect law of God charges all men with transgression. There is none that doeth good. We have all fallen below the standard of perfection, and there is no hope for us except in God's mercy. Religion must open the way for the forgiveness even of the chief of sinners. Last of all, the religion which men need most must reveal a future as holy as the law—as holy as God. Man's tone comes from that which he chiefly hopes for. If he seeks wealth as his chief God, or pleasure, or honor, he can rise no higher than these objects of pursuit. If his future depends upon his holiness and he seeks this, he will be lifted to a higher plane and will become more and more holy and blessed.

These elements in religion are the things that men need, not the things they desire. But the Christian religion, as revealed by our Lord, is such as this. It is full of mysteries. Its standard is a perfect law. It provides for sinners. It reveals a future that is as holy as the law of God. It offers no hope except on condition of repentance for sin and faith in the Divine Redeemer. Three things follow from this view: First, the Christian religion is not from man, for it contains not what sinful man desires, but what he needs. Secondly, the schemes which seek to make religion pleasing to men are human, not divine. So in the Gospel, as Christ gave it to us, are the very elements which should win the confidence and awaken the enthusiasm of men. These truths are its credentials. Therefore we need have no fear as to the final success of the Christian religion. It meets man's deepest needs. It lays hold of him on the side of his wants, and it never lets go its grip.—Dr. Storrs, in the Treasury.

"TIE THE CAMEL AND TRUST GOD."

Darkness was coming down upon the desert. There were no trees to cast lengthened shadows, no hilltop to hold the lingering rays of sunlight; but suddenly, all over the wide extent of level sand, darkness fell like a black robe. Mahomet and his attendants halted on their journey, and a tent was pitched. "Allah's care is over his children," said one of the band. "I will even loose my camel and trust to Allah that I shall find him again in the morning at sunrise." "Friend," said the prophet, with grave, uplifted finger, "tie thy camel, and then trust to Allah."

There is one point of our daily living, at which we see men and women continually losing their camels, with loud protests of trust in Allah, and showing presently pious resignation at their loss; I mean the care of their health. Of course this earthly house of our tabernacle must decay, and we must bear its infirmities cheerily and patiently; but there is neither sense nor piety in committing our lives to God, and then breaking all the laws of hygiene.

"This is a strange dispensation of providence," I said mournfully to my neighbor, as we attended together the third funeral which we had followed from Col. B—'s house within two years. "Providence, indeed!" answered my neighbor, with a gruff disrespect which I hope was intended for me, not for providence. "Humph! The colonel keeps rotting potatoes in his cellar!" "I am asking God to give me dying grace, that I may be willing to go," said a girl in the last stages of consumption. "Ah," said the doctor, in a confidential whisper, "if she had only asked a year ago for common sense to keep her from putting off her flannel chemise in mid-winter to go to a party!"

Friend, eat plain, wholesome food, wear sensible clothes, ventilate your house, be temperate, be prudent; in short, tie your camel, and then trust in God and take cheerfully the dispensations of his providence.—Ohio Peace Messenger.

HOW TO READ BOOKS.

A TALK WITH THE CHILDREN.

[John Dennis, in Good Words.]

How to Remember What is Read.—I have said that we do not easily forget what we read on a subject that greatly interests us. A man who is told that some one has left him a large sum of money is sure not to forget that news. A boy who has the promise of a cricket-bat will not forget that promise. And so you see there is a connection between a strong interest and a good memory. It is generally true that a man who loves poetry remembers poetry; that the man with a strong curiosity to learn the facts of history remembers those facts; and it may be safely said that the child whose interest is thoroughly aroused in any subject is certain to recollect what he reads about. There are many things it is necessary to know which cannot attract a child. These must be learned by heart; and as the memory, like every other faculty, grows stronger by exercise, it is well that it should be thus used in early life. Useful facts, such as dates, if stored in the memory while young, will be fresh for use in after days, and in all future reading they will be found of service. There are other ways in which the memory may be strengthened; and no doubt the young reader will agree with me that if not more useful these ways are more agreeable than the dull storing up of figures. Suppose, for instance, that after reading a charming tale you shut the volume and try to tell the story to your brothers and sisters. This may, no doubt, be difficult at first; but the labor will soon become a pleasure, and the effort to recall the tale will so fix it in your mind that many a long year afterwards it will be still remembered. This is one hint to the boy or girl bent upon self-improvement; and I need scarcely add that the endeavor to write down in simple language an account of what has been read is another way of strengthening the memory. Indeed, it is something more, and may be a lesson in English composition, which is, you know, the art of writing English.

Reading Aloud.—The art of reading aloud should be practiced by every reader. A book read in a clear voice, with proper emphasis and feeling, seems quite different from the same book read in a sing-song drawl. The noblest words ever written are likely to fall upon deaf ears when read as task work and without animation. The mind of the reader does not come into contact with the mind of the writer; and so the thoughts uttered, however beautiful and worthy, make little if any impression on those who hear them. Every child will have noticed this in a church. One clergyman has read the words of Bible or Prayer-book so as to compel him to listen; another has read the same words so as to send him to sleep. To read well you must understand and feel what you are reading, and the more alive with meaning the words are to you the better will you utter them. Thus a good reader not only makes his hearers understand the books he reads, but proves by his clearness of utterance and modulation of tone that he understands it well himself.

A good voice is what we call a gift of nature, and the charm of its sweetest tones cannot be acquired; but the voice is so flexible an organ that, however naturally defective, it can be trained and improved, and every young person may learn the art of elocution, or of distinct and forcible utterance, which is essential to good reading. Poetry and rhythmical prose, that is to say, prose that moves in a kind of harmonious measure, should be read aloud, and if possible in the open air. Every word in the works of a great poet has a special meaning, and so you will see how necessary it is that every word should receive due attention. In reading prose it is possible to slur over words, to clip them, and to treat them with something like contempt; but in reading verse this is not so easy to do, and therefore it will be well to study the art of reading aloud through the help of our great poets. And in order to succeed in this accomplishment, it is advisable—I had almost said necessary—to commit poetry to memory. Thus only will it become a part, as it were, of your mental property, and only by this familiarity with poetical words and imagery will you be able to read poetry as it deserves to be read. It is not necessary to do more than mention the conspicuous faults of bad readers. Some read as if they were crying, although the subject may be the merriest in the world; some whine and some drawl; some assume an artificial sort of voice, altogether unlike the voice in which they talk to a friend; some lay an emphasis on the wrong words; some mumble their words so indistinctly, and read in such a monotonous tone, that it is impossible to listen to them with patience. Remember, then, in reading aloud to avoid all tiresome effort. Be natural; speak with clearness; understand and feel what you read, and you can hardly fail to read well.

And now, before I end this "talk," let me remind you that it is possible to be a slave even to books. Books cannot be loved too well, but they must be loved wisely. Some young people live in a kind of book-world, and forget the living world around them; and older people become sometimes so absorbed in the imaginary griefs of characters in novels as to disregard the real troubles of their friends and neighbors. This is not making a good use of books. Then, if books so occupy you that you do not care about the beautiful world in which you are living, it is a sign that you are not using them to good purpose. The mountains and woods, the sky and ocean, the birds and flowers have a thousand voices; but it is possible to close our ears against them, and to despise that Book of Nature which is open to every one and has a lesson for all. Yet remember that other books are great and pure and noble, in proportion as they make us see more clearly and enjoy more thankfully the glories displayed in this infinitely wonderful book, of which David speaks so well in the nineteenth Psalm and in the one hundred and fourth Psalm. Many and many a lesson must be learned about this world which books cannot convey, and the proof of what a man knows and can do is not always to be tested by his book-knowledge. It is possible to write many books or to read them without growing in wisdom, just as it is possible to travel in foreign countries and to learn no more than if you had remained at home.

I hope that what has been said will be enough to teach many a young reader that one of the most substantial enjoyments of life is to be found in books. With such companions no one need be idle or dull. Let them be used thoughtfully and lovingly, and you will find that they grow dearer every day.

HOW LORD MACAULEY READ.—When a boy I began to read very earnestly, but at the foot of every page I read I stopped and obliged myself to give an account of what I had read on that page. At first I had to read it three or four times before I got my mind firmly fixed. But I compelled myself to comply with the plan, until now, after I have read a book through once, I can almost recite it from the beginning to the end. It is a very simple habit to form early in life, and is valuable as a means of making our reading serve the best purpose.

TEMPERANCE.

MY FIRST DRINK AND MY LAST.

It was a beautiful moonlight night in October. I was walking with a friend, and we had been to a neighbor's, where he bought a pint of whisky. I was past eighteen years of age. I had been raised in a log cabin in a sparsely settled neighborhood in a western State. My mother was the dearest Christian woman I ever knew; she was the daughter of a Massachusetts clergyman. My father was an educated Christian gentleman—a New Hampshire man—and our home, log cabin though it was, certainly was the purest spot I had ever seen on earth. Never did I hear an evil word spoken there, and whisky and tobacco were unknown in our house.

I had promised my dear mother I would never drink; but this friend, who was the miller of our county, told me that he would never speak to me again if I did not drink, and that he would think I had some grudge against him, or felt myself above him socially. I took the bottle after he had coaxed me a full half hour, and put it to my lips and drank. Will I ever forget that moment? The vow I had made to my dear mother was broken, and the devil came in and took full possession. My mother died a short time after this, happily in ignorance of my sin. I was away from home that day, but her last words were, "Tell Hopkins to meet me in heaven." When I reached home in the evening, before I could dismount from my horse, my sisters came out and told me mother was dead. I could not believe it, so they took my hands and led me into the "spare room," and there, cold in death, was my darling, precious mother! I could not believe that the silent form wrapped in white was she, so pale, so still. From my earliest recollection she had been the last one I ever saw at night and the first one in the morning. I begged her, with a breaking heart, to speak to me. How my broken vow came back to me, as I stood by that dear lifeless form, so peaceful, so sweet! I promised God, and her, that I would never break it again. Three days after mother was buried I was more drunk than I had ever been before.

Our home was broken up, for father soon died. I went to live with a prominent physician in the village, and began the study of medicine. My preceptor, though one of the most brilliant men in his profession, was a heavy drinker, and in one year I was a confirmed drunkard.

I gave up my studies, took a traveling position, became a professional gambler, and for fifteen years rarely went to bed sober. For many years I did not see my danger, or was too much under the influence of rum to think seriously on the subject. Occasionally, however, ominous forebodings would arise in my heart, and I would wonder what the end would be.

In 1870 I came to New York city, and soon accepted a position with a salary of $300 per month, with a liberal allowance for expenses. The failure of the establishment I was working for, threw me out of a position, and I never was able to command a good salary afterward. I cannot describe here the remorse and heart aches of the confirmed drunkard, who feels himself slowly though surely slipping down to that awful abyss, the drunkard's hell—a foretaste of which he already feels in his soul! I passed through it all—more than human pen could write. Many times while my faithful, loving wife would be holding me in her arms, would I see fiends in the most hellish forms walk round behind me, and holding their mouths so close that I could feel their scorching breath, tell me what to do. This advice, whether real or imaginary, always tended toward my self-destruction. Then they would go into the next room, and talk so loudly about my case that I was sure my wife would hear their evil plottings and be frightened out of her senses.

One Tuesday evening, on the 18th of April, 1882, I sat in a saloon in Harlem, a homeless, dying drunkard. I had pawned or sold everything that would bring a drink. I could not sleep unless I was dead drunk. I had not eaten for days, and for four nights preceding I had suffered with delirium tremens, or the horrors, from midnight till morning. I had often said, "I will never be a tramp; I will never be cornered; for when that time comes, if it ever does, I will find a home in the bottom of the river! But the Lord so ordered it that when that time did come I was not able to walk one quarter of the way to the river. As I sat there thinking, I seemed to feel some great and mighty presence. I did not know then what it was. I did learn afterward that it was Jesus, the sinner's friend. I walked up to the bar and pounded it with my fist till I made the glasses rattle. Those who stood by drinking looked on with scornful curiosity. I said I would never take another drink if I died in the street; and, reader, I felt as though that would happen before morning. Something said, "If you want to keep this promise, go and have yourself locked up." I went to the nearest station house, a short distance away, and had myself locked up.

I was placed in a narrow cell, and it seemed as though all the demons that could find room came in that place with me. This was not all the company I had, either. No, praise the Lord! that dear Spirit that came to me in the saloon was present, and said, "Pray!" I did pray; and though I did not feel any great help, I kept on praying. As soon as I was able to leave my cell I was taken to the police court, and remanded back to the cell. I was finally released, and found my way to my brother's house, where every care was given me. While lying in bed, the admonishing spirit never left me, and when I arose the following Sabbath morning, I felt that day would decide my fate. Many plans were turned over in my mind, but all were rejected; and toward evening it came into my head to go to Jerry McAuley's mission. I went. The house was packed, and with great difficulty I made my way to the space near the platform. There I saw the apostle to the drunkard and the outcast—the man of God, Jerry McAuley. He rose, and amid deep silence told his experience, that simple story that I heard so many hundred times afterward, but which was ever new; how he had been a "tief," an outcast, a drunkard, a "yes, a regular old bum! but I gave my heart to God, and he saved me from everything that's wicked and bad." There was a sincerity about this man and his testimony that carried conviction with it, and I found myself saying, I wonder if God can save me? I listened to some twenty-five persons' testimonies, every one of whom had been saved from rum, and I made up my mind that I would be saved or die right there. When the invitation was given I knelt down with quite a crowd of drunkards. Never will I forget the scene! How I wondered if I would be saved—if God would help me! I was a total stranger, but I felt I had sympathy, and it helped me. Jerry made the first prayer. I shall never forget it. He said: "Dear Saviour, won't you look down in pity on these poor souls? They need your help, Lord, they can't get along without it. Blessed Jesus, these poor sinners have got themselves into a bad hole. Won't you help them out! Speak to them, Lord, do, for Jesus' sake—amen!" Then Mrs. McAuley prayed fervently for us, and Jerry said: "Now all keep on your knees and keep praying, while I ask these dear souls to pray for themselves." He spoke to one after another, as he placed his hand on their heads, saying, "Brother, you pray. Now tell the Lord just what you want him to do for you." How I trembled as he approached me! Though I had knelt down with the determination to give my heart to God, when it came to the very moment of grand decision I felt like backing out. The devil knelt by my side, and whispered in my ear crimes I had forgotten for months: "What are you going to do about such and such matters, if you start to be a Christian to-night? Now you can't afford to make a mistake; had you not better think this matter over awhile, and try to fix up some of the troubles you are in, and then start?" Oh, what a conflict was going on for my poor soul! A blessed whisper said, Come! The devil said, Be careful. Jerry's hand was on my head, and he said, Brother, pray. I said, Can't you pray for me? Jerry said, All the prayers in the world won't save you unless you pray for yourself. I halted but a moment, and then said: "Dear Jesus, can you save me?" Dear reader, never with mortal tongue can I describe that moment. Although up to that moment my soul had been filled with indescribable gloom, I felt the glorious brightness of the noonday sun shine into my heart; I felt I was a free man. Oh, the precious feeling of safety, of freedom, of resting on Jesus! I felt that Christ, with all his brightness and power, had come into my life; that indeed old things had passed away and all things had become new.

From that moment till now I have never wanted a drink of whisky, and I have never seen money enough to make me take one. I promised God that night if he would take away the appetite for strong drink, I would work for him all my life. He has done his part, and I have been trying to do mine. Nor did I ever, even by accident, swear an oath, though before I could not speak ten consecutive words without an oath. I began the next day to work for Christ, by inviting a tramp to come to the meetings. He came, and went up for prayers. A few weeks afterward the Lord showed me I was leaning on tobacco, and I had better lean entirely on him. I threw my plug of tobacco away one night down the aisle in the mission, and the desire was removed. In fact, my tobacco was the only sacrifice I ever made for Jesus, as I would gladly have paid money to be rid of rum, if I could have been relieved that way.

Four years afterward I was called by the trustees of the old McAuley Water Street mission to take charge of the work where Jerry first began, over fifteen years ago. Almost every night God is displaying his wondrous power here in saving the drunkard, the thief, and the outcast. Pray for us!—S. H. Hadley, manager of the Water St. Mission.

not been acted upon, but that it was the intention of the committee to formulate some measure upon the subject at the earliest day possible. Mr. Blair mentioned that this bill had been before several Congresses, and he wanted to inquire how many future Congresses would be likely to come and go before this committee would formulate its mind on the subject. To this Mr. Ingalls retorted that it would probably be about the time the Educational bill is passed. The Senator from New Hampshire was not paralyzed by this sarcasm, however, and remarked that there was about as much necessity for the one as for the other.

The recent conference of anti-Prohibitionist Republicans in Iowa has attracted more than ordinary attention politically at the capital as well as throughout the country. Naturally prohibitionists view the matter with anxiety and await the action of the legislature with great interest. While no one can venture to predict the result at present, I will mention that the Iowa Senators and Representatives in Congress have expressed their opinions to the effect that the law will not be repealed, and their concentrated judgment is probably as trustworthy as any obtainable at present.

Senator Wilson, for instance, says he thinks the law cannot be repealed because there would not be votes enough either in the upper or lower House. He is also disposed to think that the movement does not represent the dominant Republican sentiment in Iowa. He thinks that if the question were submitted, as before, instead of 30,000 majority there would be nearer 50,000 majority, and that prohibition is the forceful cause of the decrease of crime in Iowa. Congressman Flick also attributes the diminution in crime in his State mainly to this cause. If space would permit, I could quote the words of many other national legislators from Iowa, to show their faith in the efficacy of the prohibition law. And while a few of them are not personally in favor of enforcing it, are, indeed, avowed anti-prohibitionists, I believe none of them have expressed the belief that the law will be repealed. *

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The sower and the seed, vs. 4-8. This was the first in a series of parables, illustrating with wonderful clearness the truths of the kingdom. To those who were willing to become as little children, it was the form of all others best calculated not only to reveal, but to impress these truths upon the mind. With the Pharisees, however, bigoted and caviling; or the Sadducees, unbelieving and worldly, it was not an intellectual but a moral incapacity to understand the truth, so that the very simplicity of the medium became an obscuring veil. Multitudes are to-day kept from understanding the plainest truths of Scripture by the same difficulty. No scholar expects to understand a rule in arithmetic without the practice of examples under that rule. So whoever will do God's will shall know of the doctrine, but the first thing necessary is a teachable spirit like a little child, conscious that it is ignorant, and willing and glad to be taught. Nature and human life are full of parables, but it is only by the light of revealed truth that we can understand natural truth. Like the disciples, we have to pray to have their meaning unfolded to us. We are to go through the world as learners, finding daily lessons in everything around us, but to do this we must sit at the feet of the great Teacher.

2. The parable expounded, vs. 9-15. We notice (1) that a large part of the good seed is necessarily wasted by falling on ground that is not prepared to receive it. We must not expect that all our efforts for good will bear fruit. We are never certain what proportion of the word either printed or spoken will fall on good soil, but we know some of it will, and that the increase will be sufficient in eternity to abundantly repay us for all our labor. (2) A certain proportion will fall by the wayside. On some the most solemn truths will make no impression. They may be regular church attendants, but their hearts are like a public highway beaten hard with the tread of many feet. They are open to every call of temporal interest, and thus a hard strata of worldliness has been formed and the seed can not germinate. The truth not being received into the heart has no effect upon the life. This class abounds in all our churches. They are hearers but not doers of the Word. (3) Some seed will fall on the stony ground of an unchanged heart. A thin soil of good resolutions, religious emotion, and a real wish for something higher and better worth living for than self, receives the seed of truth and it springs up, only to wither away in the drought and heat. Never having been truly converted to God, their faith will not stand the least trial. Modern revivals are at fault that so large a part of the reported "conversions" belong to this class. They may seem to be earnest and enthusiastic, but when they come to be tested—when they are called to deny themselves some useless indulgence or vanity, and bring every desire into subjection to the will of Christ—they fall away into the ranks of the worldly, formal professors, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God. (4) Some seed will fall on uncleared ground. The soil is good enough if the thorns and thistles could be first rooted out. These are hearts that have never felt the strong plowshare of conviction for sin. Their fallow ground has never been broken up. Their sin is the sin of the sluggard. Prov. 24: 30-34. A high type of Christian character, like a beautiful garden, is never evolved without toil. To faith must always be joined works. (5) Some seed will fall into honest and good hearts characterized by perseverance; they retain the word and patiently continue therein, and they bring forth fruit unto perfection. No Christian should be content to bear small, gnarled, wormy fruit, but that which will honor the divine Husbandman.

—Leading clergymen of Boston, irrespective of denomination, have petitioned the State legislature to permit the Salvation Army to use its peculiar methods of attracting the attention of the multitudes.

—The will of the late Jeremiah Loof was probated at Philadelphia, April 1. It is a peculiar document. Eighty thousand dollars is left in trust for his family, provided they shall lead godly lives, avoid the use of tobacco and liquors in any form, including cider.

—Among the recent deaths from acute alcoholism at the Washingtonian Home, in Chicago, was one of a man whose identity it was difficult to establish, but who proved to have been formerly a Presbyterian clergyman, Rev. George Spencer, at Boggstown, Indiana.

—The Methodist Episcopal Conference, in New York, has petitioned Congress to continue educational aid to such States as will accept it. License laws, high or low, were declared against as perpetuating the sale of liquor. Complete legal prohibition was indorsed. The resolution gave rise to a long debate, when it was decided to indorse the founding of a university.

—The second day of the German Lutheran Conference, at Laporte, Ind., was principally devoted to a discussion of the Bennett school law of Wisconsin. The conference is unanimously opposed to compulsory school laws, and is decidedly in favor of using the ballot to defeat any candidate for legislative office who will not pledge himself to vote against the enactment of all laws tending in that direction.

—The Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian church, at a meeting in New York, April 9, passed a resolution opposing the bill which has passed the House in relation to the census, providing for action in regard to the Chinese now in this country. The board believes that the bill will provoke retaliation in China, and is of the opinion that the personal safety of the 130 Presbyterian missionaries in China is in danger. They deprecate any such legislation, and emphatically protest against the bill in question as hasty in the measures which it provides, cruel in the severity of the conditions which it imposes, extreme in the penalties which attaches, and as altogether calculated to arouse the indignation of the Chinese nation. They believe also that it would prove fatal to all missionary enterprises in China, where the board has about a quarter of a million dollars invested.

—Mr. Spurgeon's church received 310 new members on their baptism last year. The total membership is now set down as 5,354.

—The Baptist year book, just issued, shows that the number of Baptists in the United States is 3,070,047. During 1889, 144,575 new members were baptized.

—The great revival which has taken place in connection with the Turco-American Mission at Aintab, in Armenia, has resulted in the addition of 534 new members to the church.

—Out of nine hundred foreign missionaries at present in India, representing various lands and peoples, the oldest is an American, the Rev. John Newton (of the Presbyterian church), the veteran missionary of Lahore, who at the age of 78 is still a happy worker in his chosen field. Mr. Newton landed in Calcutta in February, 1835, almost fifty-four years ago; he has labored since in connection with the well-known Lodianna Mission. Four sons born here and educated in America, returned to this country as missionaries; one of these, Dr. J. Newton, died in India after twenty-two years' service; the others are still in the ranks; the five laborers have given 125 years of service to India. A daughter returned to India as a missionary, and afterward married the Rev. Dr. Forman, of Lahore, whose two sons and daughter have recently returned to India as missionaries, the first representatives of the third generation in this grand missionary family.

—In the Congo Free State there are eight Protestant and three Roman Catholic missionary agencies already at work.

—Mr. J. Hudson Taylor estimates that there are 50,000,000 families in China, and says one evangelist could visit fifty families a day. If England sent out a thousand evangelists, in three years, he says, the whole of China could be reached. Would the churches in England and America raise 500 missionaries, perhaps the other 500 could be raised among the native converts of China.

—Mr. D. L. Moody has acceded to the desire, expressed by many, that he should continue his religious meetings in this city, and he is holding them in the afternoon and evening as well as in the morning. —The Chicago Baptist Missionary has purchased grounds and a building for $28,000, but it will require nearly as much more to fully fit it up for the use of the school. The new location will be on Indiana avenue.

—An exchange publishes an account of the conversion of Leo Taxil, who has been one of the chief spirits in organizing atheistic societies in France, a famous free-thinker and author of many anti-Christian work. Recently he renounced his infidel sentiments, and announced his belief in God and his purpose to follow Christ. His former followers, instead of according to him the privilege of independent thinking, summoned him to appear before the Free Thought Societies, and proceeded to denounce him as a traitor and a coward, and to expel him from their organization with clamorous and passionate and vindictive reproaches. Free thought is not to be indulged by free-thinkers, except in the direction of atheism.

"Killed Without Inquest" is a very telling tract. The simple, unvarnished story of this "Masonic tragedy" cannot fail to impress deeply any intelligent person who reads it. It is in itself a refutation of the common lodge argument that "the secrets of Masonry cannot be revealed." ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

HOME AND HEALTH.

OUT-DOOR EXERCISE FOR LADIES.

I am quite frequently asked what I regard as the best out-door exercise for ladies, and my prescription is as follows: "One lawn, one lawn-mower, ounce of enthusiasm; mix. Dose, morning and evening."

In other words, I am disposed to have the ladies use the lawn-mower in preference to any form of out-door exercise, and I recommend it to all who need the recreation that it brings. Dio Lewis recommends wood-sawing; Dr. Beard advocates baseball; and Tom, Dick and Harry all have hobbies and theories to air. But I prefer lawn-mowing for three reasons that cannot be gainsaid: 1. It is not unfeminine. 2. It gives exercise in the open wealth of air. 3. It is calculated to strengthen those parts of the female system that need strength, and does not weaken parts that are susceptible to strain. Walking fatigues the body and does not fill the mind. Gardening is not properly a lady's work, unless she loves it and makes it so. Rowing and horse-back riding are too arduous and do harm many times instead of good. Carriage riding is not exercise. Tennis, croquet, and the like, may suit some, but do not suit all; and so with all other prescribed out-door exercises—all have some feature to which the thinking physician can object.

I studied the matter as a problem, and decided on lawn-mowing over everything else. The idea proves good, for no report adverse to it has come to hand, it has done no patient harm, and they all like it. You note the word "all," for I recommend the employment to all—housewives, young ladies, matrons, saleswomen, school-teachers, dress-makers—a woman who needs to get out of the house at least twice a day for a little while—the well, the sick and the nervous.

Just see what the use of the lawn-mower does. It gives light exercise to the body and lower limbs, helps the lungs toward strength, exercises the arms well, and occupies the mind. From fifteen to sixty minutes morning and evening—say 8 A. M. and 6 P. M. is the proper use of the remedy.

You want a good machine, for there are mowers that are even too heavy for a man to use. Lightness of draft is indispensable and quite as much so as strong and simple construction. A machine that cuts a twelve-inch swath, weighing about twenty-eight pounds, and having six and one-half-inch wheels, is what is suited to a lady. As for a lawn, you can make one out of any piece of sodded ground; and as for enthusiasm, that is a lady's peculiar possession. If you have no lawn of your own, be charitable and mow your neighbor's. Here is a little appendix that I have just written, and affixed to the above prescription:

"DEAR MADAM:—Be enthusiastic. Have a lawn-mower. Begin at 8 A. M., and work until you begin to feel tired. Repeat dose at 6 P. M. It will strengthen you and give you exercise."—W. H. Morse, M. D.

WILD VINES ABOUT THE HOUSE.

While admitting that many foreign plants are all that is claimed for them, I like our native ones best, because I see great merit in them. I never have understood why persons of excellent taste should neglect them, unless it is because they are not familiar with them. There is no finer vine for use about the house than the Virginia creeper. It is found almost everywhere at the North, and is hardy. It grows rapidly, is easily transplanted, has beautiful foliage, and is a miracle of gorgeous coloring in autumn. After the leaves have fallen its purple berries are more ornamental than the flowers of many plants. It is, or should be, to us Americans, what the ivy is to the Englishman. If you want something to drape the veranda, you can select nothing better. If you wish a vine to climb up to and all along the eaves and around the second-story windows, this is the very plant to get. The Virginia creeper is a robust, self-reliant vine, and will take care of itself and delight all

MANY A LIFE

HAS been saved by the prompt use of Ayer's Pills. Travelers by land or sea are liable to constipation or other derangements of the stomach and bowels which, if neglected, lead to serious and often fatal consequences. The most sure means of correcting these evils is the use of Ayer's Cathartic Pills. The prudent sailing-master would as soon go to sea without his chronometer as without a supply of these Pills. Though prompt and energetic in operation, Ayer's Pills leave no ill effects; they are purely vegetable and sugar-coated; the safest medicine for old and young, at home or abroad.

"For eight years I was afflicted with constipation, which at last became so bad that the doctors could do no more for me. Then I began to take Ayer's Pills, and soon the bowels recovered their natural and regular action, so that now I am in health."—Mrs. C. E. Clark, Tewksbury, Massachusetts.

"I regard Ayer's Pills as one of the most reliable general remedies of our times. They have been in use in my family for affections requiring a purgative, and have given unvarying satisfaction. We have found them an excellent remedy for colds and light fevers."—W. R. Woodson, Fort Worth, Texas.

"For several years I have relied more upon Ayer's Pills than upon anything else in the medicine chest, to regulate my bowels and those of the ship's crew. These Pills are not severe in their action, but do their work thoroughly. I have used them with good effect for the cure of rheumatism, kidney troubles, and dyspepsia."—Capt. Mueller, Steamship Felicia, New York City.

"I have found Ayer's Cathartic Pills to be a better family medicine for common use than any other pills within my knowledge. They are not only very effective, but safe and pleasant to take—qualities which must make them valued by the public."—Jules Hauel, Perfumer, Philadelphia, Pa.

with its luxuriance if it is given half a chance.

Another very desirable vine is bitter-sweet. It has beautiful, bright foliage, which is seldom infested with insects. During the latter part of the season its clusters of scarlet berries, enclosed in orange husks, which part and disclose the fruit within, are showy enough to suit any one. These berries hang on all winter if the birds let them alone. For verandas and porches the bittersweet or wax-work is quite equal to the Virginia creeper, and that is high praise.

Another most beautiful plant for those who do not consider that beauty depends on bright and vivid color, is our native clematis, or virgin's bower. This vine has fine and vigorous foliage, and in July is covered with thousands of delicate, white flowers of delicious fragrance. One of the finest effects that I have ever seen produced by growing two plants together on a trellis, was made by training a clematis among climbing roses. The contrast of the pink and white flowers was simply exquisite, and the dainty grace of the clematis added a greater charm to the roses. For use in vases in the house, the long sprays of clematis, when in bloom, are finer to my mind than anything else to combine with flowers of vivid color. It is easily transplanted, and, like the other two native climbers, will take care of itself.—E. E. Rexford, in American Agriculturist.

REMARKABLE OFFER!

Nearly everyone is familiar with the name, but it has been estimated that only one in every two hundred and eighty persons in the United States is fortunate enough to have access to the valuable information contained within the covers of the grandest work ever written by mortal man,

Webster's UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY.

That this is an unfortunate state of affairs will be admitted by all, and it is due to the fact that no one save the rich could afford them.

The Dictionary is a necessity in every home, school and business house. It fills a vacancy and furnishes knowledge which no one hundred volumes of the choicest books could supply, and all young or old, educated or ignorant, rich or poor should have it within reach and refer to its contents every day in the year.

The Loomis reprint contains all the matter as compiled and arranged by our esteemed and honored author and statesman,

NOAH WEBSTER.

About forty years of his life was devoted to this great work, and when we consider the fact that this book contains about 100,000 words with their correct spelling, derivation and definition we will appreciate that these years must have been well spent. Some idea of the magnitude of this book may be gained from the fact that it contains over 440 cubic inches of paper and has about 300,000 square inches of printed surface. The printing is very clear, plain and distinct, the paper firm and durable, being manufactured especially for this volume, the boards are extra heavy and covered with an excellent quality of leather and thoroughly laced by hand to the book proper.

In addition to the 100,000 words it contains an excellent portrait of the author, together with his biography and a valuable table of 12,000 synonymous words.

By special arrangement with the publishers, we are permitted to furnish this valuable volume: 1st. To any subscriber to our paper; 2nd. To any renewal subscription; and 3rd. To any person who has paid a full year's subscription within the past six months, on receipt of $1.50 for the paper one year, and two dollars and seventy-five cents to cover express charges, packing, etc., of the Dictionary.

FARM NOTES.

SMALL FRUITS ON THE FARM.

On a small plot of ground enough fruit can be grown, if proper care is given, to supply a family of ordinary size three times a day the year through. I am aware that this statement may seem a rather broad one, but those who have a "little garden, well tilled," will bear me out in the assertion. It is surprising to those who have had no experience in this line to find out how much can be grown on a very small piece of ground, if proper attention is given. It does not require such an amount as one often imagines it must, because the regular use of it on the table has a tendency to prevent as great indulgence in it as would naturally be the case were it used only as a delicacy brought out on extra occasions. Used regularly, it becomes a sort of appetizer, and really acts as a tonic of the best kind. Its pleasant acid tones up the system and whets the appetite for a keener appreciation of more solid food. It is a direct aid to digestion, and those who eat of it regularly are seldom troubled with those ailments which call for pills and physic. The fruit-eater is seldom bilious.

By all means set out plenty of small fruit. Have a row of currants, a bed of strawberries, raspberries along the fence, and grapes wherever a support can be arranged for them. If you have never tried your hand at small fruit culture, make up your mind to experiment in it, and the chances are, if you take care of the "venture" with which you start out, you will be so well pleased with your success that in a year or two you will "branch out" until you have all the fruit your family requires. It is just as easy to care for a garden of this kind as it is to properly cultivate a field of corn, but most farmers have got the idea into their heads that it is puttering work, and nothing will get this idea out of their heads except a trial, which will be sure to convince them that no other part of the farm pays so well, all things considered, as a good garden.—Vick's Magazine.

THE FARMSTEAD LAWN.

Family games, the out-door games of summer, must be provided for. Everybody, almost, plays croquet, and lawn tennis is rapidly becoming an equally popular game. The boys also want a place to play ball, and at least the small boys can be allowed a chance upon the small area reserved for the two home games referred to. These ought, of course, to have as level a spot as possible, with trees around it for shade, but not too near. Seats may be provided beneath these trees for weary participants or elderly on-lookers. It is well worth while to take considerable pains with this play-ground, so that the games may be played in a satisfactory manner, and skilled players be satisfied with the facilities for displaying their accomplishments. The leveling ought to be done with care, and a fine, thick June grass sod secured by good preparation of the ground, liberal seeding, a regular but moderate use of the lawn-mower. These things take time; but "the labor we delight in physics pain," saith the poet, and both the boys and the girls of the family will willingly help to prepare the ground devoted to social recreation and the entertainment of visiting friends and kinsfolk. All that I have indicated can be carried out nicely on the space of a single acre.—From "Some Thoughts on Lawns," in Vick's Magazine.

Scrofula is transmitted from parent to child, and thus becomes a family inheritance for generations. It is, therefore, the duty of every scrofulous person to cleanse his blood by a thorough and persistent course of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

A bald-headed woman is unusual before she is 40, but gray hair is common with them earlier. Baldness and grayness may be prevented by using Hall's Hair Renewer.

A BAD SPELL.

A merchant's clerk wrote a check for forty dollars, and spelled the numerical adjective "f-o-u-r-t-y." His employer directed his attention to the error, with the remark, "You seem to have had a bad spell this morning." To which the clerk replied, "Sure enough; I've left out the 'g-h.' Let us hope the clerk will still further amend his orthography, meanwhile, if anybody is suffering from a 'bad spell' of headache, superinduced by constipation, over-eating or other indiscretion, let that person ask his druggist for Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. They are entirely vegetable in composition, and are prompt and effective in action. They are specific in all derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels. They are strongly cathartic or mildly laxative according to size of dose. Unequaled as a Liver Pill. Smallest, cheapest, easiest to take. One tiny, Sugar-coated Pellet a dose.

WHAT AILS YOU?

Do you feel dull, languid, low-spirited, lifeless, and indescribably miserable, both physically and mentally; experience a sense of fullness or bloating after eating, or of "goneness," or emptiness of stomach in the morning, tongue coated, bitter or bad taste in mouth, irregular appetite, dizziness, frequent headaches, blurred eyesight, "floating specks" before the eyes, nervous prostration or exhaustion, irritability of temper, hot flushes, alternating with chilly sensations, sharp, biting, transient pains here and there, cold feet, drowsiness after meals, wakefulness, or disturbed and unrefreshing sleep, constant, indescribable feeling of dread, or of impending calamity?

If you have all, or any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from that most common of American maladies—Bilious Dyspepsia, or Torpid Liver, associated with Dyspepsia, or Indigestion. The more complicated your disease has become, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. No matter what stage it has reached, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will subdue it, if taken according to directions for a reasonable length of time. One or two of Dr. Pierce's Pellets taken daily with the "Discovery" will add to its efficacy in case the liver is very torpid and the bowels constipated.

"Golden Medical Discovery" is the only medicine of its class guaranteed to do all it is represented to accomplish, or money paid for it will be refunded. WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Proprietors, 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

IN THE

Christian Church.

The following from Rev. H. H. Hinman shows his estimate of its contents:

"I have read with great interest 'Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church' by Chas. A. S. Temple. I regard the subject discussed as important, and its presentation both able and timely. There is a most manifest drift in all our Protestant denominations towards unauthorized ritualism and the substitution of human inventions in place of the simplicity of the Gospel, as given by Christ and his apostles. In calling attention to this tidal wave of formalism, the author has conferred a lasting benefit on the church; as of Protestantism."

CALL FOR A CONFERENCE

—OF—

CHRISTIANS ON THE SECRET LODGE SYSTEM,

—TO BE HELD—

APRIL 22 and 23, 1890,

—IN—

First M. E. Church, Corner Washington and Clark Streets, CHICAGO.

During the past year events of national importance have fixed the attention of our people as never before upon the extent and power of the Secret Lodge System.

The Cronin murder in Chicago, the investigation of Mormon oaths in Salt Lake City, and the uprising against Jesuit intrigue in Boston and the British Provinces, have been a new revelation to multitudes of the danger lurking in this system.

This influence affects the administration of justice and all other departments of the Government, but especially is it inimical to the Christian Church. Believing the time Providential for a candid discussion of the character, aims and practical workings of the secret orders, we the undersigned, hereby give our voices in favor of such a convention to be held in the city of Chicago, on April 22 and 23, 1890.

At Bridgeport, Conn., there is a Suicide Club. Four years ago, it is reported, five low-spirited Germans organized this club, with the agreement that one member of it should take his life each year. This singular and horrible obligation is said to have been fulfilled year by year until one man only remains. This out-Herods Herod, and must bring vividly to the mind of every Freemason the enormity of the oaths he has taken against his own life. No one would object to the suppression of this suicide mania by law. Why should the not the Masonic oath be abolished by the same power?

The British Chancellor, of the Exchequer, presented a budget to the House of Commons last Thursday, in which he reported the gross revenue from alcoholic beverages of 29,265,000 pounds sterling, or $145,000,000. This enormous sum, Mr. Gladstone said, showed a universal rush to the beer barrel, the spirit bottle and the wine decanter. The largest increase had been from rum. Everybody seemed bent on showing their patriotism by increasing the revenue from this deplorable source. In the years 1875 and 1876 there was great prosperity in Great Britain, and these were the greatest drinking years recorded. There was then precisely the same rush to the dram bar, and the same increase in the revenue. With such a record before them the English people may well desire to cultivate the sweet uses of adversity.

In Scotland and some parts of England pious claims are put forth on behalf of certain "Boys' Brigades" as being juvenile "armies of the Lord." But Lord Wolseley, with more honesty, plainly declares their chief purpose and effect to be as feeders for the army, and as purveyors of food for carrion, as he declared in a speech in presenting a set of colors to a Boys' Brigade at a London Presbyterian church. There can, perhaps, be no greater wrong done, both to our American youth and to our nation, than the training of boys in the arts of war. Not only does it create a military spirit and love of the pomp and display of war, but it tends to blunt the moral sensibilities and lead them to think lightly of scenes of agony and blood. That the disciples of the Prince of Peace should be induced to thus mislead the youth is most strange, nor will there be any occasion for disappointment if boys thus trained shall become the instruments for the subversion of society, and the destruction of human liberty.

The conflict in Hardin county, Kentucky, last week, gives emphasis to the great and pressing demand for missionary labor in that region. No temporary expedients will reform those mountain classes. There may be a present occasion for the use of sufficient force to overcome lawlessness, but the power that will save that people from drunkenness, murder and anarchy is the power of the Gospel of Christ. The missionary and the school teacher will be far more effective than the sheriff and the soldier.

One of the most noteworthy schemes for bettering the condition of the poor is the College Settlement Society, composed of college-bred women from Vassar, Smith and Wellesley, who own a building on Rivington street, just below the Bowery, in one of the most degraded neighborhoods of New York city; and as the name imports, settle there for permanent Christian work. It is not so aggressive as some, being more on the moral suasion and "object lesson" order. They have good religious singing every Sabbath afternoon to which all are freely invited. They keep a variety of interesting books with attractive titles to lend among their poor neighbors; and thus in a hundred different ways these college graduates, the very flower of cultured American womanhood are continually seeking to lift to a higher plane the vicious and degraded, and help those who have seen better days, and are tempted to give in in sheer discouragement to hold their own in the bitter struggle with poverty and vice. God bless this and every other effort to invade the slums with the culture and refinement of our nineteenth century Christianity. If our legislators could be gifted with some of the practical wisdom of the Jewish lawgiver there would be no slums.

The papers report a singular performance at Niagara Falls. The United States officials sent a Chinaman across into Canada. The poor fellow had not money enough to pay for his certificate of entry into the Dominion, and was sent back across the bridge. The American end was barricaded against him, and he had nothing else to do but remain on the bridge. Millions of people have read this dispatch with a laugh at the awkward predicament of poor John. But, truly, the laugh is on the other side. The position of two great governments, holding a bridge against a single man, and shoving him off because on one side he has too little money, and on the other he has come from China, is one of the most disgraceful pictures of official idiocy and inhumanity. Nations that legislate against their fellow-beings with such prejudice and partiality as we have against the Chinese, may find the judgment of God opening across their path a deeper abyss than Niagara.

Perry Carson, the colored giant and local Republican leader of Washington city, was baptized lately and joined the church. He has closed his saloon and given up his whisky business, and is now a candidate for appointment as minister to Liberia. Carson's saloon on Pennsylvania Ave. has been for many years a most important center of political influence. No other man in Washington has exercised such despotic power over the colored voters. Conventions of colored Republicans in that city have often resulted in a free fight, in which the baser element, led by Carson, has been uniformly victorious. Both in 1884 and in 1888 he represented the Republicans of the district in the conventions that nominated Blaine and Harrison. That he has been converted and given up his iniquitous business, seems too good to be true. He is a man of fine abilities, but if his conversion is genuine he will forsake his Masonry as well as his saloon. The closing of the latter will be an important gain to the cause of morality in our national capital.

REV. PROFESSOR T. N. HASSELQUIST, D.D.

PRESIDENT OF AUGUSTANA COLLEGE AND THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, ROCK ISLAND, ILL.

BY REV. E. NORELIUS, EDITOR "AUGUSTANA."

The subject of this sketch was born in Onsby, province of Scania, Sweden, on the 2nd day of March, 1816, and is consequently now in his 75th year. He received a regular university education at Lund, and was ordained a minister of the State Church of Sweden in 1839. From that year up to 1852 he served various churches in the diocese of Lund as an assistant minister and as a vicar, and everywhere awakened a great stir by his sermons, which were noted for no small degree of brilliancy and evangelical pathos and earnestness.

His spiritual awakening seems to have come to pass from early youth without any marked or abrupt change, and yet with a remarkable depth and consciousness. From the beginning, when he entered the university, he preached the law and the Gospel, and sinners awakened and found peace in Christ. While yet in Sweden he was much interested in the various reforms of the time. Thus he took an active part in the discussion and work in regard to church reforms, temperance, home and foreign missions, and he was always heard with great interest.

In 1852 he came to this country on call from a small Swedish Evangelical Lutheran church at Galesburg, Ill. Nothing but the love of Christ and love of souls could have constrained him to accept such a position. To be a Gospel minister among the newly-arrived poor immigrants is no sinecure. But with a remarkable self-denial he labored in his accepted position for ten years, or up to 1863, and succeeded by earnest work, love of Christ and souls, to build up quite a large congregation, which to-day is one of the most influential churches of Galesburg. By the older people Dr. Hasselquist's labors at that place are well and fondly remembered. He took an active part in all questions tending to build up the church of Christ and furthering true reforms and a Christian civilization.

In 1855 he started the first successful newspaper in the Swedish language. He called this the Weekly Hemlandet (the Home-Land) and edited it to the end of 1858, when it was removed to Chicago. This paper was published in the interest of evangelical religion and Christian reform. It advocated the abolition of slavery, the spread of temperance and the opposition to oath-bound secret societies. The influence which Dr. Hasselquist, by this paper, created among the Swedish population all over the country, was very great. It is not saying too much that Dr. Hasselquist, by his work, has, to quite a large degree, moulded the religious, political and social type which is still so apparent among the Swedes of this country.

In 1860, when the Augustana Synod was organized, he was chosen president of that body, and acted as such for ten years consecutively. In 1863 he was elected Theological Professor and President of the Augustana College and Theological Seminary, and thus became the successor of the sainted Rev. L. P. Esbjorn. In that capacity he still serves the institution and the church to which he belongs. Since 1874 he has published a religious weekly, Augustana, and by it has exerted a very wide influence. Besides, he has served as pastor of congregations, in addition to his other duties.

Notwithstanding his age, he is still in good health and vigor of body and soul, and he gives good hopes of being able yet to stand years of hard labor for Christ and his kingdom. Dr. Hasselquist is a man of deep convictions, and he requires a sure footing in the Scriptures for all that he says, writes and does. God grant that we may have many such earnest and well-balanced men!

Rock Island, Ill.

HOW THEY CATCH THEM.

BY REV. WALLACE J. GLADWIN.

"Will you walk into my parlor?
Said a spider to a fly."

There is a young man just from college. He has given himself to the ministry with a holy zeal for souls. He has belonged to a "Literary" as a part of his schoolboy preparation. He is now a man, and puts away such childish things, as he lays his school books aside. In an important Western town he is in charge of a growing church. There are three churches in the town, and about a dozen different lodges. Strong pressure is brought to bear on him to join influential lodges. His leading supporters in the church are high lodgeites. Some of the most able and prominent ministers in his denomination are lodge grandees.

This is an actual case, and it is a sample of many more. What will he do? He tells me how they ply him with artful arguments of "increasing his influence," "drawing people to his church," etc. What has he to oppose all this strong current? Is there a voice raised against the Secret Empire on all this Pacific Coast? Who sends a Cynosure or a tract exposing lodgery to these hosts of young ministers and working Christians who are battling hard to build up a pure Christianity on the great West coast of America?

The editorial staff of the Cynosure has visited the Pacific coast, and can feel the vast importance of this field. Speak of it, brother. There are "giants" here, and well fortified, too. But sound out the "minority report" of Caleb and Joshua: "Let us go up at once and possess it, for we are well able to overcome it."

What a noble army of young Christians in this great West! Shall they be drawn unwarned into the traps and snares of the legion of lodges? Or will our well-informed friends in the older States send out the warnings of truth in time?

Christians, patriots, freemen, here is a noble and fertile field for your zealous and prayerful labors. One of the first things to be done, and the very least to be attempted, is this: Scatter large numbers of the Cynosure and N. C. A. tracts over the Pacific Coast. "The true light now shineth."

BY H. W. JOHNSTON.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Say to your readers for us that we landed here in safety after a voyage of five weeks. Our party of four, consisting of Miss Alice Harris, M.D., wife, baby and myself, by a kind providence have been spared all sickness, save sea-sickness, since leaving our own land, and our health, during the eight weeks that we have been here, has been unusually good. We have pleasant surroundings and feel encouraged in our work.

We are living, at present, in Freetown, a beautiful city of about 22,000 inhabitants, with twenty-four churches and about the same number of schools. If all the professed Christianity here were the genuine article, it would be indeed a wonderful place. But so long as a large proportion of the membership of the American churches are cold and dead, entangled in the meshes of lodgery, or ground down beneath a load of worldliness and pride, we need not be astonished to find that there is much shrinkage in Sierra Leone Christianity. There are four great sources of contamination to native Christianity which I will mention at this time.

To begin with, the formalism of high churchism has permeated all denominations and so established its forms in the hearts of the people, so that no matter what the denominational connection, the people demand the use of the Anglican set forms, and so far the only headway that nonconformist missionaries have been able to make against these usages has been to lop off a little here and a little there. Along with a formal type of Christianity have grown up certain usages which makes it the popular thing to be a church member. Besides, admittance to the Colonial Hospital is much more easily obtained by church members, and the privilege of Christian burial are denied to all others. Regardless of the state of their hearts, or their daily conduct, almost all the people who have shaken loose from heathendom desire to be known as "Christians." They learn the ups and downs of the prayer book service and are soon full-fledged members; the popular standard of church morality being low enough to rarely ever bring them in conflict with church discipline.

In the second place, many of their old superstitions linger in the hearts of the people and poison their religion. We know by experience at home that generations of Christianity under the most favorable conditions has not weeded out entirely the old superstitions of the Anglo-Saxons, and surely it is not surprising that the African, a generation or two from the darkness of fetish-worship, should not yet be expected to be free from superstition. It takes time. Much progress has been made, but some of the people are still so much under bondage to relics of old superstitious customs that the work of the Gospel in their hearts is hindered.

The third factor, and probably the greatest of all, in contaminating pure religion are the drinking customs. I do not refer directly to the fearful havoc being made among the heathen tribes by the rum traffic. Rum keeps the natives from Christ and ruins them body and soul. But it is the drinking customs of professed Christians that poisons the fountain of morality,—the church. To belong to church is not regarded as a necessary restriction on bibulous habits. Prominent men in the church are engaged in the traffic. Leading men in many of the churches keep wine and beer on their tables. Class-leaders sometimes get drunk. "Moderate drinking" is regarded by many as temperance. Drinking is so interwoven with the usages of the people that even the most solemn and sacred occurrences of life are made the occasions of indulgence. Fermented wine is used, with hardly an exception, in celebrating the Lord's Supper. But in these matters African Christians are only a few decades behind American Christians. A total abstinence standard has been already lifted up, and it is to be hoped that the next ten years will witness a great uplifting of the standard of church morals.

Mrs. Leavitt, Hon. Sec. of the World's W. C. T. U., is now on the West coast, having nearly completed her organizing tour around the world, in which she has been engaged for the last five years. She was present at both of our Sabbath services in St. John's chapel recently, and in the evening gave a very able address on Bible temperance, strongly fortifying the action of the pastor in substituting unfermented wine in the morning at the communion table in place of the claret formerly used. The commodious Wilberforce Hall has been secured for a week of meetings, and a committee, headed by Bishop Ingham of the Anglican church, consisting of representatives of all the denominations in town, appointed to make all necessary arrangements. It is expected that a local W. C. T. U. will result, and, of course, our band will do all we can to push this form of temperance work.

The fourth element of contamination is the lodge, which, though it has not its hand on the throat of the church here to the degree it has in America, is already here, and the seed is being sown for the future crop of the works of darkness. Masonry, the mother of the brood, was imported by an English officer, and has a membership embracing a number of the leading men of the colony. Good Templarism, the entering wedge of lodgery, is now making a little stir, and under the guise of temperance is netting some of the best Christians of the colony. We are glad to see men taking the total abstinence pledge, but can not shut our eyes to the fact that this order is founded on the lodge basis and, in an attenuated form, has all the essential characteristics of lodgery, and that often it has paved the way for, and popularized the horde of secret orders that followed in the wake. As gladly as we would join hands with any to promote total abstinence in Africa, we can not shut our eyes to the fact that the lodge is strangling Christianity among the American Negroes at home, and dare not even for the sake of total abstinence allow without protest the paving of the way in Africa for a flood of lodgery to sweep in, and by seizing on the natural love of ceremony and display characteristic of this people, and the fondness for mysticism and superstitious rites, draw away the native from his love for the service of God's house.

Having spoken of these elements of weakness in the African churches, we would gladly speak of some things which are sources of strength and a basis of hopefulness, but we have already written at length and must stop for this time, wishing God's blessing on the Cynosure and all its family of readers, and asking their sincere prayers for us and our work.

NATIONALISM.

BY M. N. BUTLER.

I have been reading Bellamy's "Looking Backward," and judge therefrom that he is to a limited extent a student of our social, political and financial system. Revamping old ideas into readable shape often strikes the public more favorably. His most ardent admirers are probably foreigners, or, at least, not native-born Americans, and hence he carries wine and cigars over into his ideal twentieth century dispensation. Dear man, our military and naval academies, and even some soulless insurance and railroad corporations, at this moment can teach him and discount his visionary paradise. The government schools will not admit cigarette smokers at all, and many insurance and railroad monopolies draw the line at tippling and dram-drinking.

However, our present writing is not to review his fine-spun vagaries, or to separate his sense and nonsense. Nothing but a thorough regeneration of fallen human nature would make a part of his general plan feasible. Orthodox Christianity, which alone can change this fallen nature and inaugurate the golden age, has little prominence in such "Looking Backward." Christ, the Redeemer, must be the central figure of the social system that is to usher in the millennium for which we all look, hope and pray. "Ye must be born again" goes ringing down the ages.

But would a reformer, with the spirit of the lowly Nazarene in him, have conjured up an earthly Eden with wine and cigars, or overlooked the vast system of oath-bound paganism and false worship that is stifling manhood and hurrying us as a nation back to the old Egyptian sun worship? In the face of this flood of ancient heathen idolatry, with an altar and shrine to devil worship within sound of almost every American church, how long will it take to legislate selfishness out of the public? With such rings, cliques and cabals of deception, fraud and swindling in nightly session, how long, we repeat, will it take to educate the mass of men up to the standard of the Golden Rule? Reformers and reform movements that start out ignoring all this deserve the pity and commiseration of all well-informed people. Are Christian patriots ready to put our railroads and vast industrial system into the hands of lodge graduates and unregenerate adepts; destroy individualism, and disfranchise the working people?

The prohibition and labor movements are becoming more and more entangled in lodgery as they coalesce. The lodge is working the temperance orders, the Alliance, the Wheel, the Grange, and even nationalism for the good of the worshipful fraternities. The men who can associate with and vote for men and movements that endorse political evils should not be over nice about church communion with lodgeites.

"But," says one, "the Prohibition Labor party does not endorse lodgery; it is silent on that question." So is the M. E. church, yet thousands of conscientious men and women have withdrawn from its communion that they might not fellowship lodgery. It requires no seer or son of a prophet to see the masked hand that is pushing lodge labor to the rescue of lodge-ridden prohibition. Americans, look well to your going! Do not condone lodgery by voting for or co-operating with elements hand-in-glove with lodgeites.

THE XVTH AMENDMENT, SHALL WE ABANDON OR SUPPLEMENT IT?

BY REV. H. H. HINMAN.

"Have you ever thought of it, whether the enforcement of the Constitution would not amount to a declaration of war? And have you ever considered carefully the question of abandoning the XVth Amendment and falling back on the XIVth?"

This is what the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette says in reply to the demand that the provisions of the Constitution be enforced. It is evidently put forth as a feeler, and indicates a policy to be adopted by the Republican party, by which the rights of the Negro are to be surrendered, but the supremacy of the party sustained.

The queries are not hard to answer. No; it is not "a declaration of war" to insist that the organic law of the nation shall be obeyed. It is no more a war than was the arrest and punishment of the anarchists of Chicago. If any should choose to make it an occasion for resistance to lawful authority, and to call it war, the responsibility would rest on them and not on those who sought to maintain the public peace. But we do not believe that the fraction of the South who are opposed to Negro suffrage would openly resist the national government. They have had war enough. They could have no hope of success, and the moral sense of the world would be against them. Perhaps none of our laws are perfectly enforced, but that constitutes no reason for their "abandonment," but rather for renewed efforts to maintain them.

We object to such abandonment, first, because it would be a violation of a solemn compact, in which each and every State was a party. These amendments of the Constitution were endorsed by the great majority of the people of the nation, and were regarded as a just, wise, and final settlement of all the difficulties which led to, and grew out of the war. It matters not who repudiates them, they are the law, and no man can talk of setting them aside without, at least, consenting to treason.

2. To consent to abandon one, is to consent to the repudiation of all. The XIIIth Amendment abolished slavery. The XIVth secures equal citizenship and equal representation in Congress. The XVth gives the right to vote to all citizens. These are the war amendments. They stand or fall together. No one thinks that slavery will ever be restored, but it is the hope of many to deprive the Negro of all his rights of citizenship. If we consent to the abandonment of his right to the ballot, we cannot claim for him the right to any protection by the nation.

3. It is the vain hope of some Republicans that if we abandon the XVth Amendment and allow the Negro to be deprived of his vote, we can, in accordance with the XIVth Amendment; reduce the representation of the South in Congress, and in the Electoral College in a corresponding degree, and this will secure the perpetual supremacy of Northern Republicans. But the XIVth Amendment provides a remedy only for a legal deprivation of the right to vote. It makes no provision against fraud and intimidation. It is always assumed that the status of every citizen is that which is given him in the law. Now, none of the States have ever prohibited the voting of Negroes. It is quite certain that they never will do it, inasmuch as such a law would most certainly be set aside by the Supreme Court as unconstitutional and void. Hence, it follows that so long as right of suffrage is only withheld by the unwritten law of violence, neither the South, nor any part of it, can be deprived legally of any of its representation in Congress or the Electoral College.

4. This amendment should not be "abandoned" because it would be a great and cruel wrong to our colored citizens. To say nothing of the bad faith to those who have ever been the abiding friends of our nation, it would deprive him of the little influence he has and his present means of inadequate but partial protection. The right of voting, to some extent, is exercised by the Negro in every State. In nearly all of the States of the South he has one or more representatives in the State legislature (in Virginia and North Carolina a considerable number). He has been represented in every Congress, since the adoption of the amendment, by some of his race. In many parts of the South the colored voters elect their local magistrates and other officers. They have made great advancement in education, and are vastly better able to vote intelligently than when this franchise was first conferred. It would be utterly unjust to take it away or allow it to lapse.

No. It is not an abandonment of any part of the Constitution we need, but an educational amendment we need. When no man can vote who has not read his ballot, the incidental evils of the XVth Amendment will be taken away.

THE CHRISTIAN REFORMER.

Nerve thou thy spirit to the proof,
And blench not at thy chosen lot;
The timid good may stand aloof,
The sage may frown, yet faint thou not.

Nor heed the shaft too surely cast,
The foul and hissing bolt of scorn,
For with thy side shall dwell at last
The victory of endurance born.

Truth crushed to earth shall rise again,
The eternal years of God are hers;
But error wounded, writhes with pain,
And dies among her worshippers.

—William Cullen Bryant.

TITLES OF HONOR.

It may be but a trifle, but yet we note it. In the correspondence between Cardinal Gibbons of Baltimore, and Cardinal Manning of London, each addresses the other as "My Lord Cardinal," each speaks of the other as "Your Eminence." Now these are not, can not be, ecclesiastical titles. Bishop is an ecclesiastical title, so is cardinal, so is priest, so is deacon. But "My Lord," "Your Eminence," are titles of worldly honor. We have, or rather in Europe they have, "My Lord Duke," "My Lord, the King," "My Lord Marquis," and even earls, viscounts and barons are addressed as "My Lord." An English bishop of the established church also is called "My Lord," but that is not because he is a bishop, but because he holds a life barony as a peer of Parliament. The title is temporal, though the wearer of it be an ecclesiastic.

Now the Constitution of the United States prohibits to its citizens the acceptance or use of titles of honor bestowed by any foreign power. Who has invested Cardinal Gibbons with the title of "Lord?" The Pope, if anybody. Who has empowered him to assume the honorary title of "Your Eminence?" The Pope, if anybody. And if the Pope can bestow the title of "My Lord" upon an American priest, why should he not bestow the title of count or duke upon an American layman? If he can invest a priest with the title of "Your Eminence," why not invest a layman with that of "Your Highness?"

These my lordings and your eminenceings sound strangely in a republic.—Inter-Ocean, April 15.

WHAT DO WE NEED OF A NAVY?

During the present week the debate on the naval appropriation bill will take up much of the time of the national House of Representatives. Already this bill has been considered at great length in the committee of the whole. There, to the grief of the more bloodthirsty members of the House, a lot of chilled-steel battleships were scuttled and sunk by the economists under the leadership of Objector Holman. The men whose voice are for war hope to get the battleships afloat again, however, in time to freight them with some millions of dollars from the public treasury.

But whether the battleships come to the surface or not, the people of the United States are certain to be called on to foot the bills for a large number of very pretty war vessels of assorted sizes. After being built, those vessels will loaf around in the harbors of the world, firing salutes and getting their decks scrubbed by valiant seamen. Probably they will grow antiquated, and will be sold for old junk without ever having an opportunity to shoot anybody.

The United States has about as much use for a large navy as for a large standing army. If it will deal justly by other nations it will never be compelled to fire a gun in defence of its coasts. The absurdity of building and maintaining a great navy when war is becoming obsolete even in Europe, and when this country has no foes and never will have any if it behaves itself, ought to be apparent to every American. But a magnificent scheme of expenditure has been devised by the navy department, and Congress is eager to help carry out the scheme. The tax-payer who supplies the millions has no reason to fear any foreigner. But he is to be "protected"—at his own expense—whether he likes it or not.

It should be the part of the United States to scorn the barbarism of battleships. This nation ought to stand as the exponent of peace and of arbitration—

"Till the war-drums throb no longer and the battle flags are furled

In the parliament of man, the federation of the world."

—Chicago Daily News.

Of course the United States has no reason to fear an attack from any other sane nation so long as it is willing to deal justly with all foreign powers. But the alarmists in and out of the House of Representatives have prevailed against the economists. The three battle-ships have been resurrected, the barnacles have been scraped off their clumsy hulls, and they have been indorsed as necessary guardians of the coast. Because of their ponderous build and their small coal capacity they will never visit other countries, but will merely hang around American harbors waiting for a job of fighting to do. The chances are about one thousand to one that they will never get a chance to participate in as much as a dog-fight.

The United States will have a very good navy when the vessels now building or provided for shall have been completed. Any attempt to compete with European countries in building navies would be ridiculous. In Europe war vessels are built for use; in America they are built because the surplus must be spent in some way or other. While few good vessels are necessary, more than a few are not only unnecessary but undesirable.—News, April 17.

The movement in opposition to secret societies is not denominational. It is much broader than any one branch of the church. It is a Christian movement. It is a patriotic movement. Every Christian patriot should be interested in it, and will be interested in it when he understands the true character of secret societies.—The Midland

THE PAPAL PARTY IN GERMANY.

LETTER FROM OUR ARTIST FRIEND IN MUNICH.

Last Sunday I went to the hospital here where Duke Carl Theodore has his patients, to see the Duchess and bid her good-bye, because they are going to Meran to spend several months. There were between forty and fifty people with all kinds of diseased eyes waiting to be examined and prescribed for, and the Duchess was bandaging them and washing their eyes and doing all the most disagreeable things that needed to be done. I waited in the office with her until most of the patients were sent away. I think there were as many as twenty children, some of them little babies in their pillows, with scrofulous eyes, who screamed as loud as they could the whole time they were being examined, and it can't be a very entertaining occupation to have every day.

We have been having weather so warm that I have had no fire in my room since about the time I wrote last. But it is the worst time for taking colds imaginable, for it was very cold, for Munich, the first part of the month, and all the courts and large buildings are full of cold air, so that when one is passing an open church or house door (the large door opening into the court) it is like walking into an ice-house on a hot summer day. I took cold and had earache last week, something as I remember having at home once, and nearly everybody else is coughing or sneezing perpetually.

I have just been reading about the cyclone in the Ohio valley. By the way, I have no map of the United States that is good, or of America either, and I forget sometimes just where places are. Fraulein M. has only an old atlas, so old that Chicago is not on it at all—it is called Fort Dearborn—and the other Western cities are not marked.

There was a plan of the ultra-montane party here to force the Prince-regent to dismiss the prime minister, who is too liberal to suit them, and who has so much influence over the Prince-regent that he always prevents the priests, and the Pope, too, from ruling here so entirely as they are used to doing. The ultra-montane party were determined to drive the Old Catholics out of Munich and to recall a society very much like the Jesuits, called the "Redemptoristen," which was expelled with the Jesuits a long time ago; but the prime minister and his party prevented their succeeding with their plan. So the ultra-montanes, who are a little the stronger party in parliament, and whose leaders are on the finance committee, revenged themselves by not granting any of the appropriations for the university and the academy of art, etc., which were proposed or advocated by the liberal party. Of course it made a commotion among the artists and art students, and the end of it is the Old Catholics are declared not to be Catholics and forbidden to hold services for the present; and the ultra-montanes declared themselves pacified so far that they granted half the proposed allowances for art, etc. The learned gentlemen of the ultra-montane party made very remarkable and ridiculous speeches about art.

HINDRANCES TO REFORM.

The following letter from Rev. J. S. T. Milligan was read before the Garnett (Kan.) National Reform Convention, and shows the conditions on which this or any great moral reform can triumph:

Surely no interest can be dearer to the hearts of good people than that of a sanctified Sabbath. No loss could be greater than that which would be involved in a continued desecration of the day of Holy Rest. How can the widespread indifference which we find almost everywhere be accounted for? Is it to be attributed to disregard for the day of God and of God himself? I fear too much of this exists. This is innate in unrenowned men, and it will be a vain hope to expect to find sympathy with this work in any unrenowned man. There are so many unrenowned elements in our national society that it is vain to hope for the co-operation of the mass of men, or even to avoid the opposition of those unsanctified elements in the social structure, and we might despair were it not that we are sure of the help of the most Mighty One.

But why is there such a lack of interest and effort on the part of Christian professors? They ought to know and feel that this interest is very dear in God's sight. That it is essential to religious prosperity, and even the existence of the forms of religion cannot long be maintained unless this tide of Sabbath desecration can be turned back and its force broken.

Even if we were but patriots we should be alarmed at the force of this tide of evil which threatens the moral and Christian element of our civilization, and will bring down on us, or work in us the manifestations of God's wrath. The prevalence of the secular theory of government is a mighty force of opposition to all legislation in favor of the Sabbath, and even to anything like a national observance of it. I don't think Sabbath advocates should defer in the least to this in their effort. Much less attempt to harmonize Sabbath rest with secular philosophy. The two are necessarily antagonistic, and toto coelo apart.

The seeming, and, after all, real sanction the Sabbath rest movement gives to the National Reform movement, and to the third party prohibition movement and to the National W. C. T. U. work, is likely to those who love party more than they love the Sabbath, or the church, or even God himself, to be a cooler of zeal and even to be a bar to participation in this work of the Lord.

What a pity that party politics and sectarian zeal should so weaken the force of the church and the cause of righteousness and truth. It seems to me we must send these to the winds for the sake of these vital interests of Christianity which are imperiled, and the cause of truth and righteousness which are jeopardized by lack of effort, lack of zeal, lack of unity in the cause of the Lord.

Can we doubt a moment of the superior and exceeding value of the moral and religious interests that are imperiled. As the heavens are above the earth, so is the honor of God, the crown of Christ, the supremacy of divine law and the sanctity of the Sabbath above the petty bickerings of party strife, and even the important distinctions involved in denominational organization.

AN ABLE REVIEW OF THE LODGE SYSTEM.

[From the Evangelical Repository.]

The mania for secret organizations continues. One might suppose that the world was so combined against associated effort for mutual benefit that the object could be attained only by the most closely compacted and secret affiliation. Employes seeking to secure better wages, bind themselves in secrecy. Craftsmen form brotherhoods into which initiation can be had only through bonds and signs. Beneficial associations meet with guarded doors. Farmers, feeling themselves unjustly taxed, meet in secret conclave and pledge themselves by solemn vow to measures hidden from the public view. Women, alarmed at the increasing power of the Catholic church, associate to resist it, and adopt the Jesuit's plan of secret working. Signs, passwords, oaths, mystic symbols, are the way through which men are asked to seek the better things they desire. And to make the organization more imposing, to give the greater power over its members, a religious character is commonly given to it, and within the bolted door where creed-adherents and creed-rejectors meet on common ground, believers and unbelievers call themselves brethren, bound together not by faith or hope, but by interest, "chaplain's" minister, and religious forms seem to give sanctity to the proceedings.

All this bodes no good. It springs from distrust, it is oppressive and degrading to manhood, it is dangerous to society, it is violence to the spirit and methods of the Gospel of Christ, and it is a hindrance to the coming of the day of universal right and brotherhood. The followers of Christ, the believers in the kingdom of God, the workers for the world's redemption, have no right place in secret orders. The church of the Lord Jesus should have no affiliation with them.

Secret organization rests on distrust. It assumes hostility to the purpose of the association; for if there is not such hostility, there is no necessity for the secrecy. It assumes also, that ordinary confidence cannot be placed in those interested, else why bind them under such solemn obligations? And there is distrust as to the measures adopted, else why conceal them? Is not truth mighty? Is there not a conscience to which right may appeal? Is not justice the only sure basis on which wrongs can be righted, and good purposes be established?

Secret organizations are degrading to manhood. There is a surrender of independence when a man enters an organization in which he is bound both as to his working and his wages by the order of one or a few. His work may be of his own choice, both as to conditions and hours, his wages may be entirely satisfactory, his employers may be dealing justly and generously with him, but, because some one else may have a grievance, he is compelled to lay down his work, even though his family needs every dollar he can earn, or, out of his earnings, contribute for the support of others not working. Association is legitimate and useful, but no man should enter an organization, when he must give his independence, and it may be, his conscience too, to a door keeper.

Such organizations are dangerous to society. They are a combination of the few against the many. They are inner-circles controlling the whole body. They are working for certain ends, but their methods and doings are not known. They may plot against institutions and form conspiracies, but are secure under cover of their obligations. They may paralyze industries, but they cannot be arraigned. They may commit the most horrid crimes, but the individual perpetrators are surrounded by a strong oath-bound body guard. All this has been; it is now. Secrecy fosters selfishness; it may be made to cover wrong doing, and the possession of power is a temptation to use it. And even where the extreme of crime is not reached, secret orders are dangerous in that by their nature they run lines across the God-surveyed fields of life. They separate those who should be most closely united, raising impassable barriers when there should be only bonds of love. Individuals are not free to deal with each other, and citizens are separated by secret oaths. Husbands cannot tell their wives of what they are doing. Brethren in the church must seal their lips at a certain point. The humble church member cannot consult his pastor concerning one section of his life. The church of God is shut out from inquiry concerning the doings of its members when they meet in the oath-guarded room. It invites them to fellowship at the table of the Lord, but they who are members of secret orders come hiding part of their lives from others. They are bound by other covenants and hasten to have fellowship with unbelievers in religious forms from which the name of their Lord is excluded. All such orders "are inconsistent with the genius and spirit of Christianity, and church members ought not to have fellowship with them." Can we for a moment imagine our Lord Christ entering such associations, however seemingly good the avowed object? He spoke openly. We are called to be his disciples, his followers and his witnesses to the ends of the earth.

It is the name of Jesus that will command the adoration of the world. It is by the Word of Christ that freedom will be proclaimed to all men. His love is the Gospel to the poor, and in him, and in him alone, will be the millennium of love and right. The oath that profanes his name, the secret order that separates his people is a hindrance to its coming.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

A meeting at the Bethany Mission—An encouraging testimony—Some startling facts for Puritan New England—A novel College Society—The Baroness Von Voss—The ice-crop in New England.

The first of a series of meetings to be held in different localities of Boston in the interest of the N. E. C. A. was held on Monday evening of this week at Bethany Mission, No. 6 Canal street, and gave the writer a chance long desired for a nearer acquaintance with the wonderful work carried on by Miss M. L. Richards, a young woman; the result of whose self-sacrificing labors among drinking men and fallen women reads almost like a romance, so full is it of the triumphs of faith over the seemingly impossible. Miss Richards has a fine, strong face, and much energy of movement combined with that utter lack of self-consciousness which marks a life wholly consecrated to Jesus. As I clasped her hand I thought how many souls cast forth to be trampled as the mire of the street have been rescued by her earnest efforts, to shine in his crown at last as gems of the first water; and my whole heart went out in homage,—not to her, but to that Spirit of divine love within her which inspired so Christlike a work.

The hall has a nice chapel organ, its walls are adorned with neat mottoes, and it wears an attractive, home-like look. Like the heavenly Jerusalem—of which it always seemed to me our earthly places of worship should be at least a faint shadow—its doors stand open day and night, ready to welcome any who may want temporal or spiritual aid. I cannot but accept it as an earnest of God's blessing on our cause that this inaugural meeting should be held in a place thus consecrated to the pure work of the Gospel which the lodge everywhere, though not always openly, antagonizes.

Our General Agent had been called away to Maine, but his place was ably filled. Evangelist William F. Davis took charge of the meeting and spoke telling words for the truth, after which Mrs. Stoddard was introduced and gave some account of the work, dwelling especially on the anti-Christian features of the lodge, and the importance of bravely opposing this system of evil ere it completely undermines the church. Mrs. Stoddard is a good public speaker, earnest and forcible; and I trust that many of our New England W. C. T. U.'s will have a chance to hear her calm, clear, logical presentation of the subject. Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason was present and made one of her most interesting addresses, full of mingled wit and pathos. A testimony to the truth of what had been said was given by a seceding Freemason in the audience; and a converted Jew, who is about to start a mission in Boston among his people, said that what he had learned about secret societies that evening made him think they must be similar to Judaism, as both systems rejected Jesus Christ.

There were several members of the Chambers Street church present, and Bro. Davis paid a touching tribute to their lamented pastor, David McFall, and contrasted his noble and fearless record with the general cowardice of his brethren in the ministry on this subject. At the close of his remarks he asked all present who were willing to openly oppose this enemy of Christ, to stand up; and the entire audience rose to their feet as one man,—certainly a very strong testimony to the power of the truth sinking into honest hearts.

Our General Agent has hit on the right plan to leaven this lodge-ridden city. New England has long needed just this aggressive work. It is said that one-fourth of the Congregational pulpits of Vermont are without a permanent supply; one half the population is unchurched. The Louisiana Lottery draws annually from Boston $600,000, and of course from the hard earnings of the poor, who are thus made to support what Anthony Comstock well calls "a millionaire robbery scheme." But it is safe to say that if the lodge had not so largely usurped the place of the church the first statement could never have been made; and if it had not brought in its own system of morals, and familiarized the people through the secret endowment orders with the idea of getting a pile of money without earning it, this nefarious business could never have gained such a foothold. But New England may yet, if she will, recover her ancient glory. It depends upon the attitude which her Christian people take in relation to this Baal worship. Will they listen to the new Elijahs raised up by God to expose and denounce its secret shrines of darkness? New England's day of grace is not yet past,—at least we so hope and believe.

Speaking of Wellesley, Fraulein Ida Bothe, late instructor in Art at the College, some of whose beautiful productions adorn the gallery of the Farnsworth Art Building, is soon to sail for her native Germany, and become the Baroness Von Voss. She was a lovely woman as well as accomplished artist, and made herself many friends. Wellesley can now plume herself on having a real live Baroness among her former faculty. It looks as if it might take another half century at least to eradicate our American love of titles.

"Wild, wintry March" made his bow and departed in a series of snow squalls. Now we are enjoying delicious spring weather. There will be no ice famine next summer if reports are true. Vermont has harvested more than a million tons of ice; and Maine, it is said, makes $600,000 from her ice crop, and, indeed, will practically supply the country. The result of our unusually mild winters will be to open up fresh pastures in the extreme north of New England, and add a new source of income to the scattered population of those districts.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

Two widely-separated sun-dials bear inscriptions, which, brought into association, blend into a gospel of hope and cheer that well deserves to be believed and practiced. One of them stands beside the grave of Theodore Winthrop, in New Haven, Conn., and bears the inscription, "I mark only the bright hours." The other stands upon the pier at Brighton, England, and on it is graven the hopeful line, "'Tis always morning somewhere in the world." All hours are bright hours to him who believes that God will be true to his word; and for the Christian the day-dawn is continuous. Every noon is the preparation for a brighter day; and every sunset its prelude.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

AMONG THE CHURCHES OF MAINE.

CORINNA, Me., April 18, 1890.

Leaving Boston on the 12th instant, I reached Dexter at 6 p. m. Bro. Gould met me at the depot, and at his hospitable home I met a most cordial welcome. Two services on Sabbath, though not largely attended, were "times of refreshing." Monday was spent visiting business places and a few homes, conversing and giving such literature as seemed to be required. I was told that the lodge was very strong in that village, and that any opposition would be met with great bitterness. Some church members said it was no detriment to their piety; others thought differently.

One to whom I handed an "Age of Lodges" said, "I am a Mason."

I asked, "Are you a Christian?"

"Yes," was the prompt reply, "and Christ was a Mason."

I spoke of the stripping, and then of the "Hiram Abiff" tragedy in the third degree, and said, "Do you really believe that Christ was initiated in that way?"

"Yes," said he. "He was a regularly-made Mason."

I expressed some surprise at his credulity; called the attention of bystanders to the admissions he had made, and passed on.

On Tuesday morning I visited Bro. Joseph Smith, of this place, who has been a long-time reader of the Cynosure, and has both zeal and knowledge in opposing the secret lodge. Together we called on Elder House, and after conference with a few brethren it was arranged for me to speak at "Fast-day" services on the 17th.

Returning to Dexter I met again for worship with the little company that gathered on Tuesday evening in an "upper room" where "prayer is wont to be made." A protracted effort had for some days been in progress in the Free Baptist house of worship, with very indifferent results. I attended and took part in two of the services. At the close a lady excusing herself for accosting a stranger, said, "Won't you pray for my husband? He used to be an active Christian, but has lost all interest in the church and religion." I learned later that he is a leading spirit in the Masonic church, and a devout worshiper at the altar of Baal. I chanced to hear one of the preachers say, "You need to take a higher degree," alluding to three links conspicuous on the man's necktie. I said, "No, my friend, what you need is not another degree in the lodge, but to be sanctified and purified in the blood of Christ, and then you will have no use for the skeleton and cross-bones of your orders." The preacher replied, "Odd-fellowship is all right; but he needs the higher degree," referring, as I suppose, to the new birth. Is it strange that such preachers labor in vain, or that the dupes of such blind guides follow their leader through the lodge straight to perdition?

Elder House conveyed me from his home to the depot on Thursday, and at 2 p. m. I preached with freedom to a fair audience in the Christian church house. An evening service was held, with a good degree of interest, at which the attendance was diminished by a school exhibition in the hall near by.

Arrangements have been made for me to speak this evening and to-morrow evening, and twice on Lord's day. The Masonic body is one hundred strong in this village, and there are eight Masons in the church where I speak, but brethren who believe in free discussion, and have the courage of their convictions, hold the keys.

J. P. STODDARD.

PRESIDENT C. A. BLANCHARD SPEAKS IN IOWA.

HOPKINTON, Iowa, April 17, 1890.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—This community has recently been greatly favored with the presence of Pres. C. A. Blanchard of Wheaton College, Ill., and much instructed by his able and very enjoyable lectures while here. Two of these, devoted to the topic of secret orders, were eagerly heard by good audiences, with an interest earnest and unceasing as the speaker advanced; the prevailing impression being that his theme was well understood, and treated in a manner fully convincing and clearly conclusive, as proved by Scripture, reason and common sense.

Attention has been aroused; free, and perhaps somewhat full, discussion of the subject has resulted; and we trust the good seed so faithfully sown will take root, be watered and bear fruit in this community.

A little boy returning home after one of the lectures said to his mother, "When I grow a big man, I don't want to be a Mason." Another said, "Mamma, however did they come to start those silly lodges that Mr. Blanchard told about? I can't see any sense in them."

Judging from current report, older boys, and men even, have reached similar conclusions. The fathers and older men may be "joined to their idols," but the sons, the impressionable youth, are open to conviction; they will see, and by God's grace more readily grasp the truth. O! for more Blanchards lovingly and fearlessly to proclaim it.

Pres. Blanchard while here also preached an awakening and impressive missionary sermon in the Reformed Presbyterian church, Rev. T. H. Acheson, pastor. It was a season of spiritual refreshing to all who were privileged to hear. May the blessing rest with the speaker, abide with the word spoken, and speed the cause he so ably advocates; and send him soon again for a longer time with us, is the sincere wish of many.

COM.

LECTURES IN THE METROPOLIS.

April 17, 1890. }

DEAR CYNOSURE:—As we behold the surging millions of this vast metropolis pushing hither and yon in their eagerness of a little of earth's glitter and pleasure, and know some of the giant forces for evil at work, we feel our inability to do much for the crying need. Yet we remember God can use the little we have to offer to his name's glory. All reforms, humanly speaking, have had feeble beginnings. The many reform pebbles now being cast in the ocean of public sentiment will produce an agitation, which, with God's blessing, will penetrate the whole. Viewing the present in the light of the past, who can predict what the future will bring? My reception here has been with kindness on every hand. The following appointments have been made: 1st Reformed Presbyterian church, Rev. J. C. K. Milligan, pastor, April 20, afternoon; 2nd R. P. church, Rev. R. M. Summerville, pastor, May 4th, evening; 3rd R. P. church, Rev. F. M. Foster, pastor, April 25th, evening. Lectures for other churches are partially arranged.

The lecture I gave in the Free Methodist church, Brooklyn, last evening, was received with enthusiasm. I hope to comply with the request to return and speak there again soon. Rev. Geo. Eakins, the beloved pastor of this people, gives the Gospel trumpet no uncertain sound on the reforms of the day. Robert Graham, who runs the "Church of England Temperance Society," opposite the Cooper Institute, says he is a Knight Templar, and prides himself as the originator of the high license system of New York. We should naturally mistrust this system had come from one who had drank wine from a human skull in a Knights Templar lodge. More anon.

W. B. STODDARD.

CORRESPONDENCE.

AMONG THE REFORMERS OF SOUTHERN INDIANA.

ANDERSON, Ind., April 15, 1890.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—The M. E. congregation in Goshen, O., arranged for a course of lectures this spring with a view of raising a fund for their Sabbath-school library. By invitation I delivered the first one last Friday evening, on the subject of "The Responsibility of Nations." The pastor, Rev. Mr. Weaver, is arranging other appointments for me. After the lecture I rode home with an old college friend, John Wade. He has a fine farm some two miles out. We sat talking reforms until 1 o'clock. At 4 A.M. we got up and drove seven miles to Loveland, where we met the train at 6:20.

On Saturday evening I lectured in Earlham College, Richmond, Ind. This was my third visit. It is more pleasant each time. The reporter of the Palladium gave an extended account of the talk. On Sabbath I preached in the Presbyterian church morning and evening, the pastor, Rev. I. M. Hughes, D.D., being absent. Monday morning I attended the chapel exercises at Earlham, and by the invitation of President Mills, made an address, not failing to call attention to the crown rights and royal prerogatives of the Lord Jesus Christ.

On Monday evening I lectured in the Presbyterian church on "The Liquor Traffic." This meeting was held under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. Mrs. Dennis presided. Rev. Hills of the Friends' church conducted the devotional exercises. The Union here is strong and wide awake. I am more and more confirmed in the conviction that the reforms of the day depend very much upon the courage and devotion of the women. Mrs. Livermore relates that "the ancient Athenians built a temple to Minerva. They left a niche for her statue. Two sculptors competed for the privilege of filling it. The day came for the prize to be awarded. The first was unveiled. It was beautiful, perfect. But when elevated, it was too small, like a baby doll. The second was unveiled. It was complete as the other and larger. When elevated it filled the niche and received the prize. Phidias was crowned. The first is the woman of the present diminished by legal and social restrictions. The second is the woman of the future, free, perfect."

J. M. FOSTER.

FROM A BRAVE NEW ENGLAND WOMAN.

WARE, Mass., April 12, 1890.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—At Ware and surrounding neighborhoods war is declared on those that dare open their mouths against organized secrecy, yet we have determined to fight it out on this same line, if it is to the end of life's journey, and then we expect, in the providence of God, some one will step in and fill our places.

One of the hoodwinked fraternity says he regrets the position I have taken very much, and that letting in that anti-secret meeting in my grove is a very great detriment to my financial affairs, and will greatly hinder my enterprise in the "resort business" for years to come. "None of these things move" me, for my trust is in God, and not in secret organizations. My principles are not in the market, and cannot be bought at any price. When God converted me he took away that man-fearing and man-pleasing spirit to a great extent, and I thank him for it. When I know my cause is just, and is in accordance with the Word and will of God, I set my face as a flint toward, and the powers of darkness cannot prevail against me, for God is my refuge. "We decided years ago not to go where the crowd went," but to go with those that had principle enough to go where God led them.

The unprincipled lodge element is about as dangerous to handle as nitro-glycerine or dynamite, and the less we have of it the better we are off, yet I don't propose, for one, to keep silent and let them draw in all that comes in their pathway, but shall lift up my voice and sound the alarm.

Inquiries are being made in regard to future meetings of the New England Association, and many have requested me not to fail to give them notice if any more meetings of this kind are held in my grove. If I am to judge by expressions made, the heaven is working, and the powers of darkness are being stirred, while honest inquirers after truth are not entirely asleep, yet there seems to be a fear to come out boldly and take a stand for truth and righteousness.

We are looking for a lively campaign during the next few months on the reform issues of the day; and while for months past affliction, loss and severe trial have been our lot, yet the Lord has wonderfully sustained us and kept us from getting entirely discouraged, and those dear ones who have "lent a helping hand" in these hours of need, when our family has been prostrated by sickness, have not been forgotten at a throne of grace. In answer to their many prayers God has done great things for us, whereof we rejoice. Let us not be weary in well doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not.

MRS. L. M. HOYT.

DOWN WITH ALL LICENSES.

YORK, Pa.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—I hope we shall soon see the American anti-secret party taking a strong position to combat the entire license system; for it is un-American, anti-republican, Romish, unreasonable, oppressive and demoralizing.

During the rebellion we tolerated it under protest, as the government needed all the money it could get; but all true lovers of civil liberty should now make a stand against it. The politicians are all in favor of licenses and all sorts of taxes, solely because they keep all the public treasuries overflowing with money, which in due time flows into their capacious pockets, and those of their family, relatives and friends. There is now in all towns, counties, States and everywhere, a very large class, continually growing larger, which lives, flourishes and even grows wealthy on the overflow of all our public treasuries.

I do not know of any evil that is more demoralizing than a public pile of greenbacks, gold and silver. It makes the old soldier feel as if he had been shot all over and disabled tetotally, a big pension being the only remedy. And it forms a basis for millions of promises from the politicians who need soldiers' and sailors' votes to get into a position where they can get at the public moneybags, "for the good of the order."

Thousands of old veterans who voted for Harrison on the politician's frantic promise to pay, are now in a suitable frame of mind to read anti-secret articles on the tricks of Jesuitic statesmen and the wonderful believing capacity of hopeful old soldiers and sailors.

FOX-HUNTER.

PITH AND POINT.

FARMERS AND LODGERY IN MISSOURI.

The farmers' lodges are successfully hoodwinking the rank and file out here and it is hard to buy or sell without the mark of the beast. At the A— mill they have been discriminating twenty cents per hundred on flour against us outsiders. I broke that up. But they discriminate in a thousand ways. The labor vote will divide and neutralize prohibition—and many believe it will, in a large measure, divert public discussion of the saloon question.—B.

DR. THOMAS AND PROFESSOR SWING ON INSPIRATION AND LOGICAL RELIGION.

We couple these gentlemen because we find them expressing similar sentiments in one of our secular journals. Dr. Thomas "believes thoroughly in inspiration," and says, "that without inspiration he would himself be as nothing." But when such inspiration leads him to affirm that "the Greek philosophy has never been surpassed," we wonder if he forgot that wonderful one, Jesus of Nazareth, whose Gospel was to the Greeks foolishness. And when he adds that "the Greeks were a line of preparation for Christianity as much as were the Hebrews," we are compelled to ask if he thinks his own inspiration better than the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures which teach the very opposite? Verily, Christians have great need to-day to obey their Master's command, "Take heed that no man deceive you, for many shall come in my name saying, I am Christ and shall deceive many. If they shall say, Behold, he is in the desert, go not forth. Behold, he is in the secret chambers, believe it not," Matt. 24. Probably the grand new Masonic million dollar temple, when built, will select its chaplains from such teachers of Christianity as Swing and Thomas.

FROM A BROTHER EDITOR.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I very much appreciate the work you are doing; and I am constantly realizing, more and more, the great need of such reading matter widespread among the people. Our own paper is designed more particularly to cover the direct work of revivals, and mission work, but we are also contributing our mite to help on the anti-lodge work of reform.—ALONZO A. HOYT, Publisher Independent Christian, Littleton, N. H.

KEPT FROM THE FOLD.

I feel great interest in the reform movement. I have been watching the secret societies in our town of Traer for a few years, and I think they are keeping a few people out of the church. The Freemasons and Odd-fellows are giving annual suppers and inviting their friends. This, I am afraid, is heading many into the lodge. May God bless the anti-secrecy movement.—D. M. STUART, Traer, Iowa.

LITERATURE.

THRILLING INCIDENTS IN THE POLITICAL LIFE OF AN ITALIAN. Including Travels in Africa and Syria. By Francesco Urgos, an officer in the army of Garibaldi. Sold by Louis Lange, Jr., and Co., 370 Dearborn Street, Chicago; price $1.00.

The author of this volume of personal adventure and suffering was a young Italian of rank and wealth, and his narrative, which is, indeed, a thrilling one and almost past belief, is vouched for by gentlemen of probity. In 1847, Urgos, then fifteen years old, was placed by his infatuated Catholic parents in the hands of the priests to be educated for their profession. But already the dawn of the new light of liberty was glowing in Italy, and when one of the priests put a Bible in his hand and directed him in its study, he immediately accepted the truth and forsook Rome. He was banished from his home, entered the Piedmontese army, and afterward joined Garibaldi, at the time of his first attempt to liberate Rome in 1849. The effort was for a time successful. The people were aroused for liberty; the Pope fled, and the horrible dungeons of the Inquisition with their instruments of torture were thrown open. The description of them by Mr. Urgos, first as a visitor and afterward as a prisoner, almost passes belief. His sufferings were terrible, but by the aid of powerful friends he escaped to France, whose army had already overthrown Garibaldi and restored the Pope. He then traveled for some months with Lord Arnold, an English nobleman, who was also a friend and benefactor to the young Italian. Returning to Italy he was seized and banished. In this country he was still followed by Jesuit fiends, who destroyed his sight by poison and at various times sought his life. The personal adventures are of thrilling interest and the sketches of travel very instructive. No one who buys and reads this book will regret the expense or forget the story. It is largely, also, by such narratives of actual suffering that our people must be roused, if they are roused at all, to put down the dangerous secret order of the Jesuits in America.

The May Missionary Review presents several papers of great interest. The leading one, by Dr. Geo. Wm. Knox, of Tokyo, Japan, though long, will repay the most careful reading. It is an incisive and intelligent review of the chief political and other changes which occurred in Japan in 1889. It gives, by far, the clearest and fullest view of the remarkable changes wrought and in progress, and of the present condition and outlook of things, that has been given to the public by any other writer. His brother's article on "Personal Observations in Brazil" is equally interesting, and sheds an interesting light on the Revolution which has recently occurred there. But it makes no mention of the power of the Masonic lodge in the change. Dr. Knox was sent there by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian church, in 1888, to organize the Presbyterian Synod of Brazil, and had personal intercourse with many of the leaders, and witnessed the incipient steps which led up to the change of government. Not less stirring in interest is Dr. Pierson's Letter, sketching his Missionary tour in England during the month of January. Dr. Morrow continues his valuable historical account of Foreign Missions in the Seventeenth and Eighteenth Centuries. Dr. Ellinwood's article on "Shadowings of Messiah in Heathen Systems" shows careful and profound study of the religions of the world.

In answer to inquiries concerning George Kennan's articles, the editor of the Century states that the concluding papers in Mr. Kennan's series of Siberian Travels were interrupted by the author's illness and by his succeeding course of lectures. Mr. Kennan has, however, prepared brief articles on the general subject for the April and May Century, and hopes soon to be able to write one or two more papers concluding his Siberian and Russian travels. The latter will appear later in the year. In the May Century Mr. Kennan will have an article entitled "Blackened Out," in which he describes the methods of the Russian Press Censor. Two pages of the Century for August, 1889, are reproduced in fac simile, showing how the Censor endeavored to prevent Mr. Kennan's article in that number from being read in Russia.

LODGE NOTES.

While on her way to a Masonic meeting last Thursday evening, April 10, Mrs. C. G. Folsom, of South Bend, Ind., died of heart trouble. Her mother died suddenly some years ago while en route to a Masonic meeting.

In New York, April 11, 1,400 men involving all the builders, struck, claiming that the walking delegates were denied the privilege of entering buildings to examine union men's cards. The strike was called off to-day, the builders agreeing to the ceremonies. This is regarded as a victory for the union.

Three hundred delegates, representing the brotherhoods of locomotive engineers, firemen, brakemen, and switchmen, met in Elmira, N. Y., lately, with a few members of the new order of railway conductors, and discussed and adopted a scheme of federation between all the organizations of trainmen in the United States. Delegates were also present from Buffalo, Jersey City, New York, Hoboken, and many places in Pennsylvania and Ohio. There were two secret meetings during the day and a public meeting was held in the opera house. Grand Master Sargent, of the Firemen's Brotherhood; Grand Conductor Howard, Grand Master Wilkinson, of the Brakemen's Brotherhood, and others, spoke.

The Manchester (N. H.) Mirror says: "We have inquiries verbal and written as to how several of the mutual benefit orders that are flourishing in this city manage to let their members take out of their treasuries $2 or $3 for every one they put in. Frankly, we don't know. It has been explained to us a dozen times, and still we know as little about it as at first. This is probably our fault or that of our education, which was to the effect that two and two are four and no more, but we can't help it. The new process of financing, which makes the sum six or eight, is beyond our comprehension; too deep for our understanding, too complicated for our ciphering, and those who want to know about it must go elsewhere. Don't ask us."

The last meeting of the Grand Lodge of Elks decided by vote that the next meeting should be in Cleveland. It was afterward discovered that the lodge holds its charter from the State of New York, which does not admit of meetings being held outside of the State. A friendly suit has been decided on. Louis C. Waehner, who has been Exalted Grand Ruler of the lodge, will ask the Supreme Court, on behalf of another member, to grant an injunction restraining Grand Secretary A. C. Moreland from taking the seal of the lodge out of the State. If the injunction is granted, as Mr. Waehner thinks it will be, the next step will probably be for the Exalted Grand Ruler to call a special meeting in this city to decide on a new course of action.

A local paper in San Jose, Cal., says: "The Pastors' Union, at its session March 10th, passed resolutions protesting against the lottery scheme which had been proposed to raise money to pay the bills of the Grand Army Encampment. A country which will not discourage gambling is hardly worth saving, and a veteran who will consent to be fed on the fragments of a prize ball is not of much credit to his country or to the soldiers' professions. Not one dollar in ten, however, of all the money spent in such schemes ever goes beyond the newspapers that advertise them, and the other enormous expense bills. Why cannot a city be as decent in its combined movements as its average ideal of respectability? We hope no Christian lady will be drawn into this trap set by his Satanic majesty and thinly gauzed over by this appeal to hospitality."

For the delicate and aged and all in whom the vital current is impoverished and sluggish, Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the very best tonic. It restores the wasted tissues, and imparts to the system surprising elasticity and vigor. Price $1. Worth $5 a bottle.

CONCERNING PREMIUMS.

We offer premiums to compensate such of our subscribers as take the pains and trouble to secure new subscribers to the Cynosure. Many who do this refuse to receive pay, and work because they love the work; others are glad to receive premiums. But,

Second, We do not offer a premium to a new subscriber to hire him to take the paper. When he has subscribed for the paper and paid for it himself, and knows its worth, then if he will take the trouble to introduce the paper to others, he can have a premium on the new subscription, but not on his own.

Third, We do not offer a premium where one member of a family stops the paper, and another member of the same family subscribes for it. We do not consider such a name the name of a new subscriber.

Any book we publish or sell can be had as a premium at reasonable rates. We will allow thirty cents' worth of any of our publications, at retail rates, postpaid, for one dollar's worth of new subscriptions to the Cynosure.

The Christian Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, APRIL 24, 1890.

THE HISTORIC NATURE OF THE CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

IN THE FIRST M. E. CHURCH, CHICAGO, APRIL 22, 1890.

Charles I. of England, the first monarch ever executed for treason against his subjects, was beheaded in 1664. From that time till the Revolution of 1688, a period of thirty-nine years, when the "Bill of Rights" was enacted by Parliament, and the Prince of Orange called to the throne, there was one long agony. Charles's queen was a papist, governed by the Pope. She in turn ruled the king, and the king ruled the people till his head fell from the block.

"Puritans" was a name given to the opponents of popish ceremonies substituted for religion, and the despotism which enforced them. The name arose as far back as Elizabeth, and the separation began by the refusal of the robe prescribed to bishops. But the Puritans refused to kneel at communion because they held it to be worshipping the wafer. They would not cross themselves because it was a piece of conjuring to keep off the devil, and a part of a system of salvation by ceremonies invented by men. And for this refusal many of the best men England ever saw were tortured worse than by North American savages. The father of the amiable Archbishop Leighton, June 4, 1630, was sentenced to prison for life; to be fined £10,000; brought out of prison to a pillory, whipped, his ear cut off and his nose slit on one side; and after a few days pilloried again and his other ear cut off, his nose slit on the other side, and he was then kept in prison till he could scarcely see or walk. This was but a specimen of what numbers suffered. And when Leighton's sentence was read in court, Bishop Laud pulled off his cap and gave thanks to God for it!

Of the Puritans, Knox was a Presbyterian; Cromwell a Congregationalist; and many of both sects became Baptists. David Hume, the historian, wrote concerning them, that "by them alone the precious spark of liberty had been kindled and was preserved; to whom the English owe the whole freedom of their constitution." Brougham and Lord Macaulay utter the same testimony in almost the same words. And Vincent Milner says their sufferings under Elizabeth and the Stuarts led to their founding a new empire (America) in the Western World.

To prove our United States the product of Puritanism needs only a glance at their history and principles. Our Constitution forbids not only to Congress, but even to State Legislatures, the conferring of titles and badges of nobility, such as distinguish the men of caste and privilege from the rest of mankind.

But the present Conference is "Christian," and the denominations who compose it hold the Bible to be their only law for their faith and worship. This is pre-eminently true of those who are called Congregationalists. In the words of their apologist Bradshaw in the days of Elizabeth, "They hold and maintain the absolute perfection of the Holy Scriptures, both as to faith and worship," and that all ceremonies not warranted by Scripture are "unlawful." And, "To institute and ordain any mystical rites or ceremonies of religion; and to mingle the same with the divine rites and ceremonies of God's ordinance, is gross superstition." (Neal's History, I., 248.)

Now the rites and ceremonies of secret lodges, almost all of which have altars like those of the pagans, are condemned and excluded as sinful substitutes for Christ's atonement by the fundamental principles of all the denominations represented in the present Conference; and hence their uniting in this convention foretokens the answer to our Saviour's prayer, that they all may be one in him.

THE HOME GUARD.—The new tract-paper, by Miss Flagg and Mrs. Stoddard, has appeared from Boston. We hail it as a notable addition to the agencies for reform. It is the property and the work of the women of the National Christian Association. Its special work is to enlighten American women upon the dangers that threaten their homes and the churches of which they have the largest proportion of the membership; to show them what snares wait for husbands and brothers in the secret lodge; and to arouse in them that noble enthusiasm for the true and holy, which, through the W. C. T. U. and other organizations, made this generation notable in the world's history. This little monthly sheet must not be judged by its size, but by its power. It springs from the suggestion of Bro. Gladwin. It is sent out with many prayers that its mission may not be in vain. The Home Guard is published at 309 Tremont St., Boston, by Mrs. A. E. Stoddard, at 15 cents per year, or ten copies for a dollar. Let all our N. C. A. women try it.

A GREAT SWEDE.

We became acquainted with Dr. Hasselquist at Galesburg, Ill., on his arrival in the United States, now near forty years ago. He and Rev. Mr. Esbjorn, father of the professor at Augustana College, Rock Island, were among the earliest arrivals of the Scandinavians in that part of Illinois, and were frequent guests at our house. Mrs. Blanchard predicted for them great usefulness and success in our country, and events have confirmed her judgment, and proved her wisdom and discernment. At first there were but one or two small churches in that whole region. Now the Augustana Synod numbers nearly or quite one hundred thousand members on its church books. Esbjorn died, and Dr. Hasselquist has been the leader and representative of our Scandinavian population, which have no superiors, if even equals, in the millions of our foreign population. Indeed, Sweden may be considered the northern lights of the nations. The Reformation of Luther destroyed (says Rebold's General History of Masonry) all but three or four of the lodges of operative Masons on the continent of Europe; and Sweden was blessed with a poor soil, good climate, and a pious people. Of between four and five millions of people all are Protestant Christians but about two thousand Roman Catholics and one thousand Jews. The country was so fortunate as to obtain for her king the only one of Napoleon's marshals (Bernadotte) who had the capacity and courage to differ with his autocratic master, and to oppose his mad scheme of universal empire.

But the grand crowning mercy of Sweden, Norway and Finland, was the presence of Christ and the absence of false altars. While the Pilgrims and their immediate descendants were chopping down the American forests, priests kept aloof. No Masonic lodge existed in the United States till 1733; one hundred and thirteen years from the landing at Plymouth. Then there was money in Boston, and a lodge was formed there, which is now throwing down God's altars and setting up those of Baal.

But two-thirds of Scandinavia are still mountain and forest. No country was so thoroughly reformed from popery; and though their king and court bishops have some of them now been stripped and sworn into lodges, in no country is Masonry so thoroughly abhorred as in Sweden. This explains its production of such men as the good Dr. Hasselquist. But the lodge is now "snaking its way" into the Scandinavian churches, and nothing will prevent their ruin but that which casts out devils, viz., "Prayer and fasting." Moses, Elijah, and all the prophets directed their sternest denunciations against man-invented false worship, and the reformer kings executed them. But in the days of those reformers the world was moving toward the crucifixion of Christ; and hence the destruction of Palestine. But it is now on the way to his triumph. "For he must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet." Will not Dr. Hasselquist prepare an address to his Scandinavian brethren, that may be circulated by millions, to aid them in saving their own churches and the land which they have chosen for their home?

—At the First Congregational church in this city, on Sabbath evening, Dr. Goodwin preached a special sermon to the Senior class of Chicago Theological Seminary. Most of the students of the institution were present to hear the strong announcement of the Conference, which all were urged to attend.

LODGE CHAPLAINS.

The W. C. T. U. organ of Rock county, Wis., in many respects an excellent little paper, yet has a Good Templar department. In this lately appeared the following:

What is the duty of a chaplain in the Good Templar lodge? The answer is ready in a moment. To lead the devotional exercises, of course. I wish to ask, can any one but a Christian be chaplain? Is it not mockery to install any person but a Christian for this office, and is it not worse than mockery for anyone but a Christian to lead these exercises? If you have a minister of the Gospel in your lodge it is certainly more fitting to have him for chaplain, or if not, elect some other person who has the cause of Christ at heart. It is a shame, that in some lodges a chaplain is elected and installed and performs these duties who does not even profess religion.

By a universally-recognized principle in all the secret orders, one who is eligible to membership is eligible to the office of chaplain. The fault lies not in the selection of the officer, but in the inherent nature of the system. It is an insurmountable objection to Good Templarism that its chaplain is always liable to be one who knows nothing of the nature of prayer. We do not wonder that unconverted people join such societies, but surely Christians have no right to connect themselves with an order that habitually makes a mockery of prayer.

THE ENGLISH IN SCHOOLS.

An esteemed Lutheran pastor in Ohio thinks the Cynosure misconceives the position of the Lutheran church in some previous notices of the compulsory school laws of Illinois and Wisconsin.

There is just now such a rush into print of friends and opposers of these enactments, such a crowding of the issue into party politics, and such a mass of explanations by editors who write with one eye on the success of their party and the other on their subscription list, that many are liable to be confused and decide the case from prejudice or favoritism rather than by the better rule of patriotism, justice and religion. In many Illinois towns last week the school elections turned on this issue, and it must be regretted that the real state of the case, as we understand it, is much obscured by the efforts of Catholic priests or by prejudice for or against foreign ideas and languages.

We have before us the statement of the German Lutherans of Chicago, also of a conference at La Porte, Ind., and also a pamphlet issued by members of the Illinois District of the Missouri Synod. These statements are, in general, patriotic in tone, approve compulsory education and instruction in the English language. But they charge that the laws violate the constitutional rights of conscience, in that they give to every school board too great authority of interference in the church schools.

As we read the laws they require every child of suitable age to have, in Illinois sixteen weeks', and in Wisconsin twelve weeks' instruction in a few common branches in the English language. This instruction may be given in the public school, the parochial or private school or at home. There may be some ambiguity of language in one or two points in both laws, which can be remedied much more easily if a great quarrel is not raised first, and the issue of foreigner or American is not needlessly made supreme; but the intent of each law seems to be patriotic and should be approved by all who love American institutions.

As we understand the law it should not interfere with any parochial school unless such school should be continuous during the year and refuses to teach the required amount of English. Our Lutheran friends seem to agree that such a case would call for interference. The point is, shall there be any inquiry by public officers to know whether the law is observed in the church or private school. Evidently this power must rest in some person or persons, and there is more danger that they will be negligent, than officious.

That such a law is needed is proved by the case of Wheaton, where two well-qualified gentlemen were defeated by the efforts of the Catholic priest, because they would make no promises respecting his church school except that they would agree to obey the laws of the State.

N. C. A. BOARD MEETING.

A special meeting of the Board was held on Saturday morning at the call of the chairman. There were present brethren Thomson, Hitchcock, Whipple, Sutcliffe, Milton, Richards, Worrell and Barlow. After an opening prayer by Elder Barlow, the report of the special committee on the Chicago Conference was read and its suggestions generally adopted, with thanks to the committee, and especially to President C. A. Blanchard and W. I. Phillips. It was arranged that the report of the addresses at the conference should be put in the hands of a committee for publication. The committee on railroads and hotels also reported. The treasurer reported that furniture not needed in the Washington building had been ordered to be sold as soon as possible.

The proposal of Bro. W. J. Gladwin for an agent in California was heard with interest. It was voted that correspondence be had immediately with friends in California, and with Mr. Nichols, the worker suggested by Bro. Gladwin in reference to this important matter.

The donation by Anna Augustine, widow of John Augustine, of Abilene, Kansas, of a tract of 160 acres of land in Morris county, in that State, was reported, and W. I. Phillips was voted as trustee as named in the deed of the property.

The Building Committee reported that considerable repairs had been made on the Carpenter building, comprising the entire refitting of the basement. A committee was appointed to confer with Rev. J. N. Bedford, of Wheaton, and engage him until the annual meeting.

—We are pleased to note the growing interest in the discussion of the tobacco curse. The United Presbyterian, the Free Methodist, the Advance, and the Church Union all have articles against it in current numbers.

—The Gospel Banner of Berlin, province of Ontario, organ of the Mennonite Brethren in Christ, prints an able paper on the lodge, read by Elder A. Good before the ministerial Association at Harrisburg, Ohio, on the 11th ult.

—A. F. Smith, who acted as local agent for the Cynosure at Nashville, Tenn., has removed from that city and will not return for a year or more. Friends who have been sending him papers for distribution will please remember this change.

—Anti-masons should study exactness. When we most speak the truth of the lodge we are loudest accused of falsehood. Let us give no occasion to our enemy. A Bro. Eastman writing excellently in the Wesleyan Methodist makes the mistake of attributing to Daniel Webster the language of Nathaniel Colver; to Lord Beaconsfield that of John Quincy Adams, and to Dr. Colver that of Prof. Moses Stuart. These testimonies are so widely and well known that such a mistake ought not to occur.

—In the April 10th number of the Cynosure was an article on "Fraternity Insurance" by Rev. Howard S. Wilson. By some oversight this article was not credited to the United Presbyterian, from which it was taken. It is our purpose always to give due credit for borrowed articles, and do as we would be done by. In a number of instances of late we have noticed in several exchanges great carelessness in giving due credit to the Cynosure for articles copied from our columns, some of which were prepared at much expense of time and labor.

—The Free Methodist conference meeting in Canada has adopted the following radical conclusion: "We are aware that one of our most subtle foes is found in oath-bound secretism. Let none be deceived by their boasted benevolence. We are satisfied that selfishness is at the bottom of the whole affair; and we would especially warn young men against their vicious schemes to bind them in their hidden chains, such as life insurance schemes, by which they hope to hold them fast by first securing their money, which is to be forfeited in case they leave the order or expose their shams."

PERSONAL NOTES.

—The Midland reports Dr. William Johnston of College Springs, Iowa, as still in a critical condition; but the hope of his recovery is increasing.

—Bro. H. H. Hinman reached Chicago on Tuesday last, and has been with us in the office for a week. He expects to revisit his family in Oberlin after the Conference of this week. He is quite engaged in preparing for the church union conference in Dayton next month.

—Bro. E. W. Shaw, who has been laboring in Michigan for the N. C. A. for several months, returned to Chicago last Thursday to attend and to address the Conference. But on the Sabbath he was attacked by the measles, and must bear the double disappointment of losing the Conference with Christian fortitude.

—A pleasant anniversary was observed in Fairmount, Indiana, on the completion of fifty years of married life by Joseph W. Baldwin and wife. Mr. Baldwin and his brother Thomas have been supporters of our reform work in that community. The latter and his wife celebrated their golden wedding seven years ago.

—At the twenty-third commencement of the Baptist Union Theological Seminary, at Morgan Park, near Chicago, last Thursday, there were thirty-one graduates, among whom was Mr. E. O. Lovett, of the Student's Bureau of Correspondence. Mr. G. A. Conrad, secretary of the Bureau, goes this week from Chicago Theological Seminary to Washington for eight months' work in the home mission field.

—George B. Stuart, for many years prominent in commercial, financial and religious circles, died in Philadelphia, Friday morning, aged 74 years. He was the head of the extensive dry-goods commission house of Stuart & Brother for a number of years. In 1880 the firm met with serious reverses and finally closed. Mr. Stuart was the leading spirit in organizing the United States Christian commission in New York in 1861. He was chairman of the commission and raised $6,000,000 for the purpose of supplying those temporal and spiritual comforts not furnished by the government.

—Many of our readers, and those in Iowa especially, will read with pleasure the letter of Bro. H. W. Johnston, former editor of the Crank, of College Springs, Iowa, and later connected with the American in Washington. We shall hope to hear as often from him as his new and untried missionary duties will allow. The Wesleyan Methodist of last week contains two letters from him; one describing the religious worship in a Mohammedan mosque; the other gives various incidents of African life, and speaks of a visit to a convent, where European inmates have enjoyed good health for years.

—Last Saturday evening Rev. W. W. Stewart, of Wheaton, literally fell asleep in Jesus, and his spirit went to its Maker. He was a retired Wesleyan minister, who had nevertheless been active in the work of the church to the day of his death in his 87th year. He had been busy, as usual, during the day. As night came on he sat down in his chair, and the call came. Friends raised his drooping head as he looked last on them; his eyes closed, his hands were folded; and sitting thus in half an hour the breath gradually grew fainter and ceased. He was universally esteemed in Wheaton, and he never feared to give his testimony for Christ against the lodge and every other popular evil.

—On Thursday evening last the members of the New England Society of California met at San Bernardino, and were entertained by the citizens and a reception was held in the opera house. General Chapin, uncle of the assistant editor of the Cynosure, addressed the meeting, and on resuming his seat he leaned over and suddenly expired, it is believed from heart disease. He was an aged man, and an early settler in California. He received his title from a brief service in the Black Hawk war in Illinois. He was formerly a member of the Masonic lodge, but was much interested when the lodge was discussed in the Congregational ministers' meeting at San Francisco in May, 1886, and would have been present had he been in the city.

—Rev. E. P. Brown, the evangelist, has sent forth the first number of a new religious journal with the unique title, "Ram's Horn." It is the organ of no sect, but its purpose is the general advancement of religion and the presentation of the bright side of the Christian life. This first number has a happy face. Truly the editor must have been "caused to drink at the river of His pleasure." Mr. Brown is a newspaper man of large experience. He was a life long infidel, and had been an energetic worker for the liberal cause. He gave freely of his means, and used his voice and pen to help disseminate the doctrines of Ingersoll. He was one of the mistaken number who, a few years ago, helped to send a New York infidel editor on a trip around the world, in order that he might study the different religions from personal observation, and thereby be the better qualified to pitch into Christianity. Four years ago he was converted at the Moody meetings in Chicago, one of which he attended out of motives of curiosity, and since that time he has been continually engaged in preaching the Gospel, both as pastor and evangelist, with no less earnestness than he formerly labored on the other side of the question.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, April 16, 1890.

Both Houses of Congress met at the usual hour on Monday morning to receive formally the death of Hon. Samuel J. Randall. The seat so long occupied by him was draped in black, as well as the portrait of the ex-Speaker, which hangs in the lobby of the House of Representatives. A handsome floral design rested upon the desk in front of his seat, and an air of sadness pervaded the hall when the gavel called the body to order. The colleagues of Mr. Randall made formal announcement of the death of the distinguished politician. Senator Cameron spoke to the Senate and Representative O'Neill to the House, each making appropriate remarks, and immediately both branches of Congress adjourned for the day to show respect for the memory of the dead.

The Pan-Americans at last see an end to their labors. They have been here a long time, but the business of this International Conference is now so far advanced that the delegates expect to leave for their tour of the Southern States on the 18th instant. They have received invitations of all sorts, but their program shows that they will inspect no more factories and partake of no more formal or floral banquets. The members of the conference were doubtless surfeited with these things last fall, and find social entertainments much more to their taste.

The increase of interest in the cause of temperance in the District of Columbia is noticeable from month to month, and this is quite sufficient to encourage the earnest worker. And this reminds me that eighty-seven of the more prominent attorneys-at-law of this city, and thirteen ministers located here, have petitioned Congress for the establishment in the District of a hospital for inebriates.

The Senate thinks the government ought to bear the entire expense of a zoological park at Washington, and the House of Representatives thinks the District of Columbia ought to be taxed for half the cost of it. Hence, a conference committee has been asked to settle the disagreement. The object of this park is to preserve the animals of the world that are likely to become extinct through the destruction of the hunter and the advance of civilization. It is a suggestion of the Smithsonian Institute.

Representative Hitt, who is the chairman of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, and a close friend of Secretary Blaine, has introduced in the House an important resolution. It says in effect that it is the opinion of the House that closer commercial relations with the other countries of the American continent would be of material advantage. The House would view with favor, also, reciprocity treaties modifying the duties upon the peculiar products of the different countries by tariff concession on both sides, conducive to mutual profit and the strengthening of the friendly relations of this country with its neighbors.

Senator Morrill, of Vermont, possesses the distinction of being the patriarch of the Senate. I believe he has served his country in the capacity of a national legislator, in the House and Senate together, for over thirty years. He is tall, thin and kindly looking, with rather long, white locks and strongly-marked features. On Monday he reached his 80th birthday, and hundreds of friends called at his residence in the evening to wish him many returns. Among them were the President and members of the Cabinet, with many others distinguished in the official world of the Capitol.

THE HOME.

TO EVERY MAN HIS WORK.

Laborers of Christ, arise,
And gird you for the toil!
The dew of promise from the skies,
Already cheers the soil.

Go where the sick recline,
Where mourning hearts deplore;
And where the sons of sorrow pine,
Dispense your hallowed store.

Be faith, which looks above,
With prayer, your constant guest;
And wrap the Saviour's changeless love
A mantle round your breast.

So shall you share the wealth,
That earth may ne'er despoil;
And the blest Gospel's saving health Repay your arduous toil.

—Mrs. Lydia H. Sigourney.

WHAT IS THE BAPTISM OF POWER FOR?

Often during the last days of the Master, as he talks to his disciples, he refers to the coming of the Spirit, and calls him the "Comforter." Now, are we to understand by this that this gift was intended simply to comfort the believer's heart, to increase his joy, to enlighten him by revelation to him of the mysteries of the Word? Is it alone for the believer's pleasure and profit that this baptism comes? He comes for that, but for more than that. It is given, the Spirit is sent to qualify for service. Very evidently that is the point to be emphasized here. Jesus spent his last earthly moments in directing the thought of the disciples onward to their mission. In simple and direct language, he points out their work: "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." That was to be their work, to convert the world. But now, what was necessary to fit them for this great service? Not human equipment alone, but divine power. Therefore, he bids them tarry at Jerusalem until they should be endued with power from on high, being baptized of the Spirit in this full degree, that they might do effective work in reaching the world. Look at the text: "But ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." What for? "And ye shall become witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth."

Hence the application to us is easily made. We are commanded, as ministers and as Christians, to work under the same world-wide commission, preach the Gospel to every creature. What is necessary for us in order to do that service effectively? The baptism of Holy Ghost power. As Micah says, "We must be full of power by the Spirit of the Lord." And brethren, as God's words are true, there is no other way to get the power. We want physical power; we want intellectual power; but above all and beyond all, we want and must have that mightily magnetic power that comes with the baptism of God's Holy Spirit. If we haven't that equipment, we have nothing. If we have that, we have all things.

God says to you and to me in Scripture thought, if not language, "Become my witnesses in the home and in the church; in the circle of society, and in the busy, crowded mart of business life; here at home in our own community, out yonder in the broad State of Ohio; out in the wider sweep of our own national life; and out still further until the circle shall sweep the round globe itself." But how? Will human power suffice? Will human strength avail? No; we must obey God's voice, we must tarry at Jerusalem until the power from on high shall come, until the leaping tongues of livid flame shall rest upon each bowed head, until the mighty power of God's own Spirit shall unlock each lip, and touch each tongue, then, and then only, can we become effective witnesses for God, telling with mighty power the wondrous story of God's redeeming love for the lost, and spreading everywhere the glorious news of salvation from the death and destiny of sin. This, my friends, is the special purpose of this baptism of power, which each child of God ought to enjoy; it is a baptism for service.

It may be well for us to pause a moment and notice two things the Spirit does for us in the line of service.

1. It points out where we are to serve and what we are to do. Yonder drives a man along the open highway in his chariot. As he rides, he reads a book. A servant of the most high God walks along that same way, little thinking, doubtless, that God has work for him to do then and there. But by-and-by the Spirit whispers, "Go near, and join thyself to this chariot." He is obedient, and finds a head and heart ready to hear the message, and soon a soul is born into the kingdom and another takes his stand openly on the side of the Master. Thus the Spirit indicates to us just where our work lies, and just what the service required.

2. But still more, the baptism of the Spirit furnishes us with all needed power for the service. I hear God's own people offering the excuse of weakness when called for service. Why? It must be because they lack this baptism of power; for to the one possessing that there can be no weakness, unless, indeed, the weakness be in the power of Him who sits upon the throne. Paul is a persecutor. God stops him in his mad career. He is converted. In a few days you find him preaching with boldness to his former companions in sin. A strange and difficult task, you think. Not so when you remember that the baptism of power had come, and he worked and talked, not in his own, but in the fullness of the divine power. One day Peter is a shrinking coward, swearing with bitter oath, "I know not the man;" a despicable coward. A few days after he stands in the presence of the mighty crowd, and dares to throw into the very teeth of haughty scribes and self-righteous Pharisees the bitter accusation, "Ye killed the Prince of Life." Now bold as a lion, and fearless as the Christ. What wrought the change? What made the difference? Now, he is filled with the Spirit, has received the baptism of power. I can go no further. The baptism prepares for service, it points out the way, and gives abundant power to walk in it.—Rev. W. R. Harshaw, in United Presbyterian.

SERVICE.

[Gleanings by Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D.D., from the Mildmay Conference at London.]

WORK AND PRAYER. If you put work before prayer, you will carry into your closet the fever and restlessness and hurry of work; if you put prayer before work, you will carry into your work the peace and power of prayer.

DOING NOTHING. It is to be feared that the familiar hymn, "O, to be nothing!" might represent many if it read, O, to do nothing! Between the great things we cannot do and the small things we will not do, the risk is that we shall not do anything.

THE HIGHEST PLACE is that which is nearest the Lord in serving. An Irish king came into a banquet hall, and sat down in the last and least and lowest place. Nobles and courtiers crowded about him asking him to come and take his place at the head of the table. "Where I am there is the head of the table."

MOTIVES TO SERVICE. The destitution of mankind ought to be enough of itself. When Sir Thomas Moore's "Utopia" was first published, it had the impression of a story of a newly-discovered land and people. But some said there is among these Utopians no mansional Gospel truth! Let us go and carry to them the word of eternal life!

CHRIST'S CROSS the only hope of service. The fig-leaf of self-sacrifice may cover, but it cannot heal the wounds of our humanity. Only the sacrifice of Christ can deliver men from the power, penalty and presence of sin.

EVEN UNSELFISHNESS MAY BE DECEPTIVE. Just under the lamp there is darkness. "I used my love of others for a gilding to make myself look fair." The natural centre is self. "If I truly live for God, I become 'eccentric,'—out of centre, to all those who do not so live and revolve about self as their centre."—Keith Falconer.

SLUGGISHNESS IN SERVICE. "How long are ye slack to possess the land?" Josh. 18: 3. This was at least seventy years after Joshua's accession, and Jericho's fall, and as yet they had not even a map of the country; and it was after Joshua's death, a generation later, that we find Judah still saying to Simeon, "Come up with me into my lot, that we may fight against the Canaanites, and I likewise will go with thee into thy lot." Judges 1: 3.

SERVICE AND IMPLEMENTS. Service implies an implement or instrument, laid hold of, then made familiar, then used; a vessel, appropriated, made meet for use, prepared unto every good work.

GOOD WORKS. Protestants are so afraid of attaching merit to good works, that they are well nigh disposed to find some merit in the absence of good works. "We are created unto good works," etc.

WHAT IS WORK FOR GOD? Our own work is just that portion of God's eternal work which lies over against us and our door, in our little moment of time. God must energize our energies, else our best is nothing; and you may heap a thousand nothings together and still get nothing. "Without me ye can do nothing."

SERVICE IS DOING THE WILL OF GOD. Isa. 53: 10. "The pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand." There is to every man a present will or pleasure of God, a will of God that bears the date of this year.

PROGRESS IN WORK is just going on and doing the will of God, without stopping to estimate our successes or measure our apparent failures, leaving all results with him.

HINDRANCES TO SERVICE. Outward hindrances do not depend on us, and may be turned into helps, like persecution and antagonism, or like Paul's thorn in the flesh. The only true hindrances are within: When the work is not from God, not for God, not in God. The whole of these hindrances are resolvable into one: Lack or loss of fellowship with God. We must not imagine that we can do anything apart from him.

WORK AND FRUIT. True work is itself fruit. Fruit, even when it is of God, needs care and culture, or it will wither. God knows how to direct work and make it fruitful. He can place his vine and locate his field where it will receive blessing from God.

BURDENS AND PINIONS. That was an exquisite parable, of the wingless birds which began by bearing their wing as burdens, till they grew fast and became pinions. Possibly it is only an expansion of Samuel Rutherford's sentence in one of his letters, viz.: "The cross of Christ is the sweetest burden that ever I bare; it is such a burden as wings are to a bird, or as sails are to a ship, to carry me forward to my desired haven." Duty patiently done becomes delight.

THERE IS UNDOUBTEDLY A HIGHER SPHERE of service hereafter. He that is faithful over a few things will be made ruler over many things. The joy of the Lord is not rest from service, but rest in service. No acquisition or attainment will be lost. Our training here will only fit us for work hereafter.—The Christian Intelligencer.

LIVING SACRIFICES.

There are many in our day who look for an irresistible compulsion into the ministry of the church; sensitive as they are to the material by which men roll off into other professions, they pray for something of a similar kind to prevail with them in this direction also. There are men who pass into the ministry by social pressure or the opinion of the circles they belong to, and there are men who adopt the profession simply because it is on the line of least resistance. From which false beginnings rise the spent force, the premature stoppages, the stagnancy, the aimlessness and heartlessness, which are the scandals of the professional ministry and the weakness of the Christian church in our day. Men who drift into the ministry, become mere ecclesiastical flotsam and jetsam, incapable of giving carriage to any soul across the waters of this life, uncertain of their own arrival anywhere, and of all the waste generation, the most patent and disgraceful. God will have no drift-wood for his sacrifices, no drift-men for his ministers. Self-consecration is the beginning of his service, and a sense of our own freedom and our own responsibility is an indispensable element in the act of self-consecration. We—not God—have to make the decision. We are not to be dead, but living sacrifices, and everything that renders us less than fully alive both mars the time the sincerity of our surrender and reacts for evil upon the whole of our subsequent ministry.

The Chicago Champion, a liquor organ, says editorially that "while we consider $1,000 license as a legalized robbery, we prefer a high license system to prohibition."

A BOY WHO RECOMMENDED HIMSELF.

John Brent was trimming his hedge, and the "snip-snap" of his shears was a pleasing sound to his ears. In the rear of him stretched a wide, smoothly-kept lawn, in the center of which stood his residence, a handsome, massive, modern structure, which had cost him not less than ninety thousand dollars.

The owner of it was the man who, in shabby attire, was trimming his hedge. "A close, stingy old skinflint, I'll warrant," some boy is ready to say.

No, he wasn't. He trimmed his own hedge for recreation, as he was a man of sedentary habits. His shabby clothes were his working clothes, while those which he wore on other occasions were both neat and expensive; indeed, he was very particular even about what are known as the minor appointments of dress.

Instead of being stingy, he was exceedingly liberal. He was always contributing to benevolent enterprises, and helping deserving people, often when they had not asked his help.

Just below the hedge was the public sidewalk, and two boys stopped opposite to where he was at work, on one side of the hedge and they on the other.

"Hello, Fred! That's a very handsome tennis racquet," one of them said. "You paid about seven dollars for it, didn't you?"

"Only six, Charlie," was the reply.

"Your old one is in prime order yet. What will you take for it?"

"I sold it to Willie Robbins for one dollar and a half," replied Fred.

"Well, now, that was silly," declared Charlie. "I'd have given you three dollars for it."

"You are too late," replied Fred. "I have promised it to Willie."

"Oh, you have only promised it to him, eh? And he's simply promised to pay for it, I suppose? I'll give you three dollars cash for it."

"I can't do it, Charlie."

"You can if you want to. A dollar and a half more isn't to be sneezed at."

"Of course not," admitted Fred; "and I'd like to have it, only I promised the racquet to Willie."

"But you are not bound to keep your promise. You are at liberty to take more for it. Tell him that I offered you another time as much; and that will settle it."

"No, Charlie," gravely replied the other boy, "that will not settle it—neither with Willie nor with me. I cannot disappoint him. A bargain is a bargain. The racquet is his, even if it hasn't been delivered."

"Oh, let him have it," retorted Charlie, angrily. "Fred Fenton, I will not say that you are a chump, but I'll predict that you'll never make a successful business man. You are too punctilious."

John Brent overheard the conversation, and he stepped to a gap in the hedge in order to get a look at the boy who had such a high regard for his word.

"That lad has a good face, and is made of the right sort of stuff," was the millionaire's mental comment. "He places a proper value upon his integrity, and he will succeed in business because he is punctilious."

The next day, while he was again working on his hedge, John Brent overheard another conversation. Fred Fenton was again a participant in it.

"Fred, let us go over to the circus lot," the other boy said. "The men are putting up the tents for the afternoon performance."

"No, Joe; I'd rather not," Fred said.

"But why?"

"On account of the profanity. One never hears anything good on such occasions, and I would advise you not to go. My mother would not want me to go."

"Did she say you shouldn't?"

"No, Joe."

"Then let us go. You will not be disobeying her orders."

"But I should be disobeying her wishes," said Fred. "No, I'll not go."

"That is another good point in that boy," thought John Brent. "A boy who respects his mother's wishes very rarely goes wrong."

Two months later John Brent advertised for a clerk in his factory, and there were at least a dozen applicants.

"I can simply take your names and residences this morning," he said. "I'll make inquiries about you, and notify the one whom I conclude to select."

Three boys gave their names and residences.

"What is your name?" he asked, as he glanced at the fourth boy.

"Fred Fenton, sir," was the reply.

John Brent remembered the name and the boy. He looked at him keenly, a pleasing smile crossing his face.

"You may stay," he said. "I've been suited sooner than I expected to be," he added, looking at the other boys and dismissing them with a wave of his hand.

"Why did you take me," asked Fred in surprise. "Why were inquiries not necessary in my case? You do not know me."

"I know you better than you think I do," John Brent said with a significant smile.

"But I offered you no recommendations," suggested Fred.

"My boy, it wasn't necessary," replied John Brent. "I heard you recommend yourself."

But, as he felt disposed to enlighten Fred, he told him about the two conversations he had overheard.

Now, boys, this is a true story, and there is a moral in it. You are more frequently observed, and heard and overheard, than you are aware of. Your elders have a habit of making an estimate of your mental and moral worth. You cannot keep late hours, lounge on the corners, visit low places of amusement, smoke cigarettes and chaff boys who are better than you are, without older people making a note of your bad habits.

How much more forcibly and creditably pure speech, good breeding, honest purposes, and parental respect would speak in your behalf.—Golden Days.

TEMPERANCE.

HOW TO MANAGE A SALOON CAMPAIGN.

The New York Voice has come into possession of reliable documents which prove the bribery and shameless methods by which the saloonists defeated prohibition in Texas and Pennsylvania. The Voice also reports the following interview between Harry Crowell, manager of the liquor forces, and a well-known opponent of the saloon. Crowell said:

"In the first place we assessed the sales of all beer per annum at ten cents per barrel. We levied an assessment of $1,000 on all the large hotels like the Continental, and they paid it like little men, and from $25 to $50 on all the smaller retail shops. Besides, each brewer was required to solicit money from all kindred interest—that is, every man in trade with whom they had dealings—those engaged in making barrels, those from whom we bought our horses, and wagons, and grain, and machinery, etc., was solicited to contribute to a campaign fund, and if such persons failed after a reasonable time to do so, a notice was forwarded intimating that a prompt compliance would save trouble and a possible boycott, thus forcing hundreds to help us who did it reluctantly. By this plan we raised over $200,000, which was expended by the State committee. Besides, local committees in every community raised and expended large sums during the campaign and on election day. Appeals for money were made to the trade throughout the country, and large sums were contributed by the Brewer's Association and National Protective Association.

"How did you dispose of this immense amount of money?"

"Besides the current expenses, we paid it out to the newspapers, politicians, and some for literature and some for public speakers."

"How did you manage to enlist the politicians on your side? Did you offer them money?"

"Yes; we would go to the leaders, both Republicans and Democrats, and say this is not a party fight and you cannot afford to be against us; if you do we will remember you at the next regular election, but if you will help us we will pay you liberally for your support."

"Such State leaders as 'Bill' Leeds, Charlie Porter, who is chairman of the city Republican committee, Cooper and Dave Martin, and others, and a lot of Democratic leaders, we paid $500 apiece, and $200 apiece to local leaders, and $5 apiece to men who worked and manned the pools on the day of elections."

"Did I pay Quay any money? Yes; for three years he bled us, and our contributions to him came very near beating us at the polls. It was reported that we contributed money to defeat Cleveland, and the Democrats got hold of it and a plan was on foot to have the Democratic vote cast for the amendment as a punishment to the Republican brewers of the State, and it would have succeeded if I had not found it out in time and 'fixed' the boys; but it cost us a big pile of money to do so. We had all the workers on our side, and the machines of both old parties were with us. We paid the county commissioners of this county to let us have the poll-list exclusively for our use, with the understanding that we were not to return the list until after the election. So the Prohibitionists, with no window books, no money, no organization, had no show, whatever, against us."

"Mr. Crowell, how did you manage to get the newspapers pretty much all on your side?"

"Why, we bought them by paying down so much cash. I visited the editors in person or had some good man to do so, and arranged to pay each paper for its support a certain amount of money. Throughout the State we paid weekly papers from $50 to $500 to publish such matter as we might furnish, either news or editorial, but the city daily papers we had to pay from $1,000 to $4,000, which latter amount was paid to the Times of this city. Others papers we could not buy straight out, consequently we had to pay from 30 to 60 cents per line for all matter published for us according to the circulation and ability of the paper. We paid the Ledger 40 cents per line and the Record we paid 60 cents per line, though it did some good work for us for nothing. It was understood with most all of the papers that we would furnish the matter, and so we employed a man to write for us and prepare articles for publication which would be furnished to the papers to be printed as news or editorial matter, as we might direct. The most effective matter we could get up in the influencing of votes was, that prohibition did not prohibit, and the revenue, taxation, and how prohibition would hurt the farmers. We would have these articles printed in different papers and then buy thousands of copies of the paper and send them to the farmers. If you work the farmers on the tax question you can catch them every time.

"How did I get the names of farmers? Why I got the poll-book in each town and hired some man who was well posted to select the names of every farmer and send them to me, and it was here we got in our best work; for with the politicians, the papers and the farmers, you can always win. C. C. Turner, secretary of the liquor dealers' publishing house, Louisville, will mail you a list of the farmers in Nebraska. He is a bright fellow, and can do you much good in some ways; but don't let him try to manage the newspapers for you."

"How did you manage, Mr. Crowell, to get so many ministers on your side?"

"Oh, that is the easiest thing out. No, I did not go to the preachers as I did to the politicians, but I always found out a good man in the church who could work the preacher with but very little trouble, for half of the preachers are cowards. Then I hired, for so much a name, some old broken-down newspaper man or politician to go around with a petition and get the names of ministers and lawyers, which we published with fine effect. We talked high license all the time. Never try to defend the saloon; if so, you lose the influence of church members and ministers; but talk about the revenue, cider, taxation, and especially prohibition don't prohibit, and clamor for high license. I had thousands of badges printed with high license and gave them out to poll workers on election day, and it had fine effect."

"Yes, we understood and agreed to the passage of the high license law before the amendment was submitted, so that we could use it as a means to defeat prohibition. And it was that, and that alone, that saved us. With all our money and political backing we could not have defeated the Amendment on any other plea than high license."

Our deeds determine us as much as we determine our deeds.—George Eliot.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The Ruler's petition, vs. 41, 42. The wonderful healing of the demoniac of Gadara had stirred the whole country side, following as it did on other equally wonderful works. Without doubt this father had heard of the raising of the widow's son at Nain. "Faith comes by hearing." So there would be more faith if Christians would make it a point to relate their experiences oftener to each other. We have all had some answer to prayer, some peculiar leading of the divine Hand, the recital of which may be just the cordial needed to inspire the drooping faith of some fellow-pilgrim. "But as he went the people thronged him." We see this repeated whenever there is great religious interest, as in the Moody and Sankey revivals. Thousands will throng to hear some popular evangelist, but how many go with a definite aim as did the poor woman who touched the hem of his garment. To get a blessing we must know what we want, and then come boldly unto the throne of grace. Judging from the Gospel narrative, there is nothing which so delights the heart of Jesus as simple, undoubting faith, and doubtless there is no way in which we more frequently grieve him than by our subtle unbelief,—in bearing the burdens ourselves which he has offered to take.

2. Faith tested and triumphant, vs. 49-56. No doubt the intervening incident and consequent delay tried Jairus' faith for a time, but it must also have been wonderfully helped thereby. Interruptions and delays have their important use, or our lives would not be so full of them. They are among the "all things" that must and will work together for our good if we take them patiently. "Thy daughter is dead. Trouble not the Master." This is the mistaken advice of those who would limit the power of God; who do not see that the more irremediable and overwhelming our trial the more need we have to pray. Christ took with him into the chamber of death only the three elect disciples, Peter, James and John, chosen for some peculiar nearness to him,—perhaps a peculiar understanding of himself and his great mission, which fitted them to be his companions here and at the Mount of Transfiguration, as well as later in the great crises of his life at Gethsemane. If we wish to be the chosen companions of Christ, we must strive to enter into his spirit with reverential, loving, understanding sympathy; for love generates love, and the heart which most completely surrenders all to Christ will surely be the one to whom he will reveal most, just as we confide our most precious secrets to the friend that we know loves us best. We notice on the other hand that he put out the unbelieving throng of professional mourners. To the cavilers who scornfully reject his truth he will reveal nothing. It is doubtful whether a great work of grace was ever done where any part of the service was abandoned to mere "professionals." Church suppers and fairs and entertainments stand in the way of revivals because the atmosphere of frivolity and worldliness which they engender is utterly inimical to the Spirit's work. We must put them all out if we would see dead souls raised to life. "He commanded to give her meat." There was something for the parents to do; and so while only Christ can make alive the spiritually dead, he expects that pastors and older Christians will feed them with "the sincere milk of the word." Many young converts backslide because this important duty is neglected. "Tell no man." Perhaps for fear that so many would come with like petitions as to hinder his work of teaching. Men need to hear the truth of God more than they need any mere temporal blessing.

HELPFUL THOUGHTS FROM PELOUBET.

DELAYED ANSWERS.—This delay in going to Jairus' house reminds us of the longer delay when Jesus had heard that Lazarus was sick, and delayed two days before he went to Bethany. But in both cases there were the wisest reasons. (1) The delay was a test of faith, in order to strengthen it. (2) The delay gave an opportunity for Jesus to give larger blessings, to work a miracle with deeper meaning, to increase love and gratitude, to bring the eternal world closer to the daily life of that home. It made that home and that family a continual testimony to the power and love of Jesus, a perpetual witness that the Messiah, the Saviour of the world, had come. (3) Answers and prayers are often delayed because we are not ready to receive the best blessings. The blessings are like unripe fruit. We must wait till they ripen.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

MOVEMENTS FOR CHURCH UNION.—A call has been issued for a Conference of all Christians who sincerely desire the real and visible union of all true followers of Christ, to meet at Dayton, Ohio, on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, May 21, 22 and 23, 1890, to seek Divine guidance and devise ways and means for effecting the actual visible union of all true believers in Christ, "that they may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee; that they may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou hast sent me," John 17: 21.

"In calling for this Conference," the signers say, "we do not propose to start a new sect, nor to try to merge all small sects into one large sect, nor to unite with or seek to reform any existing sect or denomination. Nor do we intend to discuss doctrinal views, but we do propose union in Christ: and as promotive of this end we advocate the dropping of all sect affiliations and the names that designate them. With this we advocate the actual visible union of all true believers in any given locality as far as practicable, as the one church of that locality; not as a party in, but as a part of, the one great body of believers in and followers of the Lord Jesus Christ, the Son of God, and the only one and true head of the church, 'which is His body.'"

The following is a list of the topics and speakers: "Wherein this Movement Differs from the Denominations," John G. Fee, Berea, Ky.; "The Divided Church and Current Christian Reforms," H. H. Hinman, Oberlin, Ohio; "The Oneness of the Body of Christ," Rufus Smith, Marysville, Mo.; "The Church of the Future," C. S. Bullock, Evanston, Ill.; "Christian Birthrights," O. D. Colton, Morgan Park, Ill.; "What Constitutes a Christian," Mrs. Emma Obenauer; "The Sin of Schism," C. C. Foote; "The Local Church," A. K. Sweet; "The Meeting of Extremes, or the Two Poles of this Movement," C. E. Hulbert, Detroit, Mich.

—The convention of delegates of the Reformed Presbyterian and United Presbyterian churches, having under consideration the union of the two denominations, met at Pittsburgh on the 17th and 18th inst. Among the speakers were Revs. W. H. French, D.D., of Cincinnati; D. McAllister, D.D., of Pittsburgh; J. P. Lytle, D.D., of Ohio; J. H. Lieper, J. T. McCrory, and Prof. W. J. Coleman. The conference adjourned Friday shortly after midnight, after adopting resolutions favoring organic union and recommending the appointment of delegates to a convention or council with a view of framing a basis of union. It was decided to hold the next meeting in October. The convention had representatives from all parts of the country.

—The success of evangelists Mills and Greenwood at Jacksonville, Ill., has been great. The whole town has been awakened and there have been many conversions. Business men have closed their stores and manufactories to enable their employes to attend the meetings. On one evening six churches in the city were crowded at the same time.

—As a result of the recent Y. M. C. A. district conference at Three Rivers, Mich., a glorious revival broke out, which is still in progress, large numbers, among them some of the most hardened sinners of the place, professing conversion. Union services followed the meeting of the conference in which the churches all took part.

—The Baptist denomination in Liberia is the only self-supporting religious body in that country. There are thirty-one churches, with 3,000 members. They have a mission among the aborigines.

—The great movement in the American Baptist mission among the Telugus in India, in which 30,000 converts have been gathered in twelve years, still continues, and is spreading into the interior of the country. In the Nalgunda district fifty-two were recently baptized in one week.

—More than 300 students in nine German universities have joined a special school for training missionaries for the Jews, of which Prof. Delitsch is the head.

—The annual statistics of missions in Japan have just been published. The number of churches is now 274. Of this number 153 are reported as self-supporting. The accessions last year were 5,542, and the total membership 31,181. The contributions amount to $40,662 (U. S. currency), and the increase during the year was $6,876. The whole number of missionaries in the field, including the wives, is 527.

—Twenty-eight of the students of Wooster University are on the volunteer list to go as foreign missionaries.

—A lady at Ramsgate, England, is collecting old silver thimbles for sale, for the benefit of the Church Missionary Society. She has had 140 sent to her already.

—Dr. T. W. Torrence is in charge of the Medical Mission, on the lake of Galilee, of the Free Church of Scotland, and resides at Tiberias. He writes that it is a hard thing for a Jew to become a Christian in Tiberias. The Jewish rabbi supplies the whole community with bread. The moment one of them is known to have a liking for the mission or for the New Testament his allowance of bread is stopped, and that means starvation. The doctor believes that the moment they can earn their bread hundreds of them will come out boldly for Christ.

—In the Methodist Episcopal conference at New York city, March 8, 1890, Rev. Dr. J. S. Chadwick, corresponding secretary of the Freedman's Aid and Southern Education Society, read a resolution on the subject of Negro education, which was unanimously adopted, and a copy sent to Senator Evarts. It was as follows: "Resolved, That we call upon Congress as a matter of simple justice to the colored race, to all the people of the Southern States and to the good name and the highest interests of the Republic, to take promptly such steps as their constitutional powers shall permit and as their wisdom may suggest to continue to all such States as may accept the same the national aid to which the Northern and Western States have been so largely indebted, during the past century, in the founding and maintaining of common schools and in enlightening and stimulating the educational spirit of the States."

—"Mr. Moody," says the Christian Intelligencer of last week, "is nobly performing his part in evangelical work in this city. Last week for four days he delivered a sermon or address four times a day in the heart of the city. This week he is as diligently laboring in Harlem. It remains for the Christians of the city and vicinity, indeed, of the whole country, to do their part, by importunate prayer to God for the presence of the Holy Spirit in power. The entire land is concerned in the evangelization of the worldly, ungodly, unbelieving and superstitious mass of people in this city. The whole country is affected by the example of this multitude. In other cities such residents have been reached by Moody meetings, and can be here."

—A son of Rev. Dr. William Wishart of Monmouth, just completing his theological studies, has been called to be pastor of the Eighth United Presbyterian church of Allegheny, Pa.

—During the special services in the Westminster Presbyterian church, Asbury Park, N. J., conducted by the pastor, the Rev. S. Edward Young, forty persons have united with the church, nearly all on profession, and the interest is deepening.

—The American Baptist Year Book for 1890 gives large figures for the Regular Baptists in the United States. They have 21,175 ordained ministers, 33,588 churches, and 3,070,047 members. These figures include white and colored, Northern and Southern Baptists. The number of baptisms last year was 144,575. They have 17,096 Sunday-schools, with 1,158,665 pupils; the value of their church property is $53,568,502, and the aggregate of their contributions last year was $9,363,376.

—Thomas A. Besalow, a student at Harvard, is the son of a Central African chief, who was killed in battle three years ago by an uncle, who usurped the throne after killing the mother and two brothers of Thomas. The latter, after a course at Harvard, will return and endeavor to secure his rank. Failing in that, he will settle down to missionary labors among his people.

—Monday a committee of the New York Methodist Episcopal Conference rendered a report declaring that the recent decision of the Wisconsin Supreme Court against the reading of the Bible in the public schools is "un-American, pagan, and a menace to the perpetuity of our institutions."

POLITICAL AND MORAL WRONGS.

Secretary Gault said in his address before the Washington (D. C.) National Reform Convention: "A few days ago I overheard a conversation between a minister in this city and one of our National Reform secretaries. The minister had a severe attack of that dangerous disease known as secularism in government. He claimed that the state should make no recognition of the Sabbath, because it was a religious institution, and the state must keep its hands off religion."

"He was asked: 'If the state should conclude to hold elections on the Sabbath, as in France, would you not be disfranchised at the ballot box?'"

"'Certainly I would, because I could not vote on the Lord's day.'"

"'Would this not be putting you at a great disadvantage before the law?'"

"'Certainly it would.'"

"'Would it not be a serious wrong for government to thus trample upon the consciences of its Sabbath-keeping citizens?'"

"'Yes, I admit it would be a political wrong.'"

"'Can a wrong be a political and at the same time not a moral wrong?'"

"The minister looked perplexed and replied, 'I do not care to discuss that subject further. I do not know what you call that process of reasoning here in Washington, but out West we call it simply running a man up a stump.'"

IN BRIEF.

In a decision rendered at Wichita, Kan., a justice held corn to be fuel. A thousand bushels of corn belonging to a farmer named Steadman had been attached. Steadman said he was using the corn for fuel, and that one thousand bushels was not more than enough to last a year. The justice ruled that under the law exempting a year's fuel the attachment could not hold.

Tippoo Tib, the great African slave-dealer, is getting tired of his wanderings and dangerous existence, and proposes to settle down as a solid citizen on his estate at Casingo, 300 miles above Stanley Falls, where he has built for himself a large and fine stone mansion. His son, however, will carry on his father's trade, in which he has already been quite successful, as on his last expedition he returned with forty tons of ivory, worth $350,000.

In Tiflis, Russia, a club of 125 families just formed has hired a doctor, M. Oganians, for $60 a year, who agrees to visit the families regularly and give them advice as to how to keep healthy, to tend them if sick, and besides to give the club occasional short lectures on hygiene and physiology. Each family pays 50 cents per month for this service, and twenty-five poor families are admitted free. Similar arrangements have been made with the druggist.

According to the Sunday-school Times the total population of the globe is estimated 1,435,000,000. The number of languages, and dialects known to exist is 3,074. The Bible exists now in about 250 different languages and dialects, so there are 2,824 languages and dialects into which the Bible has never been translated. Over 200 translations have been made during this century. If we suppose that the translations will in the future average 250 to the century, it will take more than eleven centuries before the Bible will have passed into all these languages and dialects, or not until about A. D. 3064. The number of religions is 1,100. No nation or people has ever been discovered without a religion of some kind. The number of professing Christians is 432,000,000; Roman Catholics, 208,000,000; Greek Orthodox, 83,000,000; Protestants, 123,000,000; Jews, 8,000,000.

Rev. Albert P. Miller, colored pastor of Dixwell Avenue Congregational church in New Haven, while on a vacation in the summer of 1887 came to New York and engaged berths for himself, wife, and two children and mother-in-law on the steamer Drew, one of the Albany night boats. On examination he found the berths inadequate and endeavored to engage state rooms. The purser referred him to the captain, who did not pay any attention to him. He again applied to the purser, who told him all the rooms were engaged. Mr. Miller demanded his money, which was returned to him. He claimed that there were state rooms vacant, but that the officers had discriminated against him on account of his color. On this basis he sued the New Jersey Steamboat Company for $5,000 damages. The case was tried before Judge Bench in the Supreme Court, and the defence was that the state rooms were all sold. The jury gave plaintiff a verdict of $500. Mr. Miller is a graduate of Yale and the Fisk University.

"O. S.," of Chicago, writes to the Daily News: "Apropos of Bellamy's 'Looking Backward,' human nature has been the same through all the thousands of years since the world began, and it will continue to be the same to the end of the chapter. Bellamy's theory in 'Looking Backward' hasn't the shadow of a chance of ever being realized. But, for argument's sake, we will suppose that such a state of affairs could—not readily, of course, but after long years of hard labor and a great expenditure of money and patience—be brought about, what would eventually be the result? Well, in the first place, it would almost entirely, if not quite, destroy home life, which, as all thinking people know, is the corner-stone and bottom layer in the foundation of civilization. It would take away all taste for business, all zest for life. For no matter how hard a man might work his credit would be the same. And the chances to rise would be so small that ninety-nine out of a hundred wouldn't think them worth trying for. There would arise complaints that couldn't be adjusted satisfactorily all around, which would lead to mutterings, grumblings, and incipient rebellions, to quell which the government would have to screw on its iron heel and set its foot down flat and say, 'Thou shalt and thou shalt not,' which proceedings would gradually merge into the most tyrannical of monarchies. Revolution would follow, and then?"

BAD NEWS FOR NEWSPAPER DEAD BEATS.—Cheerful news for newspaper proprietors comes from Ohio. A paper in that State recently brought suit against forty-three men who would not pay their subscription, and obtained judgment for the full amount in each case. Twenty-eight at once prevented attachment by making affidavit that they had no more than the law allowed. Under the decision of the Supreme Court they were arrested for petit larceny and bound over in the sum of $300. Six of these did not give bond, and went to jail. This is the result of the working of the new postal law, which makes it larceny to take a paper and refuse to pay for it.—Western Journalist.

Healthy Exercise
That's what the work of washing clothes and cleaning house amounts to when it's done with Pyle's Pearline. Little or no rubbing; no drudgery; less annoyance; more comfort; more cleanliness; more economy; and a large saving of wear and tear on all sides. You'll find directions on back of pack age, for easy washing. It will cost you five cents to try it. Every grocer has Pearline—nothing else gives satisfaction to the millions of women who use and have been using PEARLINE for years—women who rely on their brains to save their backs.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers are offering imitations which they claim to be Pearline, or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—they are not, and besides are dangerous. 169 JAMES PYLE, New York.

KILLED WITHOUT INQUEST.

Though we have printed this matter twice in the Cynosure, and run extra copies, we have not been able to meet the demand, hence a cheap edition has been gotten out in circular form. Price per pound, postpaid, 30 cents; half pound, 15 cents; one-third pound, 10 cents.

WEBSTER'S DICTIONARY will be sent for examination to those who accept our offer of the Dictionary and Cynosure.

We are furnishing the Dictionary at cost to our subscribers, and hence cannot afford to pay carriage when parties conclude not to take them, if any should so decide. Hence, after receiving them we will allow you one day for examination, and if not perfectly satisfactory return them and we will refund to you your money, less the actual cost of postage or express charges which have been paid. No one has complained that they were not satisfied that they had got a bargain for the money, but some have "hoped that it would not prove to be a humbug," hence we make the above offer, as we wish to satisfy our subscribers if possible.

PAGAN COUNTERFEITS.

IN THE

Christian Church.

A pamphlet of 52 pages, by Chas. A. S. Temple.

The following from Rev. H. H. Hinman shows his estimate of its contents:

"I have read with great interest 'Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church' by Chas. A. S. Temple. I regard the subject discussed as important, and its presentation both able and timely. There is a most manifest drift in all our Protestant denominations towards unauthorised ritualism and the substitution of human inventions in place of the simplicity of the Gospel, as given by Christ and his apostles. In calling attention to this tidal wave of formalism, the author has conferred a lasting benefit on the church, as of Protestantism."

HOME AND HEALTH.

A red hot iron passed over old putty will soften it so that it is easily removed.

White spots on furniture can be removed by holding a hot iron close over them.

A little wet whiting will sometimes take oil out of boards, and wet salt will remove ink spots.

Grease can be taken out of wall paper to some extent by washing it with a flannel dipped in alcohol.

Sometimes a dent in furniture can be partially removed by wetting the spot with a piece of wetted brown paper, and holding a hot iron near it.

After the paint of a room has been thoroughly cleaned with sapolio, a little fresh paint in spots that are worn will add to the good looks of the room immensely.

Grease spots on floor or table can also be removed by fullers' earth and soft soap, equal parts, beaten together into a cake. Moisten the spot with water, rub with the mixture, and rinse off with warm water.

In wiping down papered walls a soft cloth tied on to a broom will take the place of a feather duster which comes for the purpose. If the cloth is of flannel so much the better. Very dirty spots can be rubbed with stale bread.

A good whitewash is, whiting four pounds, common glue two ounces. Soak the glue in cold water over night. Mix the whiting with cold water, dissolve the glue and pour it in. Sufficient water should be used to make the mixture quite thin.

A cement for wood is made of resin, one half pound, melted, and yellow ochre or pulverized brick stirred in until the mixture is of the consistency of molasses. Then add beeswax the size of a walnut, and tallow the size of a pea. Stir the mixture until cold, and mould for use. It is heated like sealing wax to fill cracks or holes, or to join wood.

A good furniture varnish is made of one pint of linseed oil, one pint of vinegar, and one-half pint of alcohol, just heated together. It must be rubbed on with a flannel rag, after the wood has been thoroughly dusted and wiped clean. It cannot be rubbed too hard or too long. A fine polish can be given to any article of furniture by the use of this receipt, provided the "elbow grease" is sufficiently lubricating.

THE SECRET OF A LONG LIFE.

You sometimes see a woman whose old age is as exquisite as was the perfect bloom of her youth. She seems condensed sweetness and grace. You wonder how this has come about; you wonder how it is her life has been a long and happy one. Here are some of the reasons:

She knew how to forget disagreeable things.

She understood the art of enjoyment.

She kept her nerves well in hand, and inflicted them on no one.

She believed in the goodness of her own daughters and in that of her neighbors.

She cultivated a good digestion.

She mastered the art of saying pleasant words.

She did not expect too much from her friends.

She made whatever work came to her congenial.

She retained her illusions, and did not believe that all the world was wicked and unkind.

She relieved the miserable, and sympathized with the sorrowful.

She retained an even disposition, and made the best of everything.

She did whatever came to her cheerfully and well.

She never forgot that kind words and a smile cost nothing, but are priceless treasures to the discouraged.

She did unto others as she would be done by, and now that old age has come to her and there is a halo of white hair about her head, she is loved and considered.

This is the secret of a long life and a happy one.—March Ladies' Home Journal.

The Best Remedy Taken in Season,

FOR Sore Eyes, Cancerous Humors, Prurigo, and other manifestations of depraved blood, is Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Used persistently, according to directions, it effectually eradicates all traces of disease, and restores the sufferer to a sound and healthy condition.

"I hereby certify that I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla, with excellent success, for a cancerous humor, or, as it seemed to be, cancer on my lip. Shortly after using this remedy the sore healed. I believe that the disease is entirely cured, and consider Ayer's Sarsaparilla to be an infallible remedy for all kinds of eruptions caused by impure blood."—Charles G. Ernberg, Vasa, Minn.

"For years my blood was in an unhealthy condition. After having tried other medicines without success, I have lately taken Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and with the best results. I think this medicine is the only blood-purifier that can be absolutely relied upon."—Mrs. Oliver Valentine, 144 Quincy St., Brooklyn, New York.

"A neighbor of ours who was rendered nearly blind from scrofula, was entirely cured by using three bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—Stephens & Best, Druggists, Ball Play, Tenn.

"For several years afflicted with disorders of the blood, I have received more benefit from the use of sarsaparilla than from all other medicines."—B. Rice, 140 Endicott St., Boston, Mass. Made by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla arrests blood-poisoning before it pervades the system. Don't delay till the forces of nature are exhausted and there is nothing to work on. Begin at once the use of this medicine, and be sure you take no other to counteract its effects.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla cured me of a bad case of blood-poisoning and restored me to health. My system was saturated with a poison which all ordinary remedies failed to reach, but Ayer's Sarsaparilla did the work completely. This was twenty-one years ago, and no symptoms of the disease have since appeared. I have recommended this wonderful medicine to hundreds of people, similarly afflicted, and always with the most satisfactory results."—A. H. Christy, Bourbon, Ind.

"For many years I was troubled with scrofulous complaints. Hearing Ayer's Sarsaparilla very highly recommended, I decided to try it, and have done so with the most gratifying effects. I am convinced that Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best possible blood-medicine."—John W. Starr, Laconia, Ind.

FARM NOTES.

WHY POTATOES DEGENERATE.

The well-known fact is thoroughly established that new varieties of potatoes deteriorate rapidly in yield, or, as farmers say, "run out," to an extent not known forty or fifty years ago. It may be that there was some of this deterioration even then, but it was not critically noticed, as it has been of late years. Potato growing on a large scale is a comparatively modern industry. Not only the increasing proportion of population in cities, but the increasing use of potatoes by all classes, has contributed to this result. When almost every household grew for itself the few potatoes it required, a lessening of the yield was less likely to be noted than when grown for market.

There are, however, especial reasons why the potato should deteriorate more rapidly than it once did. It is within the last forty-five years that rot attacked the tuber, and less than fifteen years since the potato beetle began its work, destroying the leaves on which the quality of the tuber must depend. As the potato is usually reproduced from cuttings, and not from seed, whatever weakness or imperfection is developed is carried along into the new growth, which is only a further reproduction of the original plant. The rot, weakening the vitality of the potato, becomes cumulative. It is a fact, we believe, that the potato rot was first successfully fought by developing new varieties from seed which does not reproduce the weakened vitality of the old. But probably some of the characteristics of the original stock were reproduced in the seed, and some even of the new varieties become liable to decay. There is also a weakened vitality, due to the destruction of the potato leaves by the Colorado beetle and its larva.

It is not a sufficient argument against this theory that trees and plants of other kinds usually propagated by cuttings do not show the same tendency to degenerate as does the potato. So far as known, this tendency in the potato has only been developed within the past fifty years, and is amply explained by diseases and injuries to which the potato has within that time been subjected. So long as a plant is entirely vigorous and healthy, a cutting from it reproduces the same characteristics. But let its vigor be impaired so as first not to be seriously noticed, and it becomes greatly increased in the cuttings made into new plants from it. This is only another illustration of the fact that evil influences are cumulative, and if unchecked will work destruction. But with potatoes, this evil need not go far, as a frequent return to new varieties grown from seed balls set the plant with renewed vigor, until increasing attacks of its enemies disable it. Most practical potato growers have learned that it is good policy to experiment with new varieties, as they are usually much more productive the first few years after their introduction. The reason above given is undoubtedly the explanation of the admitted fact.—American Cultivator.

MANGEL WURZEL.

The farmer who has once grown a crop of mangels for feeding his stock will never fail to repeat the pleasant and profitable experience. This succulent food is wholly nutritious. There is no waste, every part of it is digestible, and no other crop produces as much food per acre as this, and there is no other food so healthful. There may be some difficulty at first in growing this crop, on account of weeds, which in its early growth are apt to overwhelm the young plants. But a good farmer is not to be frightened by weeds, and if the land is cultivated as it should be or should have been, the weeds will not stand in the way. An easy way of growing roots is in cross lines, that is, to drop the seeds in hills, making drills twenty-seven inches apart and mark out cross drills ten inches apart. Or the seeds may be dropped in the drills and a hand cultivator (the hand drill changed for this purpose) run across the rows when the plants appear to cut out ten-inch spaces. This leaves very little hand weeding. One acre of mangels will easily

AN OLD MAID'S SOLILOQUY.

"To take or not to take it, is the question—
Whether it is better to end this earthly career
A spinster—braving the smiles of those who would insist
That lack of lovers caused my lonely state,—
Or take the remedies my sisters take,
And see my eyes grow bright as tho' I bathed
In the immortal fount De Leon sought
In vain in Florida's peaceful shades.
I oft have heard my married sisters say
That good old Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription
Would bring back color to a faded cheek—
Restore the health of one who fain would die
To rid herself of all the pain she feels."

The aforesaid spinster took the remedy—and forthwith took a husband also, having regained her health and blooming beauty.

Thousands of women owe their fresh, blooming countenances to the restorative effects of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate cases of leucorrhea, excessive flowing, painful menstruation, unnatural suppressions, prolapsus, or falling of the womb, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb, inflammation, pain and tenderness in ovaries, accompanied with "internal heat."

As a regulator and promoter of functional action, at that critical period of change from girlhood to womanhood, "Favorite Prescription" is a perfectly safe remedial agent, and can produce only good results. It is equally efficacious and valuable in its effects when taken for those disorders and derangements incident to that later and most critical period, known as "The Change of Life."

Webster's
UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY.

That this is an unfortunate state of affairs will be admitted by all, and it is due to the fact that no one save the rich could afford them.

The Dictionary is a necessity in every home, school and business house. It fills a vacancy and furnishes knowledge which no one hundred volumes of the choicest books could supply, and all young or old, educated or ignorant, rich or poor should have it within reach and refer to its contents every day in the year.

The Loomis reprint contains all the matter as compiled and arranged by our esteemed and honored author and statesman,

NOAH WEBSTER.

About forty years of his life was devoted to this great work, and when we consider the fact that this book contains about 100,000 words with their correct spelling, derivation and definition we will appreciate that these years must have been well spent.

Some idea of the magnitude of this book may be gained from the fact that it contains over 440 cubic inches of paper and has about 300,000 square inches of printed surface. The printing is very clear, plain and distinct, the paper firm and durable, being manufactured especially for this volume, the boards are extra heavy and covered with an excellent quality of leather and thoroughly laced by hand to the book proper.

In addition to the 100,000 words it contains an excellent portrait of the author, together with his biography and a valuable table of 12,000 synonymous words.

By special arrangement with the publishers, we are permitted to furnish this valuable volume: 1st. To any subscriber to our paper; 2nd. To any renewal subscription; and 3rd. To any person who has paid a full year's subscription within the past six months, on receipt of $1.50 for the paper one year, and two dollars and seventy-five cents to cover express charges, packing, etc., of the Dictionary.

FOREIGN.

A letter from Rio Janeiro dated March 27, says that the discontent among the military is growing in Brazil. The government did not care to enforce the order that was issued to three battalions of infantry to embark for southern provinces. The mutinous battalions resisted the order, and during the nights of March 22 and 23 the barracks were guarded. Finally the authorities yielded. On the 26th placards bearing the words "down with the dictatorship" were posted throughout the city. It is reported that the government has decided to submit the constitution to a plebiscite instead of to the constituent assembly.

Connecticut has so many times disgraced herself in the past by her anti-reform record, that we rejoice to see that she is now taking the lead of all the other States on the tobacco question. She has placed a law on her statute book which imposes a fine of $7 upon any minor found in any public place, or in the streets, smoking a cigarette. A law to prevent tobacco from being sold to minors is very easily evaded. One that makes smoking by a minor an unlawful act goes to the root of the matter.

"He that maketh haste to be rich shall not be innocent." The other day the wife of an enterprising business man of this city applied to the court for a conservator for her husband's estate. He is worth $2,500,000 and is distracted. Not long after the great fire he opened a small variety store some distance south of the retail center on State street. His business has grown to an immense establishment—forty or fifty stores in one. Outside speculations in real estate have increased his wealth. But now that he has it, he loses it. At what expense of morality has it been gotten? With what help of saloons and of Sabbath-breaking? Yet how few will be warned by this example, until for them also the rust of their riches takes a tongue against them.

The tariff is not an evil without mitigation. A new industry has been developed by the rage for secret societies, which is in a pitiful situation. It is unprotected by tariff from the competition of foreign pauper labor,—and an unprotected skeleton is an unpleasant affair. The other day a doubtful-looking box came to Waltham, Mass., and owing to some misdirection it was opened by the express company, revealing a human skeleton well mounted. The shipper had to explain that he was in the business of supplying many secret lodges with these horrible reminders of the grave, and there was a brisk trade in them, which suffered much from foreign competition. Human bones were cheap enough here, but the labor of putting them together costs so much that the imported article has the advantage. The most reasonable action by government would be to forbid that any part of the human frame should be made a thing of mockery by any lodge or organization of whatever name.

The Innkeeper's Journal of New York declares that there is a motion under way to punish Harry P. Crowell, the saloon champion, for his startling but unintentional revelations concerning the great conspiracy of the liquor party during the late fight for a prohibitory amendment to the constitution of Pennsylvania. Crowell's confession respecting Senator Quay confirmed the opinion many had formed when the theft of the Voice mailing list was revealed. But it is folly to talk of prosecuting him. He may be persecuted and hounded in lodge fashion into suicide; but to take their affairs into open court for ventilation is not the habit of the saloonists. They would have everything to lose and nothing to gain by such a course. For the same reason the Voice is comparatively safe from legal interference.

For the first time in ten years the congregation gathered by Father O'Connor, the converted Catholic priest, in New York City, is without a church home, the large hall where they worshiped having been let to other parties at a higher rate than the Reformed Catholics could pay. But the point of this observation is this: The Reformed Catholic church has been meeting for years in the public hall of the Masonic Temple building of New York. Now, we are often told that the Masonic lodge is the most powerful enemy of Romanism. If that were true the wealthy New York Masons would have continued Father O'Connor's lease, and would have reduced rather than raised the price. The unhoused congregation have also learned a lesson. They will do well to find a landlord whose professions of friendship are more sincere. The Reformed Catholic work has the hearty commendation of the ministers in all denominations, not only in New York and Brooklyn but throughout the world.

From the daily reports in some of our Chicago papers we appear to be on the verge of a social revolution. The secret labor lodges went on a strike April 7. They have stopped all building operations since, and have thrown out of work an army of other trades. The infection has spread rapidly until it is said that 125,000 workingmen will demand an eight-hour day this week. The Federation of Labor Unions, which met in Boston last December, of which Samuel Gompers is the head, declared for an eight-hour day. The Cynosure described that meeting from a personal visit in the 2nd of January number. This Federation is bending every energy to gain its end; and it may be successful. There is much to be said on both sides of the proposition to reduce the hours of labor. The Saturday half-holiday has seemed the best arrangement. But none is good which puts the workingman into the saloon two hours instead of one. This pit of hell shut, and an eight-hour day would be in many respects a blessing. The power of production through machinery makes our short day more than equal to the long one of our fathers. The difficulty is to seem to yield to a "demand" from the workingmen organized in lodges. If the eight-hour day is a just and reasonable concession to labor, the "demand" rests on better authority than that, even the law of humanity and of God. What it demands no one may set aside or resist.

IRISH SECRET POLITICAL SOCIETIES.

BY REV. JOHN LEE, A. M., B. D.

The Haymarket tragedy of May 4, 1886, and the Cronin assassination of May 4, 1889, are dark and terrible events in the history of Chicago. In some aspects, the latter is the darker of the two. The naked, decomposing body discovered in that Lake View catch-basin, is a horrible picture, photographed forever in the art gallery of memory. It is, and let Americans remember it, only one of the countless dark deeds of Irish secret political societies. If in that crowded court room, during the Cronin investigation, there had come forth fingers of a man's hand and traced upon its walls the deep, dark and damnable deeds that had been hatched in the camps of these societies, while perhaps a priest was praying, the sight would be a thousandfold more terrible than that which saddened the countenance of Belshazzar, and caused his knees to smite one against the other. Romish priests have ever been identified with these murderous organizations. A Clan-na-Gael in Chicago says that he was present at a re-union of Camp No. 96, when Father Dorney was there; that the Stock Yards' soggarth commenced to read his priestly office, observing that he had forgotten to do it before coming, and that the Senior Guardian said: "Brother — will please rise and pass the hat and take up a collection while Brother Dorney is praying." P. W. Dunne, another Clan-na-Gael, when speaking of the doctor's assassination, says, "I believe that next to Alexander Sullivan no man in America is so much to blame to-day as Father Dorney," and declares, "I hold him morally responsible for the blood of poor Cronin." A terrible indictment indeed, but an indictment made by a Romanist. Father Muldoon, who preached Dr. Cronin's funeral sermon, believes that the Clan-na-Gael society is for "the betterment of man." The Coroner's jury did not reach that conclusion.

The Church of Rome makes no effort to suppress Irish secret political societies. Of course she professes to be their enemy, but she is not sincere. She professes also to be an enemy of divorce, but the facts—and facts are stern things—prove that she does not mean what she says. I have made a serious charge. I will prove it, and in the proof I will not go to the pages of the historian, who, Alexander Sullivan says, is "branded beyond the cleansing power of man as a falsifier of history." I will give the language, and the recent language, of a Roman Catholic priest. Father MacDermott of Philadelphia, from his pulpit asks the question: "Why does not the Church [of Rome] speak out boldly in their condemnation? Why is it that denunciation of them is the work of a few obscure priests and bishops? Why are they tolerated by many, excused by others, and even eulogized by some?" In Ireland, these societies have made life wretched to an extreme. The writer knows whereof he speaks. He well remembers one occasion when a boy, a Fenian uprising was expected in that unhappy land. Standing beside his father on a night he will never forget, he could see away on the remote hill-tops indications of the activity of that lawless society. In describing these wretches Dr. Thomas Maguire, an Irish Romanist, designates them, "Miscreants who dance in the blood of a murdered man." That language one year ago might have seemed too strong to an American. It certainly is not too strong now. The object of these societies—no matter by what name designated, whether it be Whiteboy, Defender, Ribbon, Fenian, or Clan-na-Gael—is to establish a Republic in Ireland and root out Protestantism. The Moniteur de Rome, the organ of the Vatican, in its issue of January 25, 1886, says: "We yearn to see Protestantism extirpated from Ireland." No society, be it ever so secret, will the Church of Rome condemn, if she considers that it will advance her interests. Indeed, the head of that church will give it his blessing. Take the following thoroughly corroborated case as an instance. A great meeting of an Irish secret political society was convened in a Franciscan Abbey in County Westmeath, Ireland, in October, 1641. That meeting was composed very largely of distinguished Roman Catholic clergymen. Its object was to decide whether the Irish Protestants should be banished or massacred after they were dispossessed of their lands. The clergy, like the Clan-na-Gaels who tried Dr. Cronin, decided that "removal" or death should be the punishment. When I first read this statement on the pages of a Protestant historian I could hardly believe it. To doubt it is now impossible. Before me lies the New York Irish World of October 22, 1887, and the Baltimore Catholic Mirror of March 27, 1886. In the latter I find a letter written by the Rev. Dr. Benard O'Reilly at Rome in which he speaks of "that great and good man, Luke Wadding, who was in Rome the indefatigable and efficient helper of Owen Roe O'Neill and Archbishop Hugh O'Reilly in the fearful and unfortunate struggle of 1642-49." Father O'Reilly, in this communication, pronounces Wadding as a "saintly, and warm-hearted Irish monk," and says: "He obtained from the Pope the official and hearty indorsement of the national cause." In the former I learn that "the sympathy of the Holy Father, Urban VIII.," was given to the massacre of 1641, of which Thomas Moore, the poet, in his "History of Ireland," says: "To the Catholic it brings a feeling of retrospective shame, like that which wrung from Lord Castlehaven—himself a Catholic peer—those emphatic words, 'Not all the water in the sea could wash away the guilt of the rebels.'"

Lord Beaconsfield pronounced Irish secret political societies inimical to the best interests of the State. Americans can now point to the following clear and ringing utterances concerning the evils of these societies: "We further state that in our judgment all secret societies whose objects are such as evidence shows those of the Clan-na-Gael or United Brotherhood to be, are not in harmony with and are injurious to American institutions." These organizations are an imperium in imperio. The one whose name is on the lips of every one is a most villainous one. Chicago has now a sample of Irish Home Rule. To this kind of rule Irish Protestants object, and firmly propose not to accept it.

If silence gives consent, the Irish press in America approved of the assassination that sent a thrill of horror throughout the world. The Boston Pilot, the Freeman's Journal, the Catholic Mirror, and the Irish World are most certainly the exponents of Irish Roman Catholic thought in America. The poet editor of the Pilot in his issue of June 8, 1889, had not one editorial word about the Cronin butchery. Among a great many topics we find an editorial on "English Bluster in the Pacific," but not a syllable about Irish murder in Chicago. Did he presume his readers had heard nothing about the subject that almost entirely absorbed the attention of every American citizen? It looks like it. The New York Freeman's Journal, at the very moment when civilization stood aghast at Cronin's assassination, discussed "Wonderful Reaction in Favor of the Pope," but not one word about the murdered child of the Pope. After searching the Baltimore Catholic Mirror of June 1, June 8, and June 15, 1889, the reader fails to find in the editorial department even the name of Dr. Cronin. The Irish World is the best known Irish paper in the world, and the most outspoken against English rule in Ireland. Its editor and proprietor is Patrick Ford. Patrick Egan in a long letter to Mr. Ford, published in the Irish World of October 20, 1888, states: "Of the entire sum which passed through my hands while Treasurer of the Irish Land League at Dublin and Paris, nearly $350,000 came through the Irish World." He also states: "When Irish-Americans met in convention in Chicago November, 1881, and issued a call for $250,000 to aid in carrying on the struggle in Ireland, what was the response that came through the columns of the Irish World? Just $130,000. The balance was subscribed through all other sources." The $100,000 which Alexander Sullivan received from Patrick Egan in Paris in 1882, came, it is certain, from the Irish World Land League remittance to Patrick Egan. The Cronin investigation would certainly have led one to think that the Irish World should have been interested in the motives that led to the "removal" of the physician. Patrick Ford was indeed extremely interested in the Cronin murder. So was the Irish World. The writer has examined with care the issues of this paper for June 1, June 8, June 15 and June 22, 1889, and not one editorial syllable can be found on Dr. Cronin's murder. Patrick had an editorial in the Irish World of June 1, on "The Panama Canal Fizzle," in which he made reference to "the Dutch English king, William III.," but it contained no reference to the Irish American, Dr. Cronin. Patrick had an editorial in the Irish World of June 8, on "Civilized Society," but not a word did he utter about the uncivilized society that so barbarously murdered an American citizen. Patrick had an editorial in the Irish World of June 15, on "Plain Talk from the Czar," but why did he not give his readers an editorial on the topic of all topics, both in Irish and American circles, entitled, "Plain Talk from the Editor?" Patrick, when preparing editorials for the Irish World of June 22, must have said to himself, "It is true I am thinking on this awful subject and conversing with faithful Clan-na-Gaels about it, but I must remain as silent as the Sphinx until Pope Alexander bids me speak, and then in one of my powerful letters I will grandly shield the triangle." The Romish hierarchy is tolerant toward Irish secret political societies that believe in assassination. Why? The Irish American press was silent in reference to the Cronin murder. Why?

Houging cattle in Ireland, embezzling funds in America, and testing the destructive power of dynamite on human life in England is a part of the devilish mission of the Clan-na-Gael society. It corrupted the police department, and poisoned the administrators of law. It murdered an obnoxious member and threw his naked body into a sewer. It sent poor dupes to England and there betrayed them to the gallows. It lifted Alexander Sullivan almost to the position of candidate for the Vice-Presidency of the United States in 1884, and in 1889 actually carried Patrick Egan in its arms to the position of our Minister to Chili. It is time, high time, for Americans to call a halt. No wonder that they feel indignant. The right of revolution was what the bomb-throwers claimed in 1886. They were silenced. The right to murder was what the Clan-na-Gaels claimed in 1889. Have they been silenced? Irish secret political societies have cursed the land from whence came those Scotch-Irish heroes whose undaunted bravery made the American Revolution a possibility. If these societies are allowed to exist in our midst, then a wail, like that of the prophet, will soon ascend to heaven, "Your country is desolate, your cities are burned with fire; your land, strangers devour in your presence, and it is desolate, as overthrown by strangers."

NON-PARTISANISM.

BY REV. M. A. GAULT.

It has been well said that every compromise is a victory for the devil. And in our time the air is loaded down with compromise. In the church, in politics, and everywhere it is the order of the day. In politics it goes by the name of non-partisan. J. Ellen Foster says, "If I could today write the platform of the Republican party, I would not have it declare for prohibition." And yet she claims to be a prohibitionist, but the continued supremacy of the Republican party, to which she is more devoted, would be imperiled if that party incorporated prohibition. So often I hear Republicans say, "Personally I am as strong a prohibitionist as you are, but I do not believe in making it a party issue." The United Brethren church once made the secret society question a church issue, but the growth and popularity of their city congregations required them to compromise this position. A United Presbyterian minister assured me recently that a majority of their pastors were in favor of receiving to membership in their churches those who were members of secret societies. Personally, he said, these pastors are as much opposed to secret societies as you are, but do not believe in making that question a church issue. They believe the best way is to receive them into church membership, and then educate them out of the lodges. This compromising, or non-partisan spirit, is agitating the Covenanter church. For nearly a century they, as a body of Christians, have stood by Christ when he was ruled out of lodges, and for the same reason they have stood by him when ruled out of national constitutions and political platforms. They are the only organized body in the land that have made it a church issue to refuse to swear supreme allegiance to a Christian civil constitution, as well as a Christian lodge. But some of their pastors, under the plea of church union, are clamoring for a compromise of this position. They say, Personally we are as much opposed to incorporating by oath with a Christless constitution as you are, but we do not wish to make it a term of communion in the church. We are happy to say, however, that the portion of the Covenanter church most deeply interested in National Reform are setting their faces against this spirit of compromise that is threatening to sweep this old historic church from its moorings.

THE CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE

THE GREATEST OF OUR CHICAGO MEETINGS.

REPORT OF PROCEEDINGS.

When Rev. Alexander Thomson, chairman of the N. C. A. Board, arose at 2 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, in the First M. E. church, Chicago, to call the Christian Conference to order, a fair audience was already present, a large portion of whom were from without the city. Many important reform meetings held here have been very meager in comparison. After reading the call, and remarking briefly upon the number and character of those who had given their names to sustain it, the chairman called upon Elder J. L. Barlow to offer prayer. The Conference voted to have no change of presiding officers, and a long list of honorary secretaries were provided. They were: Rev. H. A. Day, editor of the Wesleyan Herald, Brighton, Mich.; W. L. Enlow, editor of the Free Press, of Birmingham, Iowa; Mrs. M. A. Baker, of the Free Methodist of Chicago; Rev. Halleck Floyd, Dublin, Ind.; O. F. Karheine, of Amerika, Chicago; Rev. Mr. Oleson, of Elgin, Ill.; Rev. George Fry, of Iowa; and Henry L. Kellogg of the Cynosure.

The congregation united in singing "All hail the power of Jesus' name," led by Profs. Nichol and R. L. Harris. Rev. Dr. W. W. Everts, former pastor of the First Baptist church of Chicago, was to conduct the opening devotional exercises. His pointed and able and encouraging remarks were heard with deepest interest, since his voice has never before been heard in reform conventions of this kind. Having spoken he offered a fervent prayer for the blessing of God on the Conference and its work.

The first address was by Prof. Henry C. King, of Oberlin College. Prof. King, though youthful in appearance, spoke with the wisdom of a sage and with the earnestness of conviction. He remarked that his address had been originally prepared at the request of the Oberlin faculty, and had been twice given to the students and citizens of Oberlin. His argument was upon claims of the lodge to antiquity, and to charity, and to show that their perpetual secrecy, pledged or sworn, was immoral and un-Christian.

The address of Rev. E. P. Goodwin, D.D., pastor of the First Congregational church, Chicago, followed. Dr. Goodwin's convictions on this subject have long been known. In 1871 he preached a sermon on secret societies, which was published in the Advance. He has at various times expressed his views briefly from his pulpit, and when Prof. J. R. W. Sloane spoke on the lodge in the United Presbyterian church of this city, he preached on the Sabbath for Dr. Goodwin who gave notice of the address. At the Congress of Churches in 1887 in this city he conducted the devotional services of one session. But as this was his first formal address in one of our reform meetings he was heard with deepest interest, because of his wide influence in his denomination and the esteem of Chicago Christians for one whose pastorate is one of the longest.

The appointment of committees followed in this order:

On Finance: J. M. Hitchcock, H. A. Fischer, Geo. R. Milton, J. S. T. Milligan.

Enrollment: W. I. Phillips, T. P. Robb, C. F. Hawley, F. D. Christie.

Plan of Work: C. A. Blanchard, E. P. Goodwin, W. W. Wait, Mrs. M. C. Baker, E. R. Worrell, W. P. McNary, John Lee, W. W. Everts, J. P. Dyas, G. Vor, F. D. Brook, C. A. Seaberg.

Resolutions: H. C. King, T. H. Hanna, J. L. Barlow, F. D. Christie, and others.

Business: H. L. Kellogg, E. R. Worrell, Geo. R. Milton, A. Thomson, W. I. Phillips.

Rev. William Moerdyk, of the Reformed church, Grand Rapids, Mich., presided in the evening. Rev. Dr. David Metheny, medical missionary of the Reformed Presbyterian church at Tarsus, Asia Minor, was providentially with the Conference the first day and was invited to speak in the evening on the secret societies of that part of the world. His account of the Ansairieh, a remnant of the ancient pagans of Canaan driven out by Joshua, and their secret system was heard with much interest.

Rev. J. S. T. Milligan, of Denison, Kansas, has often been heard at our conventions, and has served the reform in which he is warmly engaged in various capacities. His address was an able argument on "Secret Lodges out of Harmony with Christian churches."

Col. George R. Clarke, the beloved founder and leader of the Pacific Garden Mission in this city, also presented a paper. His topic was "Secret Orders and Revivals." The absence of Rev. John Lee, of the Methodist church of Lockport, Ill., was regretted, but the evening was well filled. Profs. R. A. Harris, of Wheaton, and William S. Nickle, of the First M. E. church, led the audience in singing during the day and evening and also the succeeding day, and added much to the interest of the Conference.

THE SECOND DAY.

The devotional meeting of half an hour, which opened the work of Wednesday, was conducted by Rev. S. H. Swartz, of St. Paul's M. E. church, Chicago. Rev. T. H. Hanna, D.D., pastor of the First United Presbyterian church of Monmouth, presided during the morning. The addresses of the session were by Rev. A. A. Smith, D.D., ex-President of Northwestern College, Naperville, Ill., and Bishop Halleck Floyd of the United Brethren church, Dublin, Ind. Their respective topics were "College Secret Societies," and "The Relation of the Minor Secret Orders to the Christian Church." Dr. Smith came forward on crutches, aged and feeble in body, but of great spirit. He spoke forcibly, and with hearty conviction. Bishop Floyd has from the beginning of the present movement been among the foremost in its support. He mentioned incidentally how he had been led, some time before the Chicago Congress of 1887, to move for such a meeting. This shows how God in his providence works through different and distinct agencies. At the suggestion of the late beloved Mrs. M. A. Blanchard, the annual meeting of the N. C. A. in 1886 adopted a resolution which resulted in the great meeting of April in next year.

Brief remarks were also made by Mrs. Laura S. Haviland, the great-souled Quakeress whose life has been given for the slave, the suffering soldier and the poor of every class. Though 81 years of age she came forward and spoke in a distinct, sweet voice of her sympathy with the reform and prayer to God for its success. Rev. C. C. Foote, of Detroit, and Rev. J. S. T. Milligan also spoke on the college societies, and Rev. J. E. Ambrose, an aged Baptist minister of Chicago, who has been a resident for many years here, and who remembers distinctly the transactions of the Morgan affair.

Letters were also read from Rev. John Lee, M. E. pastor of Lockport, Ill.; Rev. P. S. Henson, D.D., pastor of the First Baptist church, Chicago; Rev. James W. Strong, D.D., president of Carleton College; Prof. W. G. Moorehead, D.D., of Xenia Theological Seminary, now lecturing in the Moody Institute; Mrs. Irene Stoddard, mother of the N. C. A. General Agent, who wrote on her 95th birthday.

Rev. Mr. Lee was detained at home by sickness. Many were disappointed in not hearing his address. Prof. Esbjorn was called to attend court in Peoria; Mr. C. S. Bullock was unexpectedly called away; Mr. Enos W. Shaw was taken sick at Wheaton on Sabbath last; and Prof. Joseph Moore, of Earlham College, was absent. The gaps in the program were well filled, however.

Joseph Cook, the great Boston lecturer, was SECRET SOCIETIES NOT IN HARMONY WITH CHRISTIANITY OR REPUBLICANISM.

A LETTER TO THE CONFERENCE FROM REV. P. S. HENSON, D. D., PASTOR FIRST BAPTIST CHURCH, CHICAGO.

CHICAGO, April 15, 1890.

I greatly regret that absence from the city will make it impossible for me to attend the Conference of the National Christian Association to be held next week. With the general objects of the Association I am thoroughly in sympathy.

Secret political organizations are utterly foreign to the genius of our free American institutions. Whatever plea may be made for their necessity under despotic governments, where free speech is throttled and death is the penalty of attempting reform, surely there can be no excuse for such secret oath-bound cabals in a Republic like ours, where the people are the sovereigns, and every man has absolute liberty of political action.

What we want in America is not Machiavellian plotting in secret council chambers, but an open field and a fair fight. And instead of sanctioning the tactics of our country's enemies by adopting them ourselves, it behooves all Christian patriots to denounce them everywhere and always, and to seek to overwhelm them by an avalanche of awakened public sentiment. How infernally mischievous such organizations can be, was luridly shown in the infamous conspiracy that was uncovered in the Cronin trial. There are those who would have us "fight fire with fire." Rather let us deluge it with water. It is fire from the bottomless pit, and the thing to do is to extinguish it by all the appliances that Christianity can bring to bear upon it. I have referred especially to secret political organizations, but the same great principles apply to organizations that professedly aim at moral and religious ends. For myself, I humbly trust I am a Christian, and the only religion that I believe in is the Christian religion; and one grave objection in my mind to many of the secret societies that abound in our time is their use of religious forms, in which all recognition of Christ is studiously suppressed. There may be those who can use such forms without doing violence to their consciences; I could not. It may be said, indeed, and has been said, that these forms historically antedate Christianity. To which we reply, that by their own showing these forms are now out of date. Christians at least cannot go back of Christ and in religious services speak and act as though he had not come.

"Suppressio veri, suggestio falsi," is a legal maxim of world-wide application. Christ himself has said, "No man cometh unto the Father but by me;" and it is as wicked to ignore him in a lodge as it would be in a church.

But, aside from all this, the whole policy of founding secret societies for moral and religious purposes is as foreign to the spirit of the Gospel as it is to the genius of republican institutions. Its light is not to be put under a bed or under a bushel, but on a candle-stick, that it may give light to all that are in the house. Jesus Christ himself has said, "Every one that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved; but he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God." And in his final vindication of himself before the high priest he said: "I spake openly to the world; I ever taught in the synagogue and in the temple, whither the Jews always resort, and in secret have I said nothing."

We are often told in vaunting speech of the illustrious names that have given their sanction to secret societies. No matter for that,—the name of Jesus is above every name, and his name is recorded in reprobation of them. Let us follow in his footsteps and emulate his spirit, and so shall we deserve the designation which he himself has given us,—"The children of the light."

Yours truly, P. S. HENSON.

JOSEPH COOK'S ADDRESS.

THE LIGHT OF THE LECTURE PLATFORM TURNED UPON THE DARK CORNERS OF THE LODGE.

LET THE LAW OF VERMONT BE MADE UNIVERSAL.

If I am not mistaken, Mr. Chairman, and ladies and gentlemen, there are two kinds of secret societies, the gilt-edged and guilty-edged. (Applause.) The former are made up chiefly of fuss and feathers, regalia and pewter swords. We are too much in earnest to pause to discuss them; but the latter are dipped sometimes, not merely in sacrilege. They actually touch blood. My chief topics to-night are Mormonism, Clan-na-Gaelism, Jesuitism, of the disloyal species; or I might say that my chief theme is disloyal secret oaths. Every piece of cordage in the British navy has a red thread running through its center. Now, disloyal secret oaths run through all the worst kinds of secret societies, and it is the worst kind that we are here to discuss chiefly.

There happened lately three very important legal events: first, the exposure in this city of some of the secrets of the Clan-na-Gael society and its alliance; next, the exposure in Salt Lake City of the secrets of the Endowment House oaths; and thirdly, the justification by the decision of the Supreme Court of the nation of the famous Idaho Test Oaths disfranchising Mormons. The Supreme Court has gone so far as to justify the assertion that any one who is known to have taken the Endowment House oaths should not be naturalized, and, if he has been naturalized, should be disfranchised. Now, this nation is a very small youth compared with what it must be in time. We have 65,000,000 of people governed by about 13,000,000 of voters. Of the 13,000,000, about 3,000,000 fail to vote in every closely-contested election. They are stay-at-homes. When the margin is narrow these absentees easily determine the result. Now, what have you left? I hold up my hand to represent the 10,000,000 voters of this country. Two million of these are illiterates; about 2,000,000 of them are members of secret lodges of various sorts. Here you have the great thumb of the Whisky Ring, with their allies, brothels and gambling dens (applause), and they clasp hands over the illiterate classes, and it has a good deal of help from various kinds of lodges in spite of the entire freedom of some of our secret organizations from alliance with the Whisky Ring. I don't charge them all with such alliance, but in politics they have such alliances frequently. Here you have the Democratic and Republican parties, the two great fingers of this hand. Here is this powerful combination, and you notice what power that combination may have upon these two fingers. Politicians are good arithmeticians. When the margin is narrow there is nothing for those fingers but to stoop down and get votes from this combination. It is over and under, and over and under, and over and under, and things are immensely mixed. Now, that is the grip that is on the throat of every great municipality of the country. And here is your Republican party that has done wonders in some States for temperance and morality, but which, when it meets in this city for a national organization, forgets until the last day of its session to say anything upon the chief mischief of our time,—the chief mischief that has more money behind it and has caused more trouble than ever slavery caused. On the last day of your Republican Convention it is in favor of all judicious measures towards temperance. And as a national organization it is not under that thumb, it is over it and under it, and over it and under it. (Applause and laughter.)

Now, the solemn truth is that three-quarters of our public officials are members of secret societies. It is supposed to be very essential to the success of a politician that he have the support of the lodges. I am asking you to look at this combination of forces in national politics in order that you may make a calculation in your thoughts of the ultimate danger of disloyal secret oaths. I wish this topic would be discussed, not only for to-night, to-morrow, and for the next week and the next month and the next year, but for the next century! If these are the postures of our parties in the present hour of a thin population, what will be their postures when we have a hundred and fifty and two hundred millions, and when the national grab bag is a thousand times broader and deeper than at the present hour? If at this hour it seems particularly dangerous to oppose the system of lodges or disloyal oaths—if I, for instance, ran considerable risk in uttering myself candidly to-night on this topic, what will be the risk if we allow the deadly Upas tree to grow until it has attained its full height? For, in the present combination of forces and politics, so much force and power can be exercised by secret combinations that almost no politician dare oppose them. What may be the power exercised ultimately in a population compared with which our present human beings altogether on this continent are a mere sprinkling? If it is impossible for any one to speak out on this topic without being shot at, or shot into by the arrow of slander in ambush, then it is high time to draw out the fire of the enemy and know where we are. (Great applause.)

THE SECRET OATHS OF THE ENDOWMENT HOUSE.

It was my fortune in Salt Lake City some years ago to speak very candidly on the mischiefs of Mormonism. I made some attempts to discover the secrets of the Endowment House. Of course, I could not enter that great Bastille. There it stood with its walls twelve and nine feet thick, with its narrow windows and its guarded doors. The building was not finished when I was first in Salt Lake City, and yet it had the appearance of a structure intended to be a fortress as well as a place of secret asylum. I was told by some judges of the United States Courts that the Mormon Endowment House oaths contained distinctly disloyal pledges. Various pamphlets had been issued on this topic. I gathered everything I could put my hand on that was in print. I cross-examined a parlor full of gentlemen one evening, some of whom were seceding Mormons, as to the character of these oaths. In short, I obtained from various sources almost the information which has now come before the public as a result of judicial proceedings of the most careful kind in Salt Lake City.

But what could I do with that information? It was not official, it was not legal; it was information gathered by travel. I personally credited it; but you can say of a seceding Mormon that he has been embittered by his experience and is not to be trusted. You can say, as Mormons did say, that, rightly interpreted, the oaths were all loyal. You can say that the seceding Mormons have been misled, and that they have not gone through the whole scale of Mormonism and do not understand it to the top, and that really loyalty abides at the summit, however much disloyalty might be in the roots of the tree. I found that I could not do anything with that information, and yet I had as much information as I have now. You cannot get from hearsay a hearing on the subject of secret societies in this country. You must have actual, legal evidence, and that is the reason to-night that I have resolved to put my foot down on nothing but absolutely legal evidence received in the courts, and when I get to talking of Masonry I mean to say nothing that has not been justified over and over by investigations begun in legal manner in our courts of law. We have now obtained all this information in law, and the public is convinced that there is no longer any doubt about the disloyal character of the Mormon oaths.

WE KNOW MASONRY AS WE KNOW MORMONISM.

The very highest judicial tribunal has settled the question once and for all that a man who has taken these Mormon Endowment House oaths should not be naturalized, and that if he already calls himself a citizen he should be disfranchised. We will agree that the public information on this subject, gathered from the best source, none of it likely to be authoritative to the whole public, was after all correct; that what we heard from seceding Mormons was correct; that what we gathered from judges who had shrewd surmises as to the character of these oaths was correct; and we ought to take a lesson from this as to some other subjects connected with secret societies, where we are rebuffed by being told we know nothing about the matter. We knew something about Mormonism before this legal evidence came to us; and I maintain we know something about the vaunted secrets of some societies amongst us. (Laughter.) We have the secret evidence to produce, nevertheless I mean to stand on the legal evidence. (Applause.)

But I am not to be intimidated by being told that I have never been a member of that secret society. There has never been any great secret society in this land that has any secrets it can keep long. The reporters of this country are an omniscient class, and not under any oaths to keep secrets. (Laughter.) I am convinced that our impression of the oaths taken in secret societies of the land is about right, and yet I will not assert that that is the case, for I wish to stand on strictly legal evidence. I say that our experience with the Mormon Endowment House oaths should convince us that after all the shrewd surmises of our best scholars, our best legal minds, our best editors, are very near the truth, and that legal investigation will probably justify our position.

THE CRONIN MURDER AS A LODGE PROPHECY.

We take up next, this topic with which you are so familiar in Chicago, the murder of Dr. Cronin. I want you to look at the atrocity of such proceedings as were brought out in detail before your court, the atrocity of the principle behind them—a vast organization extending across the continent. Let our population be doubled and trebled; let political prizes be increased; let the attempt to bring on a war here between factions and a war there between sections of some secret organization be increased in virulency in proportion to the increase of the size of the prizes, and you can imagine that many a secret murder might occur, traceable to just such organizations. The death of Dr. Cronin was probably providential. The absolute infernality which lies in the principles that led to the murder of Dr. Cronin may grow to a serpent twining around our Republic as the serpent twined around the Laocoon of old. To undertake the task of seizing that serpent by the throat while he is young by the body politic, and social, and religious, and then hurling the viper back into the chaos where he belongs, is the means to be found of ridding our nation of such stains.

Many ministers have gone into secret organizations. Numbers of our best citizens are in them. I am not assailing any man's motive. The organization is one thing, but the men in it are another. There may be good men in it. I will endorse all that. I assail no individual's motives. I suppose there are a multitude of really excellent men in the different secret organizations of this country that really do not know the characters of the organizations or have not reflected on them, and if they find out the character after they joined it, sometimes they don't leave it for fear of trouble. Very often they do leave. There are very many secret organizations in this country with thoroughly good men in them who rarely attend the meetings, but pay their dues. Only about one out of five, they say, of the Freemasons is regular in attendance.

I am not classing the Freemasons with Clan-na-Gael people, because I believe they are on a much higher plane; but I shall have enough to say about them. Your Clan-na-Gael people have been proved to be dangerous to society. In view of some of their principles it is not improper to affirm that those who are loyal to such principles are disloyal to the Republic. I mean by a disloyal secret oath, an oath that is not authorized by the public law and that tramples on the authority of the state or of the church, or of both together. I maintain that a secret oath of that sort ought to be illegal, ought to be regarded by the church as reprehensible, as I shall show before I conclude; and as I may as well show at this moment.

THE VERMONT LAW.

The statutes of Vermont up to 1880—I suppose up to the present hour—made such oaths illegal. I am discussing Clan-na-Gaelism, and you will not think that Vermont is narrow or bigoted because she puts a penalty of $50 or $200 upon every secret oath not authorized by public law. Here, I say, is the red thread in the center of the cordage. Put an end to these illegal oaths and you put an end to all societies founded upon them. I confess with shame and confusion, Mr. Chairman, that although I was born in the State of Vermont and lived inside of it almost all my days, I did not know until this week that Vermont has made secret oaths, not provided for by statute, illegal and punishable by fine, and so has actually uprooted all societies founded upon such oaths. In the Revised Statutes of Vermont as published here in the edition of 1880—a friend of mine very kindly obtained this law book for me this afternoon—is the following:

"A person who administers to another an oath or affirmation or obligation in the nature of an oath which is not required or authorized by law, or a person who voluntarily suffers such oath or obligation to be administered to him, or voluntarily takes the same, shall be fined not more than $200 and not less than $50; but this section shall not prohibit an oath or affidavit for the purpose of establishing a claim, petition or application by an individual or corporation administered without intentional secrecy [which shows that where secrecy is intentional the oath is illegal] by a person authorized to administer oaths, or an oath or affidavit for the verification of commercial papers or documents relating to property or which may be required by a public officer or tribunal of the United States or of any State or any other country, nor abridge the authority of a magistrate."

That is the law of Vermont, and I beg you to notice that the penalty here has been doubled since 1833. You say the excitement at the time of the murder of Morgan naturally caused competition between politicians to catch the Anti-masonry vote, and that in the swirl of public excitement Vermont was ready to pass this law. That law was originally passed in 1833. It passed the law first in that year, but the penalty was only $100. In 1839, six years or more after, Masonry had been superseded by anti-slavery as a topic of great prominence in politics. Vermont doubled the penalty, and here she has kept the penalty on her books forty years, $200 the highest fine for taking an oath or administering an oath not provided for by the laws of the Commonwealth.

A SHARP SCYTHE FOR THE SWAMPS OF IMMORALITY.

Now, I maintain that in Mormonism, in Clan-na-Gaelism, and in Jesuitism, it is high time that we carry that principle through all our States; and, in fact, Freemasonry also, if you please, for it would cut up Freemasonry. (Applause.) To use the admirable metaphor of the eloquent gentleman [Dr. Wallace] who has preceded me, there is a scythe that moves through the swamp of pestilential growth—I call it the keen blade of the Vermont Revised Statutes, and all I want to cut off the weeds of society is that law made universal. (Applause.) I brought to the platform a legal opinion from no less a man than Daniel Webster, when Massachusetts and New Hampshire had passed this law which is now in force in Vermont. It is astonishing what weight Webster would put into a few sentences, how a whole topic would be covered on its many sides by half a dozen of his judicious clauses:

"All secret associations, the members of which take upon themselves extraordinary obligations to one another and are bound together by secret oaths, are natural sources of jealousy and just alarm to others, and especially unfavorable to harmony and mutual confidence among men living together under public institutions, and are dangerous to the general cause of civil liberty and justice. Under the influence of this conviction I heartily approve the law lately enacted in the State of which I am a citizen [that is, Massachusetts] for abolishing all such oaths and obligations."

So that Webster, according to that, would justify this Vermont law; and all I stand for here to-night is just that principle in its entire natural application. And if Webster was a fanatic; if these legislators of Vermont were fanatics, then we are fanatics for justifying this central principle.

I now come to Jesuitism, and I beg leave to say that I do not wish to attack any man's religion. I would speak of Roman Catholicism as a religion with all due respect. I am not here to discuss that topic to-night. But Roman Catholicism as a polity is another matter. Political Romanism is under the management of an oath-bound secret organization called the Jesuit body. Now, as cool an authority as the Encyclopædia Britannica says that Jesuitism, as a secret oath bound body, is a naked sword with its hilt at Rome and its point everywhere. That sword has been drawn of late for the destruction of the American common school system. Our Republic rests its chief weight on a tripod of which the chief supports are a free church, a free school, a free state. The tripod is of such a nature that when you break either of the supports the whole tumbles. Now, it is beyond controversy that the arm of the most powerful of ecclesiastical organizations known to history is lifted with that Jesuit sword in its hand for the purpose of cutting to pieces the priceless, historically-tested, absolutely invaluable American common school system. I say, paralyzed be the arm that is lifted for such a purpose! (Applause.)

POLITICAL ROMANISM AND SECRET OATHS.

But the power of it is in its secret oaths. It is said that ten men with an understanding with each other can manage a hundred men in almost every assembly. Protestantism in this country is like the hundred men who have no understanding. Jesuitism is like the little group that understand each other. You say it is not very powerful in this country. It is supposed at the present time that the majority of the Jesuits are here. They have been driven out of France, out of England, out of Germany,—of course they have tried to return and recover their supremacy, and have failed, but they are here in larger numbers because they have been expelled from other countries. They have been driven out of South America. Near my blessed home in the Adirondacks, near Lake George, there was an immense fire last summer, and rattlesnakes and other inhabitants of the woods were driven into a ravine. So much territory was burned that all the wild things in that region were frightened away into a certain quarter, to which they naturally fled as the flames followed. Now, Europe has been burned open again and again; South America has been burned open again and again in its flame of indignation against the political intrigues of the Jesuits, and the reptiles have come to the United States. The power is in their secret organization.

Yet you are told this is a very dangerous topic. The newspapers will attack you. Many of them have Catholic editors and reporters. I thank God that the great organs here in your noble city of Chicago have lately been telling the whole truth about Chicago, and have been defending our public school system in a manner for which I make my best bow to the public press. (Applause.) I think you will bear me out, gentlemen, when I say that I do not always praise the papers. I am an editor myself, and know that editors are the hardest workers on the globe. I have been known to criticise the press, but I praise your Chicago Inter Ocean, your Chicago Tribune, for discussing the relations of political Romanism to our common schools, and for defending distinctively American ideas in that connection. But the Jesuits are not disheartened; they know the power of secret organization. What have we done in Boston? We have gone back to Daniel Webster's principle. We have gone back to the underlying facts of the Vermont law. We have gone back, rather, to the old doctrine of Massachusetts, that every official shall take an oath that he renounces all allegiance to every foreign prince, person, prelate, state or potentate. (Applause.) We want every Jesuit in the land to take an oath like that, and any Jesuit or any citizen who will not take an oath of that sort, saying that civil law is, in his opinion, superior in authority to any ecclesiastical law, or to the mandates of any secret organization, shall be disfranchised, shall never be naturalized (applause), so that America shall be kept in the control of Americans.

DISFRANCHISEMENT FOR DISLOYAL OATHS.

We are not narrow, we are not fanatic. There is a reason for returning to the view of our forefathers. That iron-clad oath in Massachusetts has been shortened of late. It stands like this:

"I do solemnly swear that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, and will support the Constitution thereof, so help me God."

That is all that is left of that iron-clad oath, but the Massachusetts people are beginning to see that their fathers were none too cautious. There is a Boston Committee of one hundred that has been doing valuable work in connection with the common school system, and I hold in my hand a pamphlet which they have just issued, and of which the secretary of the Association, Dr. Dunne, a very scholarly gentleman, is the author, in which the doctrine is held, with the full concurrence of the Boston Committee of one hundred, embracing many distinguished names, that a man who cannot take such an oath as that should never be admitted to right of suffrage. (Applause.) We stand here on exactly the principles—the last speaker emphasized it—that disloyal oaths should disfranchise the taker. The judge who gave that decision concerning these Endowment House oaths, if they were strictly oaths, would give, I believe, a similar decision as to the famous—I might have said infamous—oaths of Jesuitism. No man can be a good Jesuit and honest, and take that oath in Massachusetts to renounce allegiance to foreign potentates and prelates; and yet I think the Jesuits will take that oath and violate it as often as the interests of their order require. Now, if that is off-hand speech, make the most of it.

We had issued not many months ago an encyclical by the Pope of Rome in which he says that it is the duty of every good Catholic to be guided by the political wisdom of the Vatican. I have the language here before me. When the church has spoken on any matter of faith and morals the church members obey, but Cardinal Manning says that that "morals" includes the field of education and politics. Jerome Bonaparte, a relative of Napoleon Bonaparte married, in Baltimore. A descendant of his, Charles Jerome Bonaparte, made a speech at the recent Convention of Roman Catholic laymen in that city. In it occurred this sentence: "The Pope of Rome may be a prisoner or an exile, but he can never be a subject." That Baltimore Convention of Roman Catholic laymen adopted a platform of principles, and in the last paragraph asserted that any government which passes any law injurious to the interests of the church acts without authority; and that convention denied the right of any government to pass any such law without the Pope's full previous consent.

DANIEL WEBSTER AND THE BLACK POPE.

What has all this to do with secret societies? The Jesuit order at this moment is supreme in Rome. The Jesuit order is an oath-bound organization, and its oaths are actually disloyal in substance and form. I make myself responsible for that statement, without making myself responsible for asserting that this or that pretended text of the Jesuit oath is the actual text,—there is great debate about what the text is. But I maintain that no Jesuit can honestly take the oaths required of him by the clerical party and remain loyal in the American sense to our institutions. I maintain that Jesuitism does divide the allegiance of the Jesuit who takes those oaths honestly.

Now the problem in Rome is that there is a Black Pope. The Black Pope is the head of the Jesuit order, the White Pope the head of the Roman church. Whenever they disagree, the Black Pope has his way; and whenever they agree they rule the world. The Black Pope is the more important Pope, and the Black Pope is the head of an oath-bound secret order. I am for applying the Vermont Statute to that organization. I am for applying that principle of Webster and of the present Committee of One Hundred in Boston to the whole range of the pestilential, disloyal oaths. Vicar General Preston said in New York City not many months ago: "The Catholic who will take his religion from Rome but not his politics is not a good Catholic." Now there is a multitude of good Catholics who resent this. I am not bringing this as an imputation of disloyalty against good Catholics, but I will not vouch for the clerical party as a class. The multitude of them feel as Father McGlynn did, that the right of political opinion belonged inalienably to the individual.

The combination is such that the time has come to speak of the influence of disloyal oaths and the Jesuit organization. Our Roman Catholic citizens will thank us Protestants for doing this and when enlightened Catholic parents know very well that our schools are better than parochial schools, and that the attack upon our schools is organized chiefly by this Jesuit society, the Roman Catholic laymen themselves will be grateful to us for leading in an onset which will deliver them at last from bondage. South American Catholics have shaken off that yoke. In Chili there is a fine for sending a child to a Jesuit school for instruction. In the Argentine Republic the parochial schools are put under close supervision. The Republic is so filled with the modern spirit that it will not submit to Romanism for a moment. In all the republics of South America the yoke of political Romanism has been shaken off, although the nominal faith of the people has remained. Many of our Roman Catholics devoutly attached to their faith are still ill at ease under the power of this secret society in clerical form, and if we raise a huge wave of popular indignation I have no doubt will take advantage of it to assert their own liberties in the United States as they have in South America and in Mexico. Parochial schools are abolished in Mexico. I might read you extracts from the famous recent Encyclical of the Pope issued no longer ago than last February. They are very familiar to you all. The point I emphasize is that this whole scheme is Jesuitism, is the result of the influence of the Black Pope on the White Pope, for the present Pope is very well known to be a friend of the Jesuit order. And in this foreign attack on your common schools you have an exhibition of disloyal secret oaths setting up a power within a power and introducing here actual alien authority. Now I say that to this secret Jesuit authority Americans are not going to submit.

Cardinal Manning, of London, himself well understanding the power of the secret organization of the Roman Catholic church, says—and he says this in public to a collection of Roman Catholic ecclesiastics—"It is your mission, holy fathers, to drag down, to bend the will of an imperial race." I say from Chicago here, the city of the great lakes, to Cardinal Manning, that we have now, thank God, no slave and no king on this continent, and that we shall never go into bondage to any king or prelate on the other side of the sea. (Applause.) But you are in danger of having quite a struggle on that matter because you are in mystery as to the nature of the oath-bound organization.

WHAT OF FREEMASONRY?

Now, in the few minutes left me, what shall I say of Freemasonry? It is an oath-bound, secret organization. There are many good men in it. It has not been guilty of high crimes and misdemeanors, as Mormonism has been, as Clan-na-Gaelism has been, as Jesuitism has been; and yet it was asserted at the time of the Morgan excitement that the skirts of Freemasonry were dipped in blood. I think we know pretty well what Freemasonry is. I am not a bit curious about the secrets that are said not to be discovered. (Laughter.) There is a certain childishness about the pretense of Scripture and Freemasonry that amuses me. We understand thoroughly well what Freemasonry is, and many of us who have friends in the organization dislike to hear the full mischief of secret oaths discussed; but where does this Vermont scythe swing? The Vermont rule repealed the charter of one of these Grand Lodges. She took away from each chapter of that State all power to hold property. The law was aimed at Freemasonry as well as at other organizations; aimed chiefly at Freemasonry in 1833. That law, if carried out everywhere, would sweep Freemasonry off this country.

Well, you would say a good deal of good would be struck off. It is a benevolent society. It takes care of a good many people. Freemasonry confines its benefactions to its own members, and unless you pay up your dues and take three degrees you don't get a handsome burial. (Laughter.) It is not certain your widow will get much attention. On the whole, the benefactions of Freemasonry do not amount to a third part of the fees paid in by the different members. It is said that Odd-fellowship is a more benevolent institution than Freemasonry. I think, on the whole, that each of these organizations can afford to be tolerably benevolent to its own members. They take in so large an amount that they may well give out a small amount. I do most solemnly believe that all the good that Freemasons and Odd-fellows do might be accomplished without any secrecy at all. I have no objection to their benevolent purposes. I have no objection to several minor principles. But hear the facts ascertained on legal evidence. Remember that we knew pretty well before we had legal evidence in the

A PENNSYLVANIA REPORT.

YORK, Pa., April 21, 1890.

EDITORS CYNOSURE:—For the encouragement of the Pennsylvania readers of the Cynosure I will now give you a report of my work as provisional Corresponding Secretary of the Pennsylvania Christian Anti-secret Association for the year 1889.

During the year I mailed for the Association 337 letters and 123 postal cards. Nearly all the letters contained anti-secret and anti-Catholic tracts, most of them being addressed to intelligent citizens of the State, who thus, perhaps, received their initiation into the anti-secret world, having their hoodwinks suddenly torn from their eyes, to the intense disgust of their lodge acquaintances who have been enjoying all the outwitting and hoodwinking sports for years. And just here I will say that the best plan to spoil the sports of the sly, cunning and crafty craftsmen of the devil's priestcraft and kingcraft Secret Empire, in any town or city, is to mail one hundred or more letters containing first rate anti-secret and anti-Catholic tracts to the most intelligent men and women of the place.

I mailed and otherwise distributed 192 anti-secret newspapers, some of which were sent to me for this purpose by friends of reform. I also mailed our State collection sheets, which can be altered and used in any community or State, to 120 anti-secret workers. My object in doing this was to induce workers everywhere to adopt the plan of making systematic yearly collections for State Associations, and also for county societies. Many will give for anti-secret reform purposes, if a proper collector will call upon them yearly.

While doing all in my power to encourage all anti-secret friends, I have never lost an opportunity to introduce the reform to all strangers I have met at any time or place. And I have tried to do my duty to the anti-secret and anti-Catholic press, by contributing reports, etc., and selling newspapers.

I have in my possession much evidence to prove that the anti-secret cause is gaining steadily in York, in York county, and in the State. And if our friends will send some of their spare cash to Treasurer J. C. Young, Custer City, McKean Co., Pa., my report for the year 1890 will, perhaps, be still more cheering.

The Jesuitic secret empire of the United States is still arming, drilling, teaching and training its orders, societies, clans, conclaves, chapters, commanderies, legions, armies, camps, castles, leagues, etc. Will all citizens of Pennsylvania who read the Cynosure help us to sound the alarm in every county, town and city of the State?

Yours, etc., EDWARD J. CHALFANT.

CORRESPONDENCE.

FROM A TALLADEGA COLLEGE STUDENT.

TALLADEGA, Ala., March 20, 1890.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Please allow me to submit the following to your consideration. I've been a reader of the Cynosure for several years. Some kind and unknown friends have given me a God-sent blessing by sending me this paper free. When I began to read it I was a member of several secret societies, and had been a Master Mason ten years. I was never satisfied while in these societies. I knew that the oaths and the prayers we were required to make were not in keeping with God's Word, and that the hypocrisy, intemperance, fraud, and many other wrong things done in the lodge, were not only a shameful disgrace, but a curse and an outrage upon humanity. By reading the Cynosure and tracts sent me by J. E. Roy, D.D., and from the instructions received as a student in this college from your lecturers on this subject, and my own convictions, I have been led to forever forsake and abandon the lodge. I am once more a free man, for Freemasonry means to me, "slave-man."

I have been a minister of the Gospel for twelve years, and have traveled in most of the Southern States, and very well know the deplorable condition of our race because of secretism, ignorance, drink, immorality, and a thousand other vices that tend to drag us downward. In certain sections of the South secret societies have such strong hold upon our people that it is absolutely impossible for a non-society minister or teacher to get bread to eat out of his profession. The "lion's grip" brings him in, or down and out.

The National Christian Association has and is still doing an inestimable good toward the uplifting of our race, by turning on more and more intellectual and Gospel light over the dark and bloody chasm. Yet, there are not only thousands, but millions of our people yet unreached, who are bound and enslaved by this false goddess of heathen barbarism. The colleges, churches, schools, ministers, teachers and lecturers are doing a wonderful work in drawing us from under this heavy yoke of death. But the great bulk is yet untouched. Revs. J. E. Roy, G. W. Andrews, H. S. DeForrest and Rev. Mr. Porter (your lecturer) can testify that the half has not been told. Our people are in a pitiful condition. We are hated, robbed, trapped, and even murdered. Every possible thing is done to keep us down because we believe in and love the Northern friends who do all they can to help us up. I do pray that God will, in his own time and way, deliver us from this thralldom of ignorance, drink, secretism and death.

If you will allow me to suggest, I think and believe if there could be a trusty, able, working colored man put into the field, to visit, lecture and distribute suitable literature on the matter in hand, and to work up the youthful mind against these evils in all the central points and the rural districts, the devil would soon be seen "falling like lightning from heaven," and Christ's kingdom would soon come. Rev. Mr. Porter and other lecturers, the churches, colleges and schools, are, indeed, doing a great work on this line, but there are thousands that are not reached by them which could be reached and saved in this way.

Hoping that God will, through your Christian Association, work mightily to rescue and save his people from the "body of this death," I am your humble servant,

LORENZO D. CUNNINGHAM.

PITH AND POINT.

MASONS DISLIKE THE WASHINGTON SOUVENIR.

We have had just a little bit of a flurry at Wyand. I had the Washington picture framed, and on election day I asked the postmaster if he would let it hang in the office. He said yes, and drove a nail in the wall and hung the picture up. Two days after I went to town and a friend told me the picture was creating considerable excitement. The postmaster got a newspaper and tried to prove by it that Washington was master of a lodge. But the picture still hung up as it was put. On Saturday I went to town again. The picture was not to be seen. I inquired for it and was told that some of the business men objected to it; also it was against the rules of the postoffice, so they had taken it down out of sight and the face turned to the wall, and a coat hung over it. I took the picture home and have it hanging in my house.—JOHN BRADLEY, Wyand, Ill.

A COMMENDATION WORTH READING.

The Cynosure needs no commendation by me. Take it all in all it is to my thinking the best periodical extant in the land. None other could fill its place and mission. Long may it continue to circulate, filled as it always is with the benign lessons of piety to God and of the highest good to man.—J. N. NORRIS, Birmingham, Iowa.

SUCCESS MUST COME.

The fight is long and success slow, but I feel it must come, as God is on our side. The people seem slow to take hold of unpopular truth and support it. But little by little the victory will come.—(Rev.) JOEL MARTIN, Hillsdale, Mich.

TENNESSEE LOOKS TO THE CONFERENCE.

I look for much good from the April conference upon the lodge. The church needs instruction. The lodge under the white light of truth will seem, as it is, so monstrous that all Christians will flee from it as children do from snakes. The Cynosure, under God, is a mighty power to create and concentrate sentiment which shall work the destruction of lodgery—the snaky sorceress now hugged by church and state.—J. R. MILLIN, Knoxville, Tenn.

MASONRY AND EASTER.

I send you a copy of Easter service of Knight Templars, which took place here in the Methodist church on Easter day, the Methodist minister acting as prelate. There was a service of some other secret society at the Baptist church. All other churches were adorned. In my own church, Congregational, it was worse than ever before. At the Wednesday evening meeting before, I gave my testimony against such doings, that they were an abomination in the sight of God, as I understand it; and that Easter was of pagan origin. I was flatly contradicted by our pastor. There is but one other who stands square with me on Easter. Truly our lives are fallen in strange times. This copy of Masonic Easter services was handed to me, I suppose, that I might see how full of Christ they are, and to see that there could not be anything very wrong in it. Nothing but solemn mockery.—O. TICHENOR, Waukesha, Wis.

LITERATURE.

"THE MYSTERY OF SUFFERING," by Rev. J. H. Brookes, author of "The Way Made Plain," "Maranatha," and editor of "The Truth." Price, paper, 25c. Cloth, 50 cts. Gospel Publishing Co., 10 Arcade Court, Chicago, Ill.

Dr. Brookes never writes a purposeless book, and therefore a new volume from his pen is always hailed by thousands who have heard his remarkable lectures on the Scripture. It is the aim of this book to throw the light of God's truth upon the afflictions of his people. The titles of the chapters indicate the character of the book: Suffering the common lot; The cause of suffering; Bodily suffering; Mental suffering; Satan and suffering; The trial of faith; Christ and suffering; The abiding Comforter; The God of all comfort; The everlasting arms; Fear not; Songs in the night; Afterward; Till He come. The entire book is well calculated to comfort the afflicted, and the large clear type will make it easy for the aged and the afflicted to read. The sick and suffering are ready, says Dr. Brookes in his preface, "to turn anywhere for healing or for hope, and hence they are peculiarly exposed to the fatal influence of false teaching." The chapter on Bodily Suffering therefore is a powerful exposure of the fallacious theories of so called "Christian Science," etc. Any who are tempted to espouse false notions about healing will find this argument clear, reasonable and Christian. The whole book is helpful and comforting. All may read it with profit, for those who do not mourn to-day may to-morrow.

Our Day for April opens with an article on the recent reverses of Mormonism, written by Rev. Dr. R. G. McNiece of Salt Lake City. Following this is a lengthy article, full of pungent points, by Rev. Dr. J. W. Wellman, reviewing Professor Allen's biography of Jonathan Edwards. Statements and representations made in the Professor's book are shown to be not in accord with facts. The address of George W. Cable before the Massachusetts club, on Solutions for Southern Problems, is printed in full and is highly interesting. The array of facts, figures and arguments are made attractive by the speaker's "earnest way of putting things." The life and work of Lord Shaftesbury is reviewed by Cyrus Hamlin. Beautiful extracts are taken from this great man's diary. Edward Bellamy's Nationalism is the subject of Joseph Cook's first Monday lecture for the season of 1890. This lecture is printed in full. Questions to specialists are answered by Chas. F. Wingate and Rev. Dr. Josiah Strong. Vital points of expert opinion are contributed by David Dudley Field on compulsory voting and by ex-Pres. McCosh on the federation of Evangelical churches. The editorial notes are, as usual, full of good things.

The Century Magazine, in connection with the anniversary of the centenary of Washington's inauguration, prints in its May number several articles on original portraits of the Washingtons and "Some New Washington Relics." Among the portraits is a frontispiece from a hitherto unengraved profile view of Washington, by James Wright; also a portrait of Washington, by Ramage, discovered through a previous article in the Century by Mr. Charles Henry Hart.

Bishop Taylor's magazine, the African News, for April is full of good reading matter. The Bishop's department has observations on Liberia, incidents of his missionary, and some late letters from him. The story of his life for youth and children is continued. The editorial department opens with an article on who are called to Africa. Stanley and his work is given quite a prominent place.

It is often taken for granted that the Roman Catholic church rejects all secret societies. Not so. It heartily welcomes all such as are in subordination to the church, and which are not inconsistent with the confessional. A new one recently organized in Boston has warm commendation from the Catholic Review. How soon this church may have the controlling power over all, or most of these orders, and when backed by military organization the church will be in the way of controlling our nation in its own interests.

That peace is an evil peace that doth shut truth out of doors. If peace and truth cannot go together, truth is to be preferred, and rather to be chosen for a companion than peace.—J. Tillinghast.

IN BRIEF.

About two years ago salt was discovered in the town of Hutchinson, Kansas. To-day there are twelve establishments in operation, with a combined output of 1,637,000 barrels of salt per annum, and much further development is expected. The field of operation is so great and the salt of such purity.

Arthur Mack, ex-chief the Shanghai detective force, asserts that while China has a population of over 450,000,000, yet the criminal element in proportion to numbers is less than ten per cent. of what it is in the Chinese quarter of San Francisco. He accounts for this by the greater stringency of the laws for the punishment of crime in China and the greater certainty in their administration.

The largest gun in existence has been sent by Messrs. Crupp to Cronstadt. It is of cast-steel, weighs 235 tons, has a barrel 40 feet long, a diameter of 6½ feet in the largest part and a bore of 13½ inches. Its range is over 11 miles, and it will fire two shots per minute, each shot costing from $1,250 to $1,500. In a trial of the war monster, the projectile—4 feet long and weighing 1800 pounds, and propelled by a charge of 700 pounds of powder—penetrated 19½ inches and went 1,312 yards beyond the target.

"I believe I'll sit down," said Stanton, "and give that man a piece of my mind." "Do so," said Lincoln; "write him now while you have it on your mind. Make it sharp; cut him all up." Stanton did not need a second invitation. It was a bone-cruncher which he read to the President. "That's right," said he, "that's a good one." "Who can I get to send it by?" mused the secretary. "Send it?" replied Lincoln; "send it? Why, don't send it at all. Tear it up. You have freed your mind on the subject, and that is all that is necessary. Tear it up. You never want to send such letters; I never do."—New York Herald.

The Catholic Citizen prints a statement of the number of German Catholic and Lutheran parochial schools in Wisconsin. The statement is but recently compiled, and is as nearly correct as it can be. The Catholic parochial schools number 264, divided as follows: Milwaukee Arch-diocese, 136 schools, with 20,000 pupils; Green Bay Diocese, 70 schools, with 10,271 pupils; LaCrosse Diocese, 58 schools, with 6,000 pupils; total number of pupils, 36,271. The Lutherans have 193 schools, with a total membership of 20,394. The further statement is made that the Catholic population of Wisconsin is 347,000, and the Lutheran population, 127,036.

A special from Nauvoo, Ill., says: An important discovery was made by some laborers in excavating near "French Fort," a relic of Mormon days, and later a noted spot on account of Cabel and his Icarian settlement having settled near there. A large out-house on the premises of the Catholic Convent was being removed. While the workmen were engaged part of the flooring sank out of sight, and investigation revealed an old well, thought to be fully 1,000 feet deep. This discovery goes to strengthen the supposition that during the Mormon regime many hidden wells and subterranean passages existed in the city, whose uses were never wholly accounted for.

Scotland reckons only 1,500 Jews; Ireland only 1,000. In France there are 70,000 Jews, of whom 40,000 are in Paris. In the British colonies there are something less than 20,000 Jews. The total number of Jews throughout the world is between 8,000,000 and 10,000,000. Jews are found in large numbers along the northern coasts of Africa, as well as in Abyssinia. In America there are 500,000 Jews, and Jews are dwelling in Mexico and in almost every State in South America. There are supposed to be from 40,000 to 50,000 Jews in Persia, 10,000 to 15,000 in the Khanates, and a like number in India. About 40,000 Jews were transferred upon the annexation of the provinces of the German Empire, among whose 50,000,000 of inhabitants 60,000 belong to this remarkable race. In the United Kingdom there are about 100,000 Jews, of whom seven-tenths are in London, the greater part of the remainder being in Manchester, Liverpool, Leeds and Birmingham.

The Russian government, so we are now told, will begin soon to build its great Siberian railroad. This is the longest line of railway yet proposed—4,500 miles—and will cost at the lowest estimate $220,000,000. It is no wonder, therefore, that the scheme has met with strong opposition, some of the critics declaring that it would bankrupt the Russian Government, and that it would accomplish no good results when built. The friends of the project claim that it will open up a vast section of fertile country and mountain regions abounding in mineral wealth, that it will make a high-way to the Pacific along which the commerce of the world will pass. It is also claimed that it is a military necessity in order to the protection of Russian territory on the Pacific coast. When completed the road will shorten the race of the Nelly Blys around the world some twenty-five days. It now takes forty days to go from London to Peking, but by this Siberian highway it will be possible to reach Peking from New York in twenty-five days. As the road will probably be built in sections, some years are likely to elapse before this is possible.

CONCERNING PREMIUMS.

We offer premiums to compensate such of our subscribers as take the pains and trouble to secure new subscribers to the Cynosure. Many who do this refuse to receive pay, and work because they love the work; others are glad to receive premiums. But,

First, We do not offer any man a premium to renew his own subscription. If a man has taken this paper a year and does not care enough about it to take it longer without being hired to, we do not offer him a premium.

Second, We do not offer a premium to a new subscriber to hire him to take the paper. When he has subscribed for the paper and paid for it himself, and knows its worth, then if he will take the trouble to introduce the paper to others, he can have a premium on the new subscription, but not on his own.

Third, We do not offer a premium where one member of a family stops the paper, and another member of the same family subscribes for it. We do not consider such a name the name of a new subscriber.

Any book we publish or sell can be had as a premium at reasonable rates. We will allow thirty cents' worth of any of our publications, at retail rates, post-paid, for one dollar's worth of new subscriptions to the Cynosure.

THE N. C. A. FUNDS.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of — dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be sufficient discharge.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 1, 1890.

THE STANDARD LIFTED UP.

ISA. 59: 19.

The Chicago Conference last week has transcended our warmest hopes. Since our first gathering in the City Hall, Aurora, Ill., Oct. 31, 1867, twenty-three years ago, "the enemy" has literally been "coming in like a flood," and "the Spirit of the Lord has lifted up a standard against him." And though many precious and important meetings have been held, the meeting last week has more fully represented the Protestant Christianity of this country than any previous one. Held in the First Methodist Episcopal church, it was addressed by the pastor of the First Congregational church, Dr. E. P. Goodwin; Drs. W. W. Everts and P. S. Henson represented the First Baptist church; Revs. Lee and Swartz the Methodists; Dr. T. D. Wallace the Presbyterians; Prof. King the Oberlin Faculty; and Joseph Cook the Evangelical churches around the globe. These gentlemen addressed last week, for the first time, a convention distinctly anti-lodge. And, though many others spoke whose voices the public has heard for the last twenty years, there was not the least discrepancy or discord in the sentiments uttered, or measures adopted for future work. And provision was made for calling an International Convention to represent the civilized world in its Fair at Chicago in 1893, three years hence.

THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES PROPITIOUS.

When our Saviour came in the flesh to set up his kingdom on earth, Satan met him at the threshold, and demanded his worship; and his subaltern evil spirits "cried out and rent" those out of whom they were cast. Thus, Mark 9: 26: "The spirit cried and rent him sore, and came out of him." And we read in Rev. 12: 12: "Woe to the inhabitants of the earth and of the sea, for the devil is come down to you having great wrath because he knoweth that he hath but a short time." And to-day, those churches which from their foundation have excluded secret societies from their fellowship, are suffering unexampled rendings. The United Brethren in Christ are thus torn up. The Evangelical Association (formerly called by some Albrights) who have lived and labored in peace for near a century, have split into two parties, and each party has excommunicated the other's bishops. The Wesleyans are disturbed by similar troubles. And these three have been spiritual, devoted, reform churches. While those large church denominations whose fellowship is open to "the unfruitful works of darkness," are purchasing peace by adopting Romish festivals and catering to the world.

Thus, painful as they are, these church troubles are propitious signs. They are the rendings of Satan before he is cast out. Thirty years ago, all denominations which had spiritual life were rent by slavery. It was the day of vengeance in God's heart "because the year of his redeemed had come." And, in all ages, "the acceptable year of the Lord" is joined to "the day of vengeance of our God." It is Christ sending his angels to gather out of his kingdom all things which offend, and them which do iniquity; and thus hastening the reign of righteousness and peace.

A TREMENDOUS SPEECH.

Since writing the above we have read carefully the verbatim report of Joseph Cook's great speech which closed the Conference; and it forcibly brings back Leonard Bacon's words describing Theodore D. Weld's "Testimony of a Thousand Witnesses" concerning slavery. Dr. Bacon headed his article, "A Tremendous Book." And from that time on the Independent was an Abolition sheet and the South made up its mind to fight. It did fight and filled eighty Southern cemeteries with Northern dead.

Mr. Cook is the Independent of the next national struggle. Slavery was the Aaron's serpent question which pushed aside and staved off the lodge question in 1832. Masonry is the "devil's last ditch." Like a snake surrounded by fire, it hides under every chip it can turn up. It hid under slavery; and now seeks to hide under Mormonism, Jesuitism, the Clan-na-Gael, etc., which are all simple secret lodgeism or anti-Christ. Christ was and is the author of popular government and the Declaration of Independence. He stood apart from and above race, nation, sect, and party, simply "God manifest" to men. Jesuitism was born at midnight in an underground chapel beneath "the Convent of Martyrs," Paris. Mormonism was chartered at Nauvoo by the Masonic lodge at Springfield, Ill.; and Dr. Cronin was murdered by a lodge of Masonic spirit, with an Irish name. Mr. Cook's speech assailed these three forces as against Christ and the United States. And unless the lodge finds some new shelter, the 17th chapter of Revelation is rapidly hastening to its fulfillment; perhaps at the end of the seventh thousand years.

There may still linger in the Romish communion some pious Simeon or Anna; or another Luther may burst its bonds while climbing Pilate's stairway. Mr. Cook distinguishes between "the Holy Catholic church" and popery. And there may be in both South and North America "a remnant according to the election of grace." But Jesuitism has seized our free school system by the throat, and is turning out God's Word and substituting the word of a priest. It founds the church on Peter and not on Christ. It turns our faith out of the Scriptures and into the church. It deifies the Virgin and her saints, and obliges its members to adore a piece of bread consecrated by her priests as "the very body of Christ;" and, above all, it sets up a new head of the church instead of Christ. Rome is thus "mystery, Babylon the Great, the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth." (Rev. 17: 5.) This temple of anti-Christ, like that of Dagon, rests on two pillars, secrecy and despotism; and the swarms of lodges now issuing from the mouth of the dragon are related to Christianity as brothels are to the family. But "the Lamb shall overcome them."

We hope the Cynosure subscribers as a body will be a committee of the whole to circulate Mr. Cook's speech by the million, till every school district or voting precinct shall have read it.

One thing was made abundantly clear in the late Conference, viz., that the secrets of Masonry are revealed. Thousands of volumes published by Ezra A. Cook, T. B. Arnold and others, containing those revealed secrets, have been and now are being bought by Masons for their own use as correct revelations of Masonry. It follows that Bishop Fallows, Dr. Thomas and Dr. Lorimer, are become parties to the wholesale swindle of selling secrets which are not secrets, thus obtaining money upon false pretenses!

A HERO HAS FALLEN.—A letter from a daughter of Rev. Dr. Wm. Johnston of College Springs, Iowa, brings the regretful news that her father gave up his soul to God at nine o'clock Wednesday night, April 23rd. Even while the cause of Christian reform, in which he was so much engaged, was being pleaded by the ablest of advocates, Joseph Cook, in the Chicago Conference, Dr. Johnston laid down the sword he had so long wielded manfully for Christ and heard the call to come to his reward. The United Presbyterian church loses thus one of her strongest advocates in the West, a true man, unflinching and faithful.

—Secretary Stoddard spoke nine times during the ten days he spent in Maine. He is hopeful of good results from the visit. He is planning another meeting in Boston to emulate the good success of the conference at Bethany Mission.

—Rev. R. D. Grant, though much engaged in his new field in Boston, yet finds time to aid in sowing that good seed of the truth against the lodge. He informs Secretary Stoddard of much work to be done in Salem, Beverly, and other parts of Essex county, Massachusetts.

—During the recent Conference eighteen different denominations were represented, viz., Christian Reformed church, Mennonite, Evangelical Lutheran, Friends, Congregational, United Presbyterian, Evangelical Association, United Brethren, Baptist, Presbyterian, Christian, Wesleyan Methodist, Free Methodist, Church of God, Methodist Episcopal, Independent, Reformed, Seventh-day Baptist. Four ecclesiastical bodies sent regular delegates.

—The Reform Syndicate of New York, of which favorable mention was lately made in the Cynosure, has been suspended. In announcing its purpose of discontinuing the publication of a paper, for a time at least, it says: "The time does not seem ripe for a syndicate of so moral a purpose as ours." We are sorry to lose such an ally in reform.

—No Cynosure reader will regret that so large space is given in this number to the Conference, at the sacrifice of editorials and correspondence. For several issues we shall give room for addresses. It will not be advisable to give all a place, but fair proportion will be printed in the Cynosure. The full report of all the addresses will be given in pamphlet form.

—Miss J. P. Moore, who has so long labored for the education and conversion of the freedmen with an unselfish devotion, yet maintains a training school in Baton Rouge, La. The pupils and missionaries of this school maintain six sewing schools and six mothers' meetings in the city. Miss Moore also publishes an excellent little monthly, Hope, which is sent to any address for 50 cents per year.

—We welcome as a worthy ally Le Citoyen Franco-American, a new weekly paper, printed partly in French and partly in English, by our French Canadian brethren at Springfield, Mass. The managers, Messrs. Cote, Allard, Derome, and their co-workers, are all converts from Rome. Rev. J. H. Derome, the editor, graduated two years ago from Harvard Theological Seminary. The subscription is $1.00 a year.

—Rev. I. H. B. Headley, an evangelist of Roslindale, near Boston, while holding meetings in Farmington, N. H., recently, spoke so forcibly against the lodge that the craft was much disturbed and terminated the meetings abruptly. They followed the evangelist to the train—a howling mob. Secretary Stoddard hopes to see this brother, and encourage him to "endure hardness as a good soldier." Bro. Hauser, the young evangelist who has been so faithful in his testimony against this evil, was almost mobbed not long since at Clinton, Iowa. But these testimonies are a good seed. When they are sprung up into a good harvest mobs will be cowed.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

TRAVELING ARGUMENTS.

BOSTON, April 24, 1890.

Interest in the meetings at Corunna, Me., continued to the close on Sabbath evening. There was much feeling in the community, and among other things the brethren have the question to settle: who holds the key to the Christian church and controls the pulpit. As brother Joseph Smith was to give the Cynosure readers some account of the meetings there I will not anticipate his report.

At the depot two insurance men were discussing the merits of the societies they represented. One stated that any one could take a policy in his society, but no person could be an officer in his company until he had been an Odd-fellow in regular standing for five years at least, which means, I suppose, that a scheme has been invented to secure funds from outsiders for insiders to control in the interest of their benevolent work.

This recalls an incident. An ardent young professor was censuring the church for parsimony and highly commending Odd-fellowship for its charity, and gave a case in evidence. A member of the craft died, leaving his widow in such destitute circumstances that she was compelled to borrow money to pay funeral expenses. The deacons called to condole and pray with the stricken sister, and departed with only a "Be ye fed and be ye clothed," to relieve her pressing necessities. A Christian Odd-fellow called and prayed with the widow, and when departing handed her a check for $1,000, promising another of equal amount in a few days,—the sum for which the deceased had insured his life. He was asked if he considered life insurance societies charitable institutions; and the payment of policies, benevolence? In order to sustain his stigma on the church, and glorify his lodge, he maintained that when paid by assessment in case of death, such payments were pure benevolence. Such dodging would provoke a smile from a knavish insurance agent, while any honest man must regard it with contempt. But it shows how ready the devotees of Baal are to sacrifice the "Bride of Christ" when blinded by the god of this world.

I chanced to meet on the train the preacher whom I mentioned in my last as advising his brother Odd-fellow to take a higher degree. I mentioned the incident and questioned its propriety. He replied, "I go to the lodge not for what I can get from it, but for what I can carry into it." I said, "As you would go to a saloon or house of ill-fame to preach the Gospel, I suppose."

"Precisely," said he. "I have often preached Christ in the saloons and houses of the fallen."

I commended his zeal in rescuing the perishing, but I asked, "Did you conform to the 'established customs,' and bind yourself to keep the secrets of the inmates of these haunts of vice and crime?"

Of course he demurred, but I insisted that he must do so if he would make the cases parallel. How strange it is that sensible men don't see the absurdity of all such comparisons, and that Christian men don't accept the apostolic injunction to be not yoked up with those who hate the light because their deeds are evil! As one "moderate drinker" will impede the cause of prohibition more than a dozen "sots," so one preacher will keep more sinners from coming to Christ than a score of his lodge brothers who are profane and reckless.

J. P. STODDARD.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

An anecdote of antebellum times—The Weekly Times' libel suits—The legislature—Labor troubles—Some lodge utterances—Woman as a financier—Rev. Ada C. Bowles on the lodge and church fairs.

"If a man is faithful to truth, truth will be faithful to him. He need have no fears. His success is a question of time." Thus writes Prof. Phelps in the truest words that were ever penned, which ought to be inscribed in the note book of every reformer, to be his inspiration when he is tempted to query within himself, "What doth it profit me to serve the highest wisdom?" At the recent centennial anniversary of the Second Baptist church in Danbury Conn., an anecdote was told by Mr. Hull, one of the oldest members, of a time when Nathaniel Colver occupied the pulpit for an anti-slavery lecture. A mob gathered, and several persons were injured. Mr. Hull, disregarding the advice of a friend to keep away, as there was danger, was drawn by curiosity to the scene of action, though he took care to keep out of range of the stones that were flying in all directions. But the friend, unheeding his own wise counsel, ventured himself too near Dr. Colver's assailants, and received a severe wound in the head. Who has heard the names of that mob or its leaders? while that of Nathaniel Colver's will only shine brighter and brighter as the years roll on. I believe if there is one lesson more than another which needs to be impressed on the minds of the young men of to-day, it is the one thus sententiously expressed by Prof. Phelps, that to be successful they must be true to their highest convictions of right; for the foundations of a noble life are laid in eternity.

The Weekly Times, Worcester's wide-awake prohibition sheet, has been lately sued by a rumseller of that city for alleged injuries done his business by its habit of telling the truth without fear or favor. It has now got a second suit for libel on its hands, brought by lawyer Sullivan, counsel for the complainant. A large force of ladies of the W. C. T. U. were interested attendants at the trial, but Sullivan, who has about as much respect for Christian womanhood as might be expected of a liquor-seller's attorney, went out of his way to make insulting insinuations on their presence, which were, however, promptly checked by the court. The Times justly characterized lawyer Sullivan's treatment of the ladies as "vile, unmanly, and cowardly." Hence the libel suit.

The solons who meet under the gilded dome have decided that Boston has pressing need of all her rum shops, that is one for every 500 inhabitants; and that her daily floating population of 100,000, or more, would suffer grievously should this number be curtailed. The bill to reduce the saloons to one for every 1,000 inhabitants was rejected by a vote of 108 to 14. It would scarcely be expected that the Salvation Army would make a favorable impression on such a legislature, even when their cause was espoused with all the eloquence of Dr. Gordon. The law against their parading the streets still remains in force, and any Roman Catholic rum-seller who desires to annoy and trouble them can apply the screws at will.

There is a general interest in all departments of labor. Manufacturers who have achieved a competence are in some cases closing up their business, weary of waging an unceasing and profitless war with the Knights of Labor. Thus many workmen have been thrown out of employment. A Marlboro paper says that at that large manufacturing center over twenty of the town officers are Knights of Labor men, and inquires very pertinently, "Who says the K. of L. is not a political organization?"

The Sons of St. George attended Christ Church in a body, last Sunday, and listened to a sermon from S. C. M. Orpen, of Providence, who preached interestingly about St. George, but had very little to say about Christ, evidently not being of Paul's mind, who "determined to know nothing save Jesus Christ and him crucified." What distinguished divine of the past, the glory of the English pulpit, would have degraded his high mission to magnify a fabulous lodge saint? In this connection the words of Rev. J. F. Lovering, Worcester's eighteen-degree Masonic clergyman, at the late Easter celebration of the Rose Croix, are worthy of note: "It is a miserable shame and disgrace to those who by anonymous innuendoes, or by direct assaults, attack our noble order, charging upon us that we have no faith in Christ, our Saviour. We honor the cross; we live under its shadow, and so we dare to ask God's blessing. . . . The spirit of Masonry cultivates the kindest feelings known to the human heart." Shades of Morgan and Cronin! One almost wonders that, startled in their graves by such a falsehood, they did not rise, like Banquo's ghost, and "shake their gory locks" in menace.

There is a statement going the rounds of the papers that the unmarried women of Massachusetts have $29,000,000 on deposit in the savings banks of the State. This speaks well for their thrift, and shows how important a part her wage-earning population are composed of the class which fifty years ago were sneered at as old maids, and coolly spoken of by the political economist as "superfluous woman." Indeed, our institutions which are under female management show a degree of financial skill and ability that women may well be proud of—the more so that it is all in the line of legitimate business. She has not figured prominently as yet as a dealer in "margins" or "futures," or evolved a feminine Jay Gould; and heaven grant she never may. The report of Mrs. Louis Agassiz, president of the society for the collegiate instruction of women, shows that beginning with scarcely any capital, by a careful husbanding of funds they have now an income of about $4,000, aside from what is paid in by the students,—with house, grounds and laboratories.

I also see that though it is but a year since Rev. Ada C. Bowles took charge as pastor of the Universalist church in East Gloucester, Mass., and the church had then been closed some time on account of financial difficulties, the entire floating debt has since been paid, together with all current expenses. She is a leading W. C. T. U. woman, and I cannot close this letter with anything better than her strong words written to me last winter, in response to some N. C. A. leaflets, and an inquiry as to her position on the lodge question: "I consider Freemasonry an injury to the church and the cause of reform; that it substitutes ceremonials, tinsel and velvet for righteous self-denial in the name of a common brotherhood; that its high-sounding, pious phraseology from lips often unclean, tends to promote pretence; and that its exclusion of women and minors would make it, even though otherwise desirable, a mean substitute for a Christian church. . . . If men would support the church as they do Masonry, the scandal of supporting it by fairs and more objectionable methods even, could be prevented." Certainly, in the old days when the men gave their money and influence to the church instead of the lodge, the women did not have to get up donkey parties nor crazy sociables to raise money for religious purposes. Foolish and sinful as such methods are, many well-meaning women, with no money themselves to give, because their lodge-going husbands hold the purse-strings, have actually thought that in getting them up they were doing God service, and are not so much to be blamed as their Masonic pastors, whose example and teachings have contributed to such deplorable results.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 23, 1890.

The liquor license problem is the vital one now with the liquor dealers of Washington and those who are working persistently for any kind of stricture, no matter how slight, that looks to the abatement of the curse. The irrepressible conflict between the Commissioners of the city and the applicants for liquor licenses, is at its height. Every moment that the Commissioners have to spare they devote to disposing of these applications for licenses which have been accumulating for months past.

Their time, however, is mostly taken up by attorneys and applicants, who call at all hours of the day and argue their cases, trying to convince the Commissioners that it would be the proper thing to grant their applications. Some of their appeals would be truly pathetic if made for another cause. It is not unusual to see a woman accompanied by several small children, waiting to have an interview with the Commissioners relative to her rejected liquor license. The authorities make a thorough investigation of each case as it is presented to them for action. For instance, where an application has been rejected and is sent in for action, they make a personal examination of the place without the applicant's knowledge, dropping in at all hours of the day and night to see how the place is conducted and the class of people who frequent it. The officer who makes these rounds is usually accompanied by one of the detectives of the police force.

Nearly one-half of the license year has gone by now and there still remains a large number of applications that have not been finally acted upon; so that even though an application is finally rejected and the place closed, the applicant will only have a short time to wait before he can put in another application for the next license year, with the chances all in his favor. But even this does not prevent liquor attorneys and applicants from finding a way "to whip the devil around the stump," so to speak, and stave off final action on their cases as long as possible.

For instance, a plan was devised whereby an applicant, after having his license rejected for the last time, applied for a new license and submitted new papers, making it virtually a new application. When the Commissioners followed their original rule of taking up liquor licenses for action according to the police precincts in which the saloons are located, a new application, filed immediately after the precinct in which it is located has been acted upon, has the benefit of the intervening time until the Commissioners get around to that precinct again, which, under the present slow rate of doing business, takes some time.

Commissioner Douglass was the first to discover this scheme, and to defeat it prepared the following order, which received the approval of the board:

"That when an application for a liquor license has been rejected upon rehearing, no further application or deposit for such license for said person at said place will be received during the current fiscal year."

This, the Commissioners think, will remedy this state of affairs and at the same time prevent an applicant whose license has been finally rejected from buying out another man and working upon his license. But what are the Commissioners to do after finally rejecting an application for a liquor license? This is the all-absorbing question among liquor men at present. They have, it is claimed, no law to summarily close a place, yet they can order the police to prosecute a saloon-keeper, if need be, fifty times a day for unlawful selling, and this they propose to do. It has been stated that the liquor men would defy the law and every time they are arrested and convicted appeal their case. Bad as the present law governing the sale of intoxicants is, the Commissioners think they can stop a man from selling liquor without a license.

THE HOME.

WHEN MY SHIP COMES IN.

BY VICTORIA ALEXANDRA BUCK.

*How many watchers in life there be
For the ship that never comes over the sea.*

Oh, where has she gone, my beautiful ship?
Where has she sailed away?
'Neath what azure skies do her white sails dip
In the shadows cool and grey?
Oh, she sailed away in the long ago
To the land of the eastern main,
Where the balmy winds of the tropics blow
And I watch for her coming in vain.

With what was she freighted, my long-lost ship?
With treasures rich and rare,
With vanished dreams, good deeds undone,
Vain hopes, and a father's prayer;
With those beautiful dreams, when my heart beat high
On childhood's golden shore;
With those visions that passed with the sunset sky,
Through the gates that ope no more.

Oh, I watch for my ship when the airs are still
And the skies are bright with dawn;
And I fancy I see her white sails fill
As swiftly she speedeth on.
But the days pass on and the breakers roar,
And far on an eastern main,
Her white sails flap on a stormy shore—
Oh, say, will she come again?

Will she ever sail home, my beautiful ship?
Will she ever come back to me?
Shall I see her white prow rise and dip
As she sails from over the sea?
Oh, yes, she will come at her King's command,
To a shore that is free from sin;
Where the soft winds sigh o'er a golden strand
My beautiful ship will come in.

THE CONVERSION OF AUNT POLLY'S POCKET-BOOK.

"O, Aunt Polly!" I said, dropping wearily into her best rocker, and fanning myself with my hat; "I am so discouraged I can't go another step without a smile and a dollar!"

"We will soon have you at work again, if that is all you ask," said dear Aunt Polly, giving me the smile and a kiss to go with it, and then trotting away after the dollar.

"What is the matter to-day?" she asked, returning with an old-fashioned wallet, and seating herself at my side.

"Nothing new, Aunt Polly," I replied mournfully; "but I think it is 'more blessed to give than to receive,' especially when the recipient is a collector. Does nobody but you love to give, I wonder?"

"Oh, yes, dear!" laughed Aunt Polly.

"Then why don't other people receive me as if they were glad to see me, and wanted the Lord to have their money? Do they think I come begging for my own pleasure or gain? Why, Aunt Polly, they sing—

"Had I a thousand hearts to give, Lord, they should all be thine," as if they really wished they had; and yet they frown at me as if they grudged a hundred pennies for his cause."

"I am sure they feel more cordially toward you than you imagine, my dear," said Aunt Polly, whose charity "never faileth" and "thinketh no evil."

"But, perhaps, they have not learned how to give, or how to enjoy giving; or may be," she added slowly, "their pocket-books have not been converted yet."

"Then I am going home to pray for a revival among the pocket-books!" I exclaimed impatiently. I did not mean to be irreverent, and I think Aunt Polly knew it; for she took my hand in hers and said, without noticing my remark,—

"My pocket-book was not converted until several years after I was; and meanwhile, although I always meant to contribute to home and foreign missions, and the tract society, and the State missionary work, and all the church expenses, and really loved to give to every good cause, yet when the collector came I was always short of money, or hadn't just the right change. This annoyed me, and feeling vexed with myself may have made me seem vexed with the collector too; for you know it makes most of us unreasonable when we are vexed with ourselves.

"One Sabbath our pastor preached a beautiful sermon on giving." (Aunt Polly's pastors always preach beautiful sermons for her. She never seems to hear the poor ones that the rest of us grumble about. I wonder how it is.) "He said that the Jews were required by their law to give one-tenth of all they had to the Lord, but under the new dispensation, love and not law was to decide what we are to give; 'and shall love ask less of us than the law? Do we owe less to our Heavenly Father than did the Jew? Has not our deliverance been as great, our history as wonderful as Israel?'"

"And then he added, 'If we owe one-tenth to God, shall we not give at least one-tenth more as a free-will offering to Him who gave his life for us?'"

"My pocket-book was under conviction then, child," continued Aunt Polly, earnestly; "although I fear it was not soundly converted until a while afterwards. Before the service closed I determined I would give one-tenth to the Lord as long as I lived, and another tenth as long as he prospered me and enabled me to live on the remainder.

"For a good many years I carried out this plan, and you cannot think how much I have enjoyed it, unless you have tried it yourself." (I haven't, but I mean to begin right away.) "The four-fifths seemed to go farther and give me more real enjoyment than the whole had ever done. Besides, whenever money was wanted for any particular object it was always ready, so that I enjoyed giving more than I ever had before. For when any money came to me, I laid aside two-tenths of it in this old wallet which my father used to carry, and in just the change that I was likely to want,—the right amount for my weekly envelopes and the communion collection, the dollar and four cents for woman's home and foreign work, and even the nickels for Sabbath-school were always there waiting for me. Whenever I laid aside this money I asked God to bless it, and I believe he has."

"And have you kept up this plan since your pocket-book was 'soundly converted?'" I asked, anxious to know what she meant by that.

"Yes, dear, I lay aside the two-tenths just the same, but now I try to give all to the Lord."

"And how are you going to supply your own wants?" I asked.

"My God shall supply all your needs," she quoted softly. When I have any wants I tell him about them, and ask him if it is right for me to gratify them."

"And how does he answer you?" I questioned somewhat timidly, for I felt as if we were treading on holy ground.

"Sometimes he takes away all desire for what seems so necessary, and shows me that I can be really happier to deny myself and use the money for him. Sometimes he leaves me free to buy what I want, and then it seems to come as a special gift from him.

"Naught that I have my own I call,
I hold it for the Giver,—
My heart, my life, my strength, my all Are his, and his forever!"

"Good-by, dear," said Aunt Polly, as I arose from my chair after a moment's pause, and bent over her for a parting kiss.

"God bless you, and open the hearts and the pocket-books before you!" she added with a smile. And I started out for the rest of my afternoon's collecting with fresh courage, and with so much pity for the Christians whose purses had not been converted when they were, and who had not, like Aunt Polly, learned the luxury of giving, that I forgot to get out of patience with them, but went home in the twilight to pray for a revival among the pocket-books.—The Helping Hand.

He that does not know the location of rocks in a channel through which he must pass, is not fit for a pilot; so he who does not know what stands in the way of the work of God, is not fit to lead and direct the work of God. Anyone who is willing to learn, can easily learn that Freemasonry is a deadly foe to the Christian religion. It is as clearly proven as any fact can be, that Freemasonry is a religion, with its priests, its baptism, and its ritual—that it promises to save from sin in this life, and to save the soul in the life to come—that it rejects Christ, and puts the Bible on a level with the sacred books of the heathen—and finally, that it offers salvation by works.

Bernard, Finney, Ronayne and others closely demonstrate it. We prove it in a little tract of four pages, entitled, "False Religion," and sold two for one cent. Ignorance on this subject is without excuse.—Free Methodist.

WITNESSING FOR CHRIST.

The following, from the Edinburgh Review, is given as an anecdote of Prince Charles of Hesse. It is his own account of an interview which he had with the intended king of Prussia, which put his moral courage to a severe test, and is as follows:

"I dined," he says, "every day with the king. One day I had a sufficiently animated conversation on the subject of religion. He could not see the crucifix without blaspheming, and when he spoke of it at dinner, as well as of the Christian religion, I could not join in the conversation, but looked down and preserved a complete silence. At length he turned to me with vivacity, and said:

"Tell me, my dear prince, do you believe in those things?"

"I replied in a firm tone, 'Sire, I am not more sure of having the honor to see you than I am that Jesus Christ existed, and died for us as our Saviour on the cross.'

"The king remained a moment buried in thought, and grasping me suddenly by the right arm, he pressed it strongly and said:

"Well, my dear prince, you are the first homme d'esprit that I have found to believe in it.'

"I added a few words to reiterate to him the certainty of my faith.

"Passing through the adjoining chamber the same afternoon, I found General Penzenin, who had heard what passed, the greatest and strongest-minded man I ever knew. He put his hands on my shoulders and covered me with a torrent of tears, saying:

"Now, God be praised, I have lived to see one honest man acknowledge Christ to the king's face."

"This good old man overwhelmed me with caresses. I can not retrace this happy moment of my life without the greatest gratitude to God for having vouchsafed to me the opportunity of confessing, before the king, my faith in Him and His Son."

GAMES OF CHANCE.

BY LUCIA ARNOLD.

[An essay read Nov. 14, 1889, before the Sigourney Society of Wheeling Female College.]

"Gaming," says a distinguished author, "is the nursery of covetousness and dissimulation; inducing to fraud, quarrels, forgery, disgrace and death." And this is proven true by the numerous instances of loss of fortune, morals and life, suffered by those who have become victims to this vice.

We read of four young men who, in the year 1799, had fortunes left them, amounting, in the aggregate, to ten millions of dollars. The men fell into the snare of gambling, and in twelve months all four were beggared. A nobleman who was at the head of a popular Whig family in England, and had at one time been the owner of immense wealth, died in a wretched garret in London, having long before lost all his possessions at the gambling table.

This is not all. Men stake their lives after losing all else. There is an instance of this told of a prize-fighter in London, who, in a game of chance with a low associate, staked his money and lost it, then his clothes, which were removed from his person as they were forfeited, and then staked his life! He lost it. Then the winner, assisted by the lost man, hung him to a lamp-post. A watchman, however, happened along just in time to save the unfortunate man's life. Nero is said to have been the most infatuated gambler of his time. We read that Pope Leo X. was also a victim of this vice.

We believe that too great care can scarcely be taken in the choice of amusements. Even in the minor games of chance, as authors, checkers and dominoes, there exists the spirit of jealousy, emulation, and often deception, which, if indulged in, will lead the player to the worse forms of gambling. I have often heard it said, "Show me a drunkard who did not take his first glass, and I will show you a gambler who did not play his first game of chance." Burton says, "For most part, in these kinds of disports, 'tis not art or skill, but subtlety, cunning, catching, knavery, chance, and fortune carries all away."

In 1464 the English forbade the importation of cards. About the same time card-playing was so prevalent in France that persons addicted to this passion resorted to voluntary bonds (for the breaking of which there was a penalty) as a means of restraining and guarding themselves from this habit which had gained such power over their souls and bodies. It is a fact that the sum lost bears a greater proportion to the fortune of the loser, than the sum gained bears to that of the winner.

Suppose, for instance, that two men start with one thousand dollars each. A loses five hundred, which the other takes (not that he has given any value in return, but simply by some chance he won it). Now A has lost half his money, which only bears the proportion of one-third to B's sum.

Sophocles says of Palamades that "he invented dice to serve instead of a dinner, which office they fulfill to this day for many a man whom they have robbed of the means of paying for his dinner."

A Lacedemonian ambassador was once sent to Corinth to conclude a treaty of friendship and alliance with the Corinthians. On his arrival he found the captains and senators playing at hazard. This discouraged him, and he returned home without attempting to accomplish his mission, saying that he "would not sully the glory of the Spartans by making a league with gamblers."

Gambling is a source of a great waste of time. If a person wins in a game he is encouraged to try again. If he loses he must not stop until he has recovered his money. The practice often-times leads to drinking, as many who are addicted to drink are expert gamblers, and temperate men who frequent these dens of vice are thus thrown into the company of those who drink, and it is an easy matter for them to fall prey to this vice also. Suicide is often the result. "Mangling done here," was the sign secretly placed on the wall of a gambling den in London by a ruined gamester.

It is said that "the civilians of old set guardians over these brain-sick prodigals, to restrain them from consuming their livelihood, to the utter destruction of their families." Truly, "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life."

TEMPERANCE.

WHY FISH OF ONE AND FLESH OF THE OTHER?

That the opium habit is spreading steadily and, comparatively speaking, fast is the opinion of the New York Tribune. A raid upon an opium joint was made on Sabbath night, not "in a squalid den in a disreputable street, but in an unsuspected apartment house in a desirable neighborhood." It states that "the increasing sale of the drug, the admission of the medical profession, and the experiences of the hospitals unmistakably point" to the conclusion that the habit is rapidly growing. It affirms that "indulgence in the use of opium destroys the Chinamen far less surely, quickly and completely than the Caucasian. To Americans in particular it means swift and certain and absolute degradation." The Tribune closes a forcible article by saying: "It is high time for a far more active, intelligent and determined crusade against this vile and insidious foe than has ever yet been made."

Our observations, carried through a good many years, confirm all that the Tribune here says. Habitual users of opium in its various forms are so numerous that, were we at this time to give the authentic facts in our possession, the statement would be deemed incredible. It is taken in a variety of forms, and is the basis of numbers of patent medicines that are used constantly.

But there is an equally deadly foe of Americans in particular licensed all over the United States. The number of opium joints in the city of New York cannot amount to as many as fifty. There are 8,000 licensed rum-shops; hundreds unlicensed. To them we apply the words with which the Tribune closes its article: "It is high time for a far more active, intelligent and determined crusade against this vile and insidious foe than has ever yet been made."

Let us suppose a case: That alcohol had been unknown in the United States, except for medical purposes, till a very recent period; but that opium had been brought into the country soon after the first settlement, and had become entrenched as it is in the social and political world. Let us further suppose that it had brought forth all its effects on as large a scale as alcohol now does, had been licensed, and its producers, manufacturers, wholesalers, retailers, and all hotel proprietors had obtained the political influence which the brewers, distillers, wholesalers, saloon-keepers and others now possess. Would not the suppression of the opium traffic in the United States be treated about as that of the liquor traffic now is?

And if alcohol were slowly working its way into the city of New York, would not many approve raids upon it, and affirm that it is "high time for a far more active, intelligent and determined crusade against this vile and insidious foe than has ever yet been made?"

We maintain that every principle that will justify the prohibition of opium joints requires the prohibition of liquor saloons, and are in favor of outlawing them both under the heaviest penalties.—N. Y. Christian Advocate.

ALCOHOLIC INHERITANCE.

The Christian Inquirer gives an impressive report of a lecture on this subject at Gresham College, by Dr. Symes Thompson. He said:

"We doctors are often tempted to wish that the human race could be propagated with as much care as is shown in the breeding of horses." The lecturer followed with a really terrible list of the evils to which "alcoholic subjects," or the children and children's children born of drunkards, are liable, not the least of which are insanity and every form of mental aberration. It was very noticeable, said the doctor, how much the moral character of the drunkard was destroyed, and the same effect of the parent's sin was traceable in his children. Again, drink was the greatest destroyer of brain power in the world, and its results were wonderfully manifested in the drunkard's issue. It was well understood that drink destroyed self-control, and a great necessity of the present day was the training of drunkards' children in self-control. The doctor thought that philanthropists would be well repaid were they to pay attention to this important matter. A curious remark was that in which Dr. Thompson called attention to the untidy state of a drunkard's clothes, and asserted that this same carelessness was visible also in the sober children of drunkards.

Senator Dawes, of Massachusetts, has presented over two hundred and forty petitions asking Congress to stop the traffic in intoxicants between the United States and Africa. The petitions state that more than 800,000 gallons are exported annually to African ports, and prays that under the section of the Constitution which authorizes Congress to regulate commerce with foreign countries, it may be stopped. Even stronger is the appeal of the Congo chief, who, having learned to read and write, has just sent a letter to the Archbishop of Canterbury, in which this sentence occurs: "Great and good chief of the tribe of Christ, the humblest of your servants kisses the hem of your garment, and begs you to send his fellow servants more Gospel and less rum." Can a Christian country fail to heed an appeal so full of pathos, and so freighted with human destiny?—Union Signal.

For several Sundays in Denver, Col., a great many saloons and restaurant keepers have been selling liquor on the sly contrary to law. April 13 the sheriff made a raid on these places and arrested seventy proprietors, some of whom are the most prominent in the city. They are locked up in jail, bail being refused them.

In accordance with the recent order of President Corbin, of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company, four engineers and four firemen were discharged for drinking. They were served with a written notice, reading: "You are discharged for drinking."

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Jesus' compassion on the multitude. Vs. 10, 11. The apostles had just returned from their first missionary tour, and they had a great deal to tell Jesus. We notice (1) that those who never do any thing for Christ seldom have much to say to him, but if one desires to enjoy spiritual communion with the Master let them engage earnestly and heartily in his service. They will find that they have many joys and trials that they can tell to no one else, many perplexities that only he can unravel; and they will also find that he is just as ready to hear their story of mingled success and failure as he was the disciples. (2) It is our duty to take rest when nature demands it. If we have given ourselves up entirely to Christ, our bodies belong to him as much as our souls, and we have no right to injure our Master's property even by excess of zeal in his service. (3) Christ is never troubled by importunity. The multitude who sought him out in his retirement he taught and healed with never a murmur. It is careless indifference that wrings from him the sorrowful cry, "And ye will not come to me that ye might have life."

2. The multitude fed. Vs. 12-17. The perplexity of the disciples is often repeated in another form to-day when the needs of the masses are being pressed as never before on public attention. One panacea for humanity's ills is "Nationalism," which is good as far as it goes, but like all attempts to throw men back on themselves for help does not go far enough. Mere human philanthropy, though based on the most advanced ideas in social and political economics, like the disciples would send the multitude away to get their wants supplied from human sources. Bellamy's "Looking Backward" is a good illustration of the many schemes put forward for bringing in a social millennium. While full of excellent points, it fails to take into account the corruption of human nature. This alone would make the whole plan abortive, as much as leaving friction out of account would spoil the calculations of an inventor. On another similar occasion Christ gives as a reason for not taking this advice, "lest they faint by the way." It was a question whether the adjoining towns and villages could supply such an army. Many had no money to buy food. He could not have them wait in their famished condition on this doubtful chance, but bids his disciples to give them to eat. So now his command is to give to hungering humanity of the bread of life. They cannot wait for the slow coming of a social revolution to better their condition. And even if it should come to-morrow, many are too faint and weary with the struggle for existence to take advantage of its benefits. "He made them sit down by fifties." Christ believed in method and in organization. And so other things being equal, the more method we have and the more thoroughly we organize ourselves for Christian work the better the result. Those who are possessed of large fortunes, and can give money and time freely for Christian work, will find even their two hundred pennyworth of bread but a drop in the bucket compared to the world's needs. Those who can bring but five barley loaves and two small fishes need not be discouraged, but give what they have unreservedly to Christ; and in his divine hands it will feed a multitude, whom mere humanitarian schemes alone can never satisfy. The fragments of the feast were more than the original supply. If we want to increase in the knowledge of God, the best way is to teach somebody more ignorant, for every talent grows by use, and the more we give out the more we shall have.

Flatter not thyself in thy faith to God, if thou wantest charity for thy neighbor; and think not thou hast charity for thy neighbor, if thou wantest faith in God—when they are both wanting: they are both dead, if once divided.

case of Mormonism, just as in Freemasonry.

One of the Masonic authorities (he is a leading member and sometimes called the Poet Laureate) is quoted by Prof. King as having said that in 1830 many of the Masons then in the land abandoned their lodges, and by so doing substantially confessed that Morgan's account of the oaths and ceremonies was correct. Think of forty-five out of every fifty abandoning the lodges after that exposure! That has been one of the most stupendous pieces of testimony ever given concerning the oaths of Freemasonry. I don't care what the phraseology is,—there may be dispute about that. There are actions that speak louder than words,—honest men going out of Freemasonry because it has been practically admitted that certain revelations concerning it were correct. Well, we have had adhering Masons three or four times give testimony in the courts as to the character of their oaths. We have had seceding Masons do this again and again, so that there is in existence actual good legal evidence as to the character of these oaths. Now, I suppose it to be uncontroverted and uncontrovertible that the oaths are such as the law does not call for. They would be all buried by the Vermont test. Swing that scythe and you cut down all these Masonic oaths, because they are not called for by the law.

A SCHOOL OF TREASON.

You now and then get very frank expressions from some Masonic official. You find, for instance, an official of a Grand Lodge in Missouri saying in his report of 1867:

"Not only do we know no North, no South, no East, no West, but we know no government save our own. To every government save that of Masonry, and to each and all alike, we are foreigners. We are a nation of men bound to each other only by Masonic ties, as citizens of the world, and that world the world of Masonry; brethren to each other all the world over; foreigners to all the world besides."

Now if that is not unbecoming and braggadocio, it is treason. (Applause.) Perhaps it is both. (Applause.) It would not mean much if an ill-balanced man, some Masonic writer, were to utter sentiments of that sort; but every now and then sentiments of that sort crop out and they are not repudiated. They are adopted and printed and scattered all over the land. I say the time has come when we must notice such things as that. And, if taken in the spirit of the extract, it is disloyal, it is dangerous to society. If it is anything but mere brass, it might lead to blood. I have several extracts of similar tenor here before me which I will not pause to trouble you with, as other speakers have enlarged upon this topic.

What I maintain emphatically is that Masonry in itself thus sets up certain standards which cannot safely be recognized by loyal men. I do not say the Masons are disloyal, many of them. A great many of them take the first oaths without knowing what comes with the other oaths. The idea of that double kind of humiliation! Taking an oath that you don't quite understand, and taking an oath not to reveal secrets that have not been revealed to you! That is tying a noose around your neck with your own hands. It is a degree of humiliation that I cannot conceive of a person of manliness submitting to. How they do it I don't know; but they do it.

THE GILDING OF THE LODGE OATH.

Take the religious side of this. It is said, and it is denied, that the name of our Lord is excluded from the reading Scriptures in the Masonic lodges and from prayers in the presence of Masonic saints. It is affirmed distinctly that the name of Christ is always shut out on these occasions. Here I hold in my hand the order of exercise for initiation of a member in a certain lodge, and among hymns which are given here you have some with distinctly Christian titles: "My faith looks up to thee," "Near the cross," "Lead, kindly light," and one entitled "Christ, our pass-over." The pill is gilded and by opening the mouth wide and shutting the eyes tight enough you can swallow it (laughter and applause), even if you are a minister. But for one, I don't envy the condition of the stomach that is filled with medicine of that kind. (Laughter and applause.) I don't think the breath of the Gospel would be sweet when the Gospel is preached after a mass of those nauseating ingredients have been swallowed by the pastor.

Now, I beg everybody's pardon. I respect a great many preachers who are in Masonic lodges. I think they are good men, these men who don't wish to divide their parishes and cannot be induced to speak out on this subject. I am a lecturer. There are no deacons in my church, there are no parishes to be divided. That is one of the privileges of a lecturer, that is one of the duties of an independent platform. Not that they don't dare to say it, because they are as brave a class as society possesses, but there are proprieties which the preacher must observe which lecturers have not to regard.

Mr. Emerson says that the creed of Episcopacy in England is that by faith you are saved. Now, I know that there are some people, some very excellent people, who believe that by the good things in Freemasonry we are saved. I don't think that is a safe creed. I do not say that Freemasonry teaches nothing but deism. I do not know that Freemasonry denies revelation, but I suppose it eliminates some things from the New Testament when it uses extracts before a lodge.

Many will say, Go into a lodge. There are a hundred who are not church members in that lodge; you may do good there. The more churchmen of you who are there the less likely the lodge is to do mischief.

But you are bound hand and foot to measures that you must detest, and your oaths make it important for you to submit to the majority. How are you to maintain your Christian conduct? Many of you leave when you find the lodges going in un-Christian courses. Why can't you help keep young men from going into the paths that you find so rough? Why can't you open your lips and say to all who are out, stay out. If Euripides were here he would advise those who are out to stay out. If Socrates were here he would advise you to stay out. But if the Apostles were here what would they say? They would say, "Give no offence that the ministry be not blamed." If Christ, our Lord, were here what would he say? "I spake ever openly; in secret I have said nothing."

I part from you, therefore, with a single exhortation. Let those who are outside of oath-bound secret societies stay out. I exhort you to stay out in the name of personal independence, stay out in the name of patriotism, stay out in the name of Christianity. And to you who are inside oath-bound organizations I say, Come out as patriots, come out as Christians, come out as unmanacled men. (Great applause.)

present during the forenoon, and was greeted by numerous friends. He gave Dr. Hanna leave to announce an address from him in the evening.

The committee on Plan of Work reported by Pres. C. A. Blanchard. The report was adopted without particular discussion.

Your committee on Plan of Work respectfully report as follows:

I. We believe it to be advisable to have section meetings of all members of each denomination represented in this conference held at 12 o'clock to-day at which the following things should be done:

1. There should be prepared a list of all members of each church in attendance on this conference who are willing to labor for the removal of secret societies.
2. Each section should elect a president, secretary, and treasurer, who should each have the list of members of his section.
3. It should be the duty of these officers to secure action of churches and ecclesiastical organizations with which they are connected, against secret societies and to secure the publication of articles in all denominational organs.
4. To report from time to time to the National Christian Association, that the whole field of labor may be in view.

II. We think it wise that $1,000 be used by the Board of Directors of the National Christian Association in the circulation of literature according to the following plan:

1. Prepare a special edition of the Cynosure containing a full discussion of each phase of the anti-secret controversy and send out 100,000, to all parts of the United States.
2. Let the articles in the special copy be published in tract form and advertised in this special copy at a cost that will barely cover the expense of publication.

WHEREAS agitation is the great means of bringing truth before the people, and whereas no movement is more calculated to fix the attention of the whole country on the wrong of secrecy and the great evil of secret societies than national gatherings of representative Christian ministers, educators, and laymen opposed to secretism from the root; therefore,

Resolved, That this convention appoint a central committee, consisting of two from each of the churches represented, and also two from the Board of the N. C. A.; that the work of this committee shall be to determine the time of the next national gathering, to make out a program and to take the general oversight of the business interests of the convention.

Resolved, That the convention advise this committee to call an international convention in Chicago during the Columbus Fair of 1893.

During the noon recess brethren of different denominations met separately for consultation and organization.

Rev. George R. Milton, of Elgin, presided in the afternoon. Rev. John H. Barrows, D.D., pastor of the First Presbyterian church, Chicago, opened the session with prayer.

Rev. B. T. Roberts, editor of the Earnest Christian and the Free Methodist, gave the first address on the topic, "Civil Government and Secret Societies." This is the first time, we believe, that Mr. Roberts has addressed a convention of this kind since he spoke before the second Pittsburgh convention in 1875. It was a clear, logical and powerful argument, one of the best, it may be safely said, of the Conference; and although for many years Mr. Roberts has been a public speaker, some ventured the opinion that it was one of the best of his life. The Free Methodist brethren were congratulated that they had so able a General Superintendent.

Rev. W. P. McNary, pastor of the United Presbyterian church in the college town of Tarkio, Mo., followed in an able address on "Secret Benevolent Associations," which showed careful preparation and close analysis. Rev. H. A. Day, editor of the Wesleyan Herald, Brighton, Mich., spoke on "True Christianity Opposed to Secrecy in Organization." The spirit of the hour seemed also to rest upon him; and also upon Pres. C. A. Blanchard, who followed, so that their hearers were moved with the thought that they were surpassing former efforts. "The Exaltation of Christ as Lord and Saviour, our Purpose," was the theme of the last address.

A few minutes were given at the close of the afternoon for the report on resolutions by Elder J. L. Barlow.

Rev. J. E. Roy, D.D., secretary of the American Missionary Association, presided in the evening, and Rev. John Stahl, of Augusta, Ill., offered prayer. The attendance was double that of any previous meeting, the body of the church being well filled, and the increase of enthusiasm was in equal ratio.

Rev. David McDill, D.D., of Xenia Theological Seminary, opened with an address on the "Unity of the Ancient Mysteries with Masonry," and scholarship and research were not expended in vain upon the topic. Dr. Thomas D. Wallace, pastor of the Eighth Presbyterian church, Chicago, spoke next on Mormonism as a part of the secret lodge family. He was heard with enthusiasm, and was loudly applauded, so that there was no opportunity for a thought of impatience before Dr. Roy rose to perform one of the most agreeable duties of his life,—to introduce Mr. Cook for an address on the secret orders. "You will certainly feel glad," he said to the audience, referring to the regret at the unexpected absence of Prof. Moore, "that the time has come for you to hear the man who has been known round the world as having convictions upon all living current questions, and as having the courage of those convictions. He will now declare some of them to you on this platform. I introduce to you the Rev. Dr. Joseph Cook."

Mr. Cook's address the Cynosure has the unfeigned pleasure of presenting entire. It will be the first thing to be read in the number, and is worth taking up also the last. At its close Dr. Roy called for the Doxology, which was heartily sung, and Rev. Dr. Samuel D. Cochran, of Normal, Ill., pronounced the benediction.

Mrs. Booth, the dying saint, who, next to her husband, has been the head of the Salvation Army, speaks precious words of triumph in her last days. Slowly sinking under a painful disease, she sent this message to her friends: "The waters are rising, but so am I. I am not going under, but over. Don't be concerned about your dying. Only go on living well, and the dying will be all right." And among her latest sayings were these: "Don't discourage anybody. I cast myself upon God. I must—I do; and over the past and into the present, and for the future, I trust, I trust, I trust!"

PAGAN COUNTERFEITS IN THE Christian Church.

A pamphlet of 52 pages, by Chas. A. S. Temple.

The following from Rev. H. H. Hinman shows his estimate of its contents:

"I have read with great interest 'Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church' by Chas. A. S. Temple. I regard the subject discussed as important, and its presentation both able and timely. There is a most manifest drift in all our Protestant denominations towards unauthorized ritualism and the substitution of human inventions in place of the simplicity of the Gospel, as given by Christ and his apostles. In calling attention to this tidal wave of formalism, the author has conferred a lasting benefit on the churches of Protestantism."

HOME AND HEALTH.

FRESH FRUIT.

Many people think they cannot eat fresh fruit and berries; they say they become ill, and suffer from various complaints if they do. The trouble is usually this, Americans cook too much; have so much fat meat, cake and pie, that the stomach is overloaded with things hard of digestion. The fruit and berries are usually eaten after a hearty meal, either at the close of it, or between meals. The stomach after being overworked to dispose of a hot meat supper, is in the evening often filled up again with a variety of fruit. The consequence is, "fruit doesn't agree" with those who eat it in this manner. Fresh fruit and berries in their season, should be upon every table at every meal. Eat them with the meal, eat as you eat other food, and never eat between meals, and you will find fruit agrees with and is good for everybody. Eat fruit instead of pie, with good brown bread and butter, and let berries take the place of cake, and you will be spared the agonies of dyspepsia. Fresh meat in hot weather is feverish and weakening. The trained athlete of old abstained from flesh to acquire greater strength; and the porters or carriers of Constantinople and Rio Janiero, who carry weights of five or six hundred pounds on their shoulders a long distance, are vegetarians. The Italians live mostly on fruit, and are hardy and industrious. Fruit is more nutritious than is usually supposed. Eat plenty of fresh fruit and berries, but eat them in the right time and way, never in the evening after supper or between meals.

A VALUABLE RECIPE.

The Journal of Chemistry publishes a recipe for the destruction of insects, which, if it be one-half as efficacious as it is claimed to be, will prove invaluable: Hot alum water is a recent suggestion as an insecticide. It will destroy red and black ants, cockroaches, spiders, chinch bugs, and all crawling pests which infest our houses. Take two pounds of alum and dissolve it in three or four quarts of boiling water; let it stand on the fire till the alum disappears; then apply it with a brush, while nearly boiling hot, to every joint and crevice in your closets, bedsteads, pantry shelves, and the like. Brush the crevices in the floor of the skirting or mop boards, if you suspect that they harbor vermin. If in white-washing a ceiling, plenty of alum is added to the lime, it will also serve to keep insects at a distance. Cockroaches will flee the paint which has been washed in cool alum water. Sugar barrels and boxes can be freed from ants by drawing a chalk mark just around the edge of the top of them. The mark must be unbroken, or they will creep over it; but a continuous chalk mark half an inch in width will set their depredations at naught. Powdered alum or borax will keep the chinch bugs at a respectable distance, and travellers should always carry a package in their hand-bags, to scatter over and under their pillows in places where they have reason to suspect the presence of such bed-fellows.

The value of a remedy should be estimated by its curative properties. According to this standard, Ayer's Sarsaparilla is the best and most economical blood medicine in the market, because the most pure and concentrated. Price $1. Worth $5 a bottle.

BRECHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a weak stomach.

THE BROWN'S.

Brown has a houseful of girls and boys, Rosy and healthy and full of noise. They are sprightly at work and bright at their books, And are noted for smartness and wit and good looks Brown is healthy, his wife is fair, And their faces are free from wrinkles and care; They spend no money for powders and pills, And never a dollar for doctors' bills.

The reason the Brown's are so exempt from sickness is the fact that by an occasional course of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery they keep their blood, which is the fountain of life and strength, pure and rich. In this way their systems are fortified to ward off attacks of fever, and other dangerous diseases.

Those not so prudent, who have become sufferers from torpid liver, biliousness, or "Liver Complaint," or from any of the innumerable diseases caused by impure blood, will find the "Golden Medical Discovery" a positive remedy for such diseases.

Especially has the "Discovery" produced the most marvelous cures of all manner of Skin and Scalp diseases, Salt-rheum, Tetter, Eczema, Erysipelas, and kindred diseases. Not less wonderful, have been the cures effected by it in cases of "Fever-sores," "White Swellings," "Hip-joint Disease," and old sores or ulcers. It arouses all the excretory organs into activity, thereby cleansing and purifying the system, freeing it from all manner of blood-poisons, no matter from what source they have arisen.

"Golden Medical Discovery" is the only blood and liver medicine, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from its manufacturers, of its benefiting or curing in every case, or money paid for it will be returned. REMARKABLE OFFER!

Nearly everyone is familiar with the name, but it has been estimated that only one in every two hundred and eighty persons in the United States is fortunate enough to have access to the valuable information contained within the covers of the grandest work ever written by mortal man,

Webster's UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY.

That this is an unfortunate state of affairs will be admitted by all, and it is due to the fact that no one save the rich could afford them.

The Dictionary is a necessity in every home, school and business house. It fills a vacancy and furnishes knowledge which no one hundred volumes of the choicest books could supply, and all young or old, educated or ignorant, rich or poor should have it within reach and refer to its contents every day in the year.

The Loomis reprint contains all the matter as compiled and arranged by our esteemed and honored author and statesman,

NOAH WEBSTER.

About forty years of his life was devoted to this great work, and when we consider the fact that this book contains about 100,000 words with their correct spelling, derivation and definition we will appreciate that these years must have been well spent.

Some idea of the magnitude of this book may be gained from the fact that it contains over 440 cubic inches of paper and has about 300,000 square inches of printed surface. The printing is very clear, plain and distinct, the paper firm and durable, being manufactured especially for this volume, the boards are extra heavy and covered with an excellent quality of leather and thoroughly laced by hand to the book proper.

In addition to the 100,000 words it contains an excellent portrait of the author, together with his biography and a valuable table of 12,000 synonymous words.

By special arrangement with the publishers, we are permitted to furnish this valuable volume: 1st. To any subscriber to our paper; 2nd. To any renewal subscription; and 3rd. To any person who has paid a full year's subscription within the past six months, on receipt of $1.50 for the paper one year, and two dollars and seventy-five cents to cover express charges, packing, etc., of the Dictionary.

FARM NOTES.

NEWLY DUG TREES.

More than one-half the failures in getting a "stand" of any kind of fruit are the result of careless digging and neglect while the roots are out of their native element. There is no class of planters who do their work so rapidly and with such seeming carelessness as nurserymen, yet their losses are comparatively small, simply because they know that the proper place for roots is in the earth, and take every precaution to make their condition when out of the earth as similar to the natural one as possible. In the earth the roots are moist and subject to very slow changes of temperature, and are also in darkness. As usually handled, these natural conditions attending the life of a root are all disregarded. The tree is rudely dug from the ground, where it has had a temperature of 40 degrees or 50 degrees for weeks, loaded on a wagon, exposed to a drying wind, a hot sun, carted for miles without even a blanket to protect it, then driven into a barn at night with the thermometer at 28 degrees the next morning, to stay on the wagon until weather and convenience permit planting. I knew one old farmer to keep a load of cherry and peach trees on his wagon in the barn for a week, without any sort of protection, through a snow storm, and then refuse payment because the trees nearly all failed to grow. He was so ignorant of the probable cause of the failure that he was going to stand a law suit, but his lawyer had some knowledge of horticulture and advised him to pay up, charging him $5.00 for knowledge that the farmer of seventy years ought to have acquired by intuition, associated as he had been all his life, with growing trees and plants.—Vick's Magazine for April.

EARLY POTATOES.—An authority advises that a crop of potatoes for earliest use may be grown by planting them near where the soil can be turned. The seed is planted in drills eight inches deep and covered two inches deep, and then with litter so as to be safe from any frost that may occur. As the weather becomes warm the covering is removed, and as the plants appear they are covered with soil drawn into the drills. The crop will be a month earlier than usual.

POTATO ROT PREVENTIVE.—Those of our readers likely to have their potatoes affected by the rot are advised to try the following as a preventive: Dip the seed into a solution composed of four ounces of sulphate of copper and a gallon of water, and then into air-slacked lime and dry. Spread in the light until the buds appear and then plant. When the vines are a foot high spray with the same solution diluted with twice its quantity of water, and then dust with the lime. No manure is used, only the artificial potato fertilizer.

ELEMENTS OF A GOOD SOIL.—Discussing the improvement of soils, Professor Fream, a well-known agricultural scientist, says experience proves that a soil is best adapted for purposes of cultivation when it contains of sand from 50 to 70 per cent., clay from 20 to 30 per cent., pulverized lime-stone from 5 to 10 per cent., and humus from 5 to 10 per cent. It thus contains enough sand to make it warm and pervious to air and moisture; enough clay to render it moist, tenacious, and conservative of manure; enough lime-stone to furnish calcareous material, and to decompose organic manure; and lastly, sufficient humus to assist in supplying the alimentary needs of the plant, and to aid in maintaining the carbonic acid in the interstitial air of the soil.

TRANSPLANTING TREES.—Correcting an article in the London Garden on the subject of transplanting trees, a correspondent of the Scientific American says that one of the most important precautions is entirely overlooked—namely, to have the trees, when transplanted, in the same position with respect to the points of the compass as before removal. The south side of a tree is exposed to the direct rays of the sun, while the north side is more or less protected from them. Nature accommodates itself to this changed condition, and the difference in develop-

Ayer's Hair Vigor

IS the "ideal" Hair-dressing. It restores the color to gray hair; promotes a fresh and vigorous growth; prevents the formation of dandruff; makes the hair soft and silken; and imparts a delicate but lasting perfume.

"Several months ago my hair commenced falling out, and in a few weeks my head was almost bald. I tried many remedies, but they did no good. I finally bought a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor, and, after using only a part of the contents, my head was covered with a heavy growth of hair. I recommend your preparation as the best in the world."—T. Munday, Sharon Grove, Ky.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for a number of years, and it has always given me satisfaction. It is an excellent dressing, prevents the hair from turning gray, insures its vigorous growth, and keeps the scalp white and clean."—Mary A. Jackson, Salem, Mass.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for promoting the growth of the hair, and think it unequalled. For restoring the hair to its original color, and for a dressing, it cannot be surpassed."—Mrs. Geo. La Fever, Eaton Rapids, Mich.

"Ayer's Hair Vigor is a most excellent preparation for the hair. I speak of it from my own experience. Its use promotes the growth of new hair and makes it glossy and soft. The Vigor is also a cure for dandruff."—J. W. Bowen, Editor "Enquirer," McArthur, Ohio.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for the past two years, and found it all it is represented to be. It restores the natural color to gray hair, causes the hair to grow freely, and keeps it soft and pliant."—Mrs. M. V. Day, Cohoes, N. Y.

"My father, at about the age of fifty, lost all the hair from the top of his head. After one month's trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor the hair began coming, and, in three months, he had a fine growth of hair of the natural color."—P. J. Cullen, Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

ment in many trees on the south and north sides is obvious to ordinary observation. When the south side of a tree is turned to the north, each side finds itself in a position for which nature has made no preparation, and death follows almost as certainly as if the top were put in the ground and the roots turned up to the sky. The willow and some other trees will grow if planted upside down, and many trees will grow with the south side turned to the north; but with trees difficult to transplant at best, it is a mistake very apt to prove fatal to turn the south side to the north, and the older the tree, the greater the danger from changing sides in transplanting.

We are often deceived in the age of people having beautiful and luxuriant hair, not knowing that they use Hall's Hair Renewer to keep gray hairs away.

THE N. C. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

The Annual Meeting of the National Christian Association occurs on the 19th of June next. Members of the Association and all friends will please take notice and be prompt in attendance on Thursday, June 19th, at 10:30 o'clock A. M., at 221 West Madison St., for the election of officers and the transaction of other important business.

J. L. BARLOW, President.
W. I. PHILLIPS, Rec. Sec'y.

Rejoicings over redeemed Mormonism will be short-lived, indeed, if it be true, as reported, that the Democratic Gentiles have determined to walk apart from their Republican comrades. This is a shrewd move on the part of the Mormon leaders. "Divide and conquer," is a plan to them full of promise. The Democrats become virtually allies instead of enemies by this strategy; and the elections, so hopefully turning against the political hierarchy, will turn back to their old channels. One reason alleged for this movement is the failure or refusal of the liberal party to pass laws in favor of the saloons.

Senator Blair, of New Hampshire, made an unsuccessful effort to have the sale of intoxicating liquors of all kinds prohibited on the grounds of the World's Fair in 1893. The vote was thirty-eight to fifteen against the proposal. The Senate may have considered it none of its business to interfere in this matter; but Congress has dallied and higgled about other questions relating to the Fair of infinitely less importance. It is not likely the Chicago board of directors will refuse the fees that will come in for liquor franchises; and we fear that Sabbath-day opening will surely follow. Let there be strong protests sent up from every quarter against such wickedness.

Joseph Cook spoke before an enthusiastic audience, last week Monday evening, in Central Music Hall, in this city. His subject was, "Jesuit Aggression in America." It was a powerful speech, heartily applauded, arraigning in no gentle terms the movements of political Romanism in this country. The press reports gave no hint that his popularity was at all impaired by his great speech of the Wednesday before, in the Christian Conference. They were cordial, friendly, and plainly made their best effort to fairly present the address to their readers. One of the most influential takes Mr. Cook to its bosom in a hearty embrace, as "Fighting Joe Cook, of Boston." To use the great lecturer's own illustration, the address was not merely a boat launched in the wave of popular opinion; it was a three-decker. Mr. Cook is in earnest, also, on the secret lodge question. During this Music Hall address, while relating the incident of a priest's rage at a Catholic who had joined some secret society prohibited by that church, he said: "And neither am I in favor of secret oaths myself." This calm testimony was of all the more consequence, because given freely, bearing the mark of conviction only.

Joliet, Illinois, had a remarkable outbreak of Romanism last week. A missionary priest who had been holding special meetings in the place, at their close assailed the public schools with language well calculated to inspire terror in the minds of all under his influence. He said, as reported, that the public school system was the agent of Satan, devised by Satan's emissaries to undermine freedom of conscience and destroy the foundations of the Catholic church; that the public school system was immoral, unjust and unconstitutional; that the schools bred communism, socialism and anarchy, paupers, lunatics and criminals; and that parents might as well send their children to the jails and penitentiaries at the start; as the result of education in the public schools would land them there. Freemasons were the founders of the public schools to destroy the Catholic church. He warned all parents against sending their children to these schools, as on the judgment day, when asked what they had done with the little ones, the reply would come: "Damned! Damned! All eternally damned!" This blistering speech is repudiated by some Catholics in other sections; and in Wheaton, Ill., Romanists joined with Freemasons to defeat two Protestants whose principles were true to the law of the State and of God, and whose convictions would not wash out in the first storm. "Let the potsherds strive with the potsherds of the earth."

Rutger's College, in New Brunswick, N. J., is controlled by the Reformed church, in which there is a strong sentiment against the lodge. But this institution shelters secret societies of an abominable character. The press reports lately gave us the account of the "sixth annual initiation" of the Theta Nu Epsilon society. Fifteen young men were put through the following: The candidates were seized in their rooms about 11 o'clock at night, bound and blindfolded, tied in pairs and marched through the streets, through mud and small streams and then rolled down embankments through brush and brambles. They were then taken across the river and forced through the underwood on the opposite bank, the brush scratching their faces and hands. On their way back across the bridge a rope was tied around their bodies and they were let down into the river. On their return to town they were taken to a saloon and treated to bad whisky to counteract the effects of their soaking. They were then taken to the hall, where other Satanic "mystic" rites were performed. After the customary initiation their backs were marked in indelible ink with the brand of the society. Reclothed, they were marched to a restaurant and compelled to pay for an elaborate banquet for forty-seven of their tormentors. The young paltrons who submitted to this ruffianism show an equally vicious character with those who manipulated them. Such young men, unless changed by the grace of God, and repenting of their folly, will come to life's activities with depraved natures not to be trusted in any situation whatever.

JOHN BULL TO JONATHAN.

BY REV. A. THOMSON.

All hail, my boy Jonathan; I'm glad to call you mine,
Even when you were a stripling, I loved to see you shine;
And though you were obstreperous then, your will a little strong,
I always knew it was your fist, and not your heart was wrong.

And though you were so punky, as to thrash your father once,
I really feel I was to blame for thinking you a dunce.
You, my biggest, brightest boy, to think that you would stand
A rather overdose of switch from my paternal hand.

And now that you've a cottage and a vineyard of your own,
And are big and independent, like a mastiff with a bone,
And are just a little giddy, like a stripling over-grown,
Take a word of honest warning, from your loving father John.

In the days you can't remember, for you were not living then,
Queen Bess, in a prodigious huff, ruled over my domain.
She had a vixen temper, was a most outrageous scold,
And was as close and stingy as a miser with her gold.

And so the cursed monopolies grew until they swarmed like bees.

And laid their most accursed tax on life's necessities,
Till I wouldn't stand it longer, and in their kennels low,
My dogs of war were barking to let their mistress know,

It wasn't just the worse thing, even for a queen to do,
To make the many bend their backs a platform for the few.

Again, there was another time, you were a stripling
then,

And fought with bears and "red skins" for the right to your domain;

When James, who first was Duke of York, was king by devil's grace,

And tried to fit the Roman mark upon my British face.

Perhaps you can remember when in costume light and airy,

He brought his Clan-na-Gael experts, from Cork and Tipperary;

How angry London bellowed like a very bull of Bashan,
And to its depth profound was stirred, the great heart of the nation.

And now, my boy, my Jonathan, just take a hint from me,
And keep the castle of your rights with no loose-hanging key;

And would monopolies force you, or Rome present her mask,

Just tell them they had better leave to other hands the task.

Just tell them that the Saxon blood brooks no accursed greed,

That Rome may fit her evil mask on some who will not heed;

But if she dare adjust it, to freedom's free-born son,
She'll find his musket blazing, before her work is done.

THE POPE'S SOLDIERS IN AMERICA.

BY REV. W. J. GLADWIN.

A deep scheme has recently been exposed in England. It aims at a great "Reformation" in that land to abolish the Protestant "heresy." One of the means advised is to have "Orders of Knights."

Without allowing the object to be published in America, many such orders have been established here. Witness the following list which appeared in one procession in Baltimore, a few months ago; and remember that they are each composed of picked men, enlisted and drilled, sworn under deadly penalties to follow the Pope of Rome to the death:

1. Order of Catholic Knighthood, Captain Michael Lotz, commanding.
2. Knights of St. Michael, Captain King.

3. Knights of St. George, Captain Schalitzy.
4. Knights of St. Paul, Captain Ripple.
5. Knights of St. Francis, Captain Hoffman.
6. Knights of St. James, Captain Shaffer.
7. Knights of St. Wenceslaus, Captain Shimanek.
8. Knights of St. Vladislaus, Captain Sibeoki.
9. Knights of St. Albert, Captain Schultz.
10. Knights of St. Aloysius, Captain Flynn.
11. Knights of St. Joseph, Captain Gilchrist.
12. Knights of St. Vincent, Captain Stewart.
13. Knights of St. Francis, Captain Smith (colored.)
14. Knights of Latin Cross, Captain Mohr.
15. Knights of St. Patrick, Captain Keeney.

It is utterly false to say that the Romish "church" does not allow secret societies. With her "Orders," "Sisterhoods," etc., and her oath-bound confessional, she is the fruitful mother of a multitude of the "snake-in-the-grass" brood.

These orders of soldiers are the Pope's volunteers. He can make up in America and England what he has lost in Italy. We need not be surprised if the papists organize their troops on similar lines all over the world. Will these "Sir Knights" always have empty titles? The idea of religion as a military service is universal. How it fired the zeal of the followers of Mohammed. It runs through much of the mythology of the nations. It has fired millions of saints in its better spiritual sense. Romanists have ever claimed that the church is over the state. Hence, temporal power belongs to the Pope. It is his duty to God and the church to claim this "divine right." The entire body of Catholics is bound to uphold to the death his claim to universal dominion.

Here, then, is a great military despotism with its soldiers enlisted, sworn and drilled. They can easily be armed and marshalled when the Pope and his Jesuit council see fit to strike the blow.

San Francisco, Cal.

SECRET SOCIETIES OF WESTERN ASIA.

ADDRESS OF REV. DR. DAVID METHENY.

I wish to speak to you concerning a people known as Ansairiyeh people. They have their origin from the time of the first caliph after Mohammed. When Mohammed died, or just before he died, he appointed Ali to be his caliph, or his successor in office. Ali was unwilling to assume the responsibilities of the office, and gave it over to Abu Bekr. Abu Bekr, after he became confirmed in his office, put Ali to death; but many people were dissatisfied with the change, and still followed, or still considered that Ali was the true caliph of Mohammed, and refused to accept the caliphate of Abu Bekr. The present Sultan of Turkey is the caliph of Mohammed in the line of succession as the caliphate goes. He became the caliph by being the defender of faith. These followers of Ali were fewer in numbers than the followers of Abu Bekr, and they found they could not make headway against public opinion, and so they formed a secret association, and that was the origin of the secret society known as the Ansairiyeh people.

The word Ansairiyeh is a patronymic—a diminutive patronymic, and it signifies "The Little Conqueror." They thought and they hoped that they would overcome the rest of the world, all the world, and they called themselves "The Little Conquerors." These people were put to the sword and traveled northward and came to that part of Mt. Lebanon just north of "the entering in of Hamath." Suppose you are now on board of a ship going eastward on the Mediterranean, and you are looking toward the Holy Land: over here (to the right) would be Jerusalem, here (at the left) would be Syria, and directly in front would be "the entering in of Hamath," and in the background would be Mt. Lebanon. These Ansairiyeh people have become mingled with these older people, and they follow the same practices and have all those religions of the Canaanites, for which God cast them out, down to the unmentionable abomination of Baal Peor. They still have them. They worship the heavenly bodies—the sun, the moon, the stars. They worship fire; they worship the breath; they worship the senses. They worship running water, clouds, white caps on the waves, the terminal bud on the tree. They worship the growing point in the seed. They worship, in a word, every manifestation of divine power. In addition to that, their worship consists chiefly in derision and imprecations on Abu Bekr and those that follow him. For this reason they are known to be the deadly enemies of the Turkish rule.

It is a secret, oath-bound society. The initiation into this society is guarded with the utmost care. They keep their secrets with the utmost care. They do not admit into their society the maimed, the blind, the halt, those unable to maintain themselves. They do not admit into their society women. They do not consider woman as having a soul at all. They believe in the transmigration of souls, and consider that the soul of the wicked man may pass into the bodies of the lower creatures; and hence, much of their worship consists in imprecations on some of these lower creatures; for instance, the donkey, the jackal, the hyena, the fox or the dog.

The thing I wish especially to treat of is their secret character. Dissimulation is one of the chief characteristics of their religion. As soon as they find upon examination that a youth is sharp or shrewd, they will initiate him. If they find they are not secure in giving him the secret, they leave him out altogether. The first initiation consists in twelve persons taking the boy before what they call the Eman, who is of the higher orders. They appear before the Eman and these twelve persons become security that this person will keep the secret. And they engage that in the event that the person does not keep the secret, that they themselves are bound by oath to execute the penalty of death. They have no excommunication. They have no suspension. They only know death for the revealing of the secrets. They allow drunkenness among them, but the person, while inebriated, is confined under guard until he can pass an examination and they are assured that he will not let out the secret. I have known on two occasions in the East, members of secret societies of our own country, who have blurted out the secrets of their society while intoxicated; but that never has occurred in all our experience of twenty-five years among these persons. I have heard of but one expression that I know of. An old man, when the Turkish government had overcome them on a certain occasion, said "that was the voice of God;" and he revealed just that much of their religion. That is the only thing I have ever been able to catch from them in all my meanderings hither and thither among them. They worship medicine, and they have a superstitious reverence for a missionary because of his knowledge of medicine. Although a Turkish officer could not go among them with safety, without an escort, we can travel wherever we like and sleep in the house of the biggest robber among them with perfect security.

After this boy child, whether he be 15 or 18 or 20, is examined, the first initiation consists of three letters with a mystic meaning, "im mem sen." If they are able to pass this examination, they receive the higher order and take the sacrament. Other oaths are taken and new penalties are imposed, and then onward from one degree to another until the highest is reached. As I said before, they punish with death; they have no written manuals. They do not have signs, it is all by word. Common conversations or salutations of the day, "good morning," or "how do you do," "which way have you come to-day,"—all these mean something else than is ostensible in the ordinary acceptance of the word. They even have, before they will commit murder, a certain password which they will give to a person before they will injure him.

In passing one night from one district to another, we came to a place in the road where I knew the body of a Turkish officer was concealed in a well. His arms, head, and lower limbs had been cut off, and taken to various parts of the country for purposes of secret worship, consisting mainly of derision: putting the hand above them and deriding it, as: "Ah, this is the hand of our friend!" "Ah, this is a sweet hand, I would like to kiss that hand," etc. As we passed along my escort was dressed like a Turkish officer. They immediately gave the password to him, which he knew nothing about. My horse was down in a valley or a little ravine, and his horse was out a little ahead. They said to him, "Where are you going?" That is what they said in Arabic. If he knows the answer he escapes; if not, he is killed. When I heard this I immediately called out, "What is it to you where he is going?"

"Oh," they replied, "is that you, doctor? The chief of the village has sent us down to invite you up. He has killed a sheep and he wants you to come up and take supper. We have been waiting two hours; come back and take supper." But it was all a lie. Not a word of it true. They are sharp, shrewd and deep, and never can be taken short. We were allowed to pass on.

These people are about 300,000 in number, and they live in Mt. Lebanon, north of "the entering in of Hamath," and on around the plain of Mersine. They occupy Antioch; they occupy the plains and the mountain. They are a wretched, ignorant, bigotted, cruel people, oppressed and oppressing, constantly in warfare and fighting each other.

We have been unable to gather many of them into the fold of Christ. We are an anti-secret organization there. I am not personally in connection with your organization here, but we carry on a similar work, and we do it by the same arguments that you do, drawn from the Word of God. It really seems out there that the very opposite of sanctification goes on. We preach the Gospel to these old persons, and they give their assent to it. They say it is true, but they seem to be sealed by these oaths and imprecations, and feel bound, and it is the rarest thing that ever an aged man comes to Christ. Not so, however, with those that have not been initiated. Not so with the women, especially the girls, who readily receive the Gospel and gladly come to Christ. The Holy Spirit works the same in all hearts, in America as in Asia Minor. The command of the ascension, the command of our Saviour, Jesus Christ, "Go teach all nations," suits the American, the Indian and the Chinamen. It suits every order of society. It suits these secret people. I wish to report to you that the influence of this society has been largely broken. The same arguments that you use here we use there, and I am glad to say to you that many of them are coming to Christ.

ADDRESS OF REV. M. P. GOODWIN, D.D.,

PASTOR OF THE FIRST CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, CHICAGO.

It is quite a mistake, brethren, to regard what I have to say as a formal address. You have plenty of those on your program. My brother who has preceded me [Prof. Henry C. King] has covered pretty thoroughly the ground I would take. Probably I am not a representative of very many of you. I don't know how that is. You are walking, I suppose, in what you consider noon-day; and I probably am like one who sees men as trees walking: I have not got out of the twilight. At all events, I am puzzled by some questions you, I suppose, have fully passed upon and are thoroughly clear about. I am not. The great question to my mind, the puzzling question, is this: If these things are so plain and so clear that Christian men cannot be in the lodges, why are they there?

Now, I would not like to impugn the conduct of a good many I know, ministers and laymen, who are members of different lodges, different orders. Some are Odd-fellows, some are Masons, and some are Templars. For years I have had knowledge of a good many such, and I have said to myself, and I have said to some of these brethren, "How do you explain it? I cannot understand it. If the oaths that are taken and the attitudes in which men stand are so plainly anti-Christian, when they go into a lodge, how can they stay there?" I have known men in them twenty and thirty years, whose honesty I do not doubt at all, nor have I had any occasion to doubt it, so that I have said to myself, Here is one of the questions these men won't see, can't see—these men who become clouded in their mind and are not clear in their preception. I only know what I read, and there is so much contradiction in them that I am not always clear about the statements taken from Masonic publications.

Some one sent me recently a little pamphlet in which the quotations are all, I think, from Masonic authors. On one side it is said that a man cannot be a Mason without being a Christian; and on the other side, on some pages, is the testimony of men who are received into fellowship in these lodges, Jews and Mohammedans and believers in Theosophy, and the assurance that any man has such a view of the Scriptures as he likes. The thing is contradictory. One view of the Scriptures cannot make it one thing, and another view make it something else, and both be right, it seems to me. So that my puzzle has been on that line. It has not been of any question of secrecy, for all my life I have been of the conviction, increasingly, that it is an unwise and mischievous thing, and of that there has never been any doubt in my mind. But, of course, there are things that all men do not see in the same way.

Christian men will agree together and stand on the Word of God. There cannot be any doubt of that in any or all the denominations. That is our guide, and we are going by it; and these men, Christian men, in the lodges, would all say that without any question at all. Many of them I know would do so, because I have asked them about it. Talking with one the other day, a man whose convictions are falling into line evidently with my own, he said that these lodges had the authority of the Word of God. Well, now, I do not know just where to draw the line. That has been my difficulty—with reference to attacking lodges, with reference to a crusade. Whether that is a wise way, you brethren may know; I am not so clear about it. I am clear enough about the thing to be sought after, the thing to be reached, but the means to the end are not so clear to my mind.

Now, there are some things that are tolerably clear to me, and standing on this foundation of the Word of God, I do not have any difficulty whatever. I should say, of course, from the two definitions in this little pamphlet, and what I have seen elsewhere, and President Finney's writings, that I could not think that my understanding of the Scriptures agreed with that of the lodges.

Now, what about the questions that have come up with reference to that matter, and to Christian experiences, and the like? It seems to me that the whole movement of things on the line of secrecy is thoroughly antagonistic to the movement on the line of Scripture and Christianity. Why, the very claims that my brother has alluded to, that put Masonry, if they are to be granted, back into antiquity, would only PROVE IT HEATHENISH.

The old Greeks were full of mysteries in the retreat of the classic groves. The Egyptians were full of mysteries. The worship of the olden time was full of mystery. Aristotle, Olympus, Venus, had their little circle, and when there came those esoteric notions there was a circle of priests or priestesses, or leaders or teachers, or philosophers, whose rites and ceremonies were altogether kept out of the knowledge of the people. Now, that would prove to me just what these brothers do not seem to see, that it is paganism in its beginning.

Why, when I was traveling in Palestine we came one day up on the hills east of Tyre to the famous tomb of Hiram. You have seen pictures of it, likely, and read about it of course. It is a curious burial place, and tradition seems to be relied on, I should judge, that it may be the tomb where the old King of Tyre was laid away to rest. It is made up of huge blocks of stone ten or twelve feet high and six or eight feet wide and twelve or fourteen feet long, and on top of it is a huge sarcophagus which was hollowed out of a solid block, with a lid over it of a prodigiously heavy marble slab or limestone. The end of this sarcophagus had been broken open so that it was possible to creep in there, and I was quite surprised to find one of our party who said, "I am going to go inside." I wondered what he wanted to find inside of that old sarcophagus. In he went with considerable trouble. We built up a sort of a platform and boosted him up, and in he went. When he came out the mystery was solved. He said,

"I AM A MASON,

"and I tell you it done me lots of good to go in there where one of the greatest of all Masons of antiquity was laid away." (Laughter.) He smelt a little like it, and he looked a good deal like it. Well, our companion was a Christian man, thoroughly so, and a good fellow, and I said to him, "Do you know who Hiram was?"

"Why, he was King of Tyre."

"Whom did he worship?"

He didn't make answer, and I said, "You know, those old Phœnicians were the most outrageous worshipers of Baal the world ever saw, and you know it was out of that King's domains that there came Jezebel, the worst of all the leaders in that ancient day. She had more ability than a dozen kings, and more malignity and diabolism, and she brought in the worship of Baal, and because of that, do you remember how the judgment fell upon the children of Israel? If you like that sort of Masonry, why keep it. (Applause.) I never could belong in a lodge with that sort of fellowship."

Now, these brothers don't see it so. But the whole movement of Christianity, what is it?

IT IS LIGHT AS AGAINST DARKNESS.

It is the very sun of righteousness. That doesn't have lodges. That doesn't have little dark rooms into which it disburses its beams. The business of the sun is to scatter light, and the business of the church of Jesus Christ was to receive the light of the Sun of righteousness. He was to be the light of the world everywhere. He says himself that he never had any secret. He says, "In secret have I said nothing." Everything was open. He never had any secrecy with the disciples that anybody could not share. If they wanted help, if they wanted healing, if they wanted light, it made no matter. There was never any little gathering of a cabal, there was never a little sort of a something secret that had its little passes and grips. That would be, as my brother said, exceedingly foolish to have coupled with the Lord Jesus. Well, now, Paul and his fellow Apostles were always preaching that sort of thing. What fellowship had Christ with Baal; light with darkness? He had no fellowship with untruthful works, and he had undoubtedly in mind these circles of the priests and priestesses where these heathen works were all the while being performed and the influence of them coming back on the church. It seems to me that any man who is looking along the line of the development of Christianity will see that never in the early history of it anywhere was there anything, in any sort or shape, that could give any coloring to this going out of the light into the dark rooms and going into the cellars, and getting a rope around a poor fellow and letting him down into a vault, or putting him over some rough road to Jerusalem in the dark. The absurdity of the thing to me is such that I am sure I could not take that way of getting into the inner things of the kingdom.

I WENT ONCE INTO ONE OF THESE LODGE ROOMS

that was being built, and I remember the secret passage way they took me and they said, "This is the road to Jericho," I believe, up and down and here and there. It had not been fitted up with everything that belonged there, but it was a long narrow passage way, which was to be used in their initiative ceremonies. You may be sure there was not anything of that sort in the early church, and there never was in the history of the church from that time on anything that falls into line with it. The whole spirit is antagonistic. The minute a man comes to know Christ, it breaks out. That was President Finney's experience. He was converted while a member of a lodge, and all at once he said he could not stay there, and he did not make any noise; he came out; said he would not do that any more, and found himself praying and praying with all his might. How could he help it? If he wants to pray he must pray in the name of Jesus Christ. I think in this little pamphlet that question was put to some high authority, "Was this man doing as the members do; was his prayer for Christ's sake?" "No," says a high authority, "no; that would offend the Jew and the Mohammedan and a great many of the members of the lodge." I should think that would answer the question pretty thoroughly.

I remember when I was in college it was a kind of a starting point of profound convictions. The whole drift and tendency of every sort of lodge, as I have known it, has been selfish, and is thoroughly selfish. If that is true that is an antagonism, squarely, with the doctrine of the Word of God. Now, that it is selfish I think what has been stated here to-day would show. In all these benevolent lodges the proposed way of carrying out the spirit, in every one of these different orders, is simply and purely for the benefit of the particular order or circle concerned. That is not the Bible; that is not the Gospel of Jesus Christ, by any manner of means. That Gospel does not know any Jew, nor Gentile, nor barbarian. It goes down alongside of every man and woman and child and throws its arm around them and says, You belong to us, if you will come in the best fellowship. You are to be an heir with us in the Kingdom of the Lord Jesus Christ. You are to share all we receive, and you are to labor with us in the spreading of this Gospel that seeks to make every man, black or white, rich or poor, a prince and a pillar in the kingdom.

A COLLEGE EXPERIENCE.

When I was in college it was my experience, like many poor boys, to have to fight my way alone. The consequence was that when I got to college I knew very little Latin, and still less Greek; but I got in through the skin of my teeth because I knew a little about mathematics. I did not know anything about college life or about societies; did not know there was such a thing as a secret society or any other society when I came there. I noticed this: after I had been a few weeks at college the representatives of a society came to me and said they had such a society, a secret society. They wanted to know if I would not join. They said they would take me, and I made inquiries, and I found that that society was the society that stood last in respect to scholarship. They did not make any point of that. I said, that is a compliment to my stupidity; that is a compliment to my being the poorest boy in the class. I don't mean I was quite at the foot, I was climbing slowly; but it was a recognition of the fact that I was a good fellow for their society. And then I said, Why don't the other societies want me to join? They were waiting to see whether I could prove myself a fit fellow.

Well, by and by I got up a little further, and there came another delegation from another society, and they spoke about their society and urged me to join it; and I found that that society was society No. 2. They were a little higher than these other fellows, and their society had a sprinkling of pretty fair scholars, but they were not distinguished. Said I, That is a proof I am getting on. I am glad of that; I will write it home to my mother and tell her I am using all my time to good advantage.

Well, some time after delegates came to me from another society—there were not so many of them as now; there were few very prominent societies—and they were very polite and good natured, and they were quite urgent that I should join their society. They said, "You know we always have the good scholars; we never have any of those fellows down there belong to us. We are the most distinguished fellows around here; we take the honors. There is our catalogue, so and so; these are the men. That is the sort of fellowship you want to be in; and more than that, if you come in with us we will help you whenever you come to the tough places in any of your mathematical problems. We have got them all worked out." We were reading Greek tragedy, and they said, "We will have you carried through, and we will help you write your essays, and we will put you through and make you an honor man." Now, says I, I am really getting up. I now feel very comfortable. But at the same time I felt tremendously indignant, and I said to these fellows, "Now look here (I was unfortunate, like a number of men in my class; we had not any wealthy parents to help us on our way; we had to dig out and teach school as I did, and work as carpenters, as I did, and get our Greek and Latin by hard preparation!). Now you come to me, not because there is any good fellowship about me; not because you have any respect for my manhood; not because you have any conviction that there is any ability in me, but you come to me because you think I can be of some value to you, in some way or other, and that through you I may be able to secure some college honor, or bear a part in Phi Beta Kappa, whose election depends upon the standing, and so I might be able to take my place. I despise that sort of thing. (Applause.) A man is a man, no matter what may be his accomplishments, and I will have nothing to do with it."

I cast about and saw that there was an anti-secret society, a better society, and I said, That is the place for me if we must have any, and I joined that. (Applause.) It had that and we wore it on our badge.

What did I see in college as to these societies? This: That there were certain men in those societies that were steadily put forward, irrespective of their merit. When we came to our discussion in our literary societies, we had it; and what has been said already is true, that these secret societies drove the knife to the heart of the great literary societies, and they have killed them out since my day. When we came to the elections the society men were invariably put forward; men put forward, irrespective of their ability or character. They were men that they proposed to push; and not only would that particular society attempt to push them, but in order to beat us, the outside fellows, they would combine together. Well, we challenged them to come to an open debate on the merits of secrecy, and they did not dare to; and finally it so happened that we swept all honors of the class pretty nearly. (Applause.) Well, that made me a pretty thorough anti-secrecy man.

I HAVE BEEN THAT EVER SINCE.

Moving along on those lines, insisting anywhere and everywhere that merit should be put forward in the forum, in the church, in the state or anywhere.

I asked a man once, a very intense secret-society man, whose wife was a member of my church in Ohio, and who was telling me—I think he did it with an oath—that his secret order was good enough religion for anybody—at least I heard more oaths from him than I did any quotations from the Scripture, what would he do if there were two men perishing by fire, or otherwise in danger, and one of them should belong to his order and one should not? He said, “Why, of course, he that gave me the signal of distress I should save.”

“Well,” said I, “suppose he was not a Christian man and the other was?”

“Well,” he said, “I would save him, of course,—bound to.”

“Well,” said I, “suppose he had no family, and the other man had half a dozen children depending upon him?”

“Why,” he said, “I would save him;” looking astonished at me to think I should ask such a question as that. He was bound to do it; that was his principle, to save his brother in the circle of his own particular fellowship, irrespective of anything else. Now, I insist upon it that that sort of thing is anti-Scriptural and anti-Christian. I said to him, “We cannot do that.” I am to sit down and talk with the harlot or the publican, with everybody and everywhere, as I have opportunity, and press them with the claims and the blessed invitation of the Gospel; and black or white, rich or poor, Jew or Mohammedan,—anybody, they are all to come into my circle and be brothers with me in the kingdom. There is no other Gospel but that; and any organization that at all suggests another is doing that which is directly antagonistic to the teachings of the Lord Jesus; and I don’t see why my brethren that are in these circles don’t see it. I mean to try to help them as far as I can. They have an inside view and I only an outside view; but I say to them, you ought to be and must be, all of you, won from it.

Well, now, in this line there is that which still more manifests to me an antagonism with the spirit of Christianity. It consists in this: that wherever I have seen the workings of the orders they have always tended to lower the standard and lower the faith, if not utterly extinguish it, of the Christian. That proves the influence of these secret orders is bad. I should say that our friends in the order of the Sons of Temperance are moving on a much higher plane. I think it is a mistake for them to organize as they do for their purpose, when it could be accomplished in some other way; but I don’t think they are subject, by any manner of means, to what is true of some of the other orders.

VILE ASSOCIATIONS.

I have noticed this, that certain men who are in those fellowships are thrown, as has been said here, into the society of damnable men; men that are moral lepers; men that are unfit to be anywhere except in the pig-pen; and they meet them, and some of them hold high places, and they are under their personal influence, and many are magnetized and ruled by them. Their associations are all on the descending grade. They are full of all sorts of temptation, card-playing and wine-drinking; and I could name members that I know have been filled with liquor, and have gone down,—members of the church, by reason of their associations in these secret conclaves.

There is no question in my mind at all about it. It is a purely worldly thing anyway; and all that may be said about the religious prayer of instruction is all nonsense to my mind, as related to any impression upon the hearts and minds of men. I venture that you can find scores of these circles where men of infidel and skeptical character are met, men who even deny the existence of God. One thing is certain, that they do deny certain of the great truths of Christianity and do the service at funerals, and have sometimes conducted the thing in a way that seemed to me to be thoroughly blasphemous. I have never known a solitary man that was in one of those orders, as a Christian, that was not, in my honest judgment, sick of it; not, perhaps, so much as he might have been, and some much less than others. One said to me the other day, “They are not consistent with Christianity and Christian experience; there is no doubt about it, and I don’t go any more!” I don’t know but he pays his dues; I suppose he may have to do that.

Well, now, this is about the whole of my remarks, for I am discoursing in a very random way. I am after the light. I think I know some of the things that lie along here, but my thought has been to help these brothers, if I might, in any way I could.

I have noticed another thing, that the influence of these secret organizations have been among the hindrances to moral progress, and they help to turn men away from the Gospel and the kingdom. I believe that it is a safe and true statement, and I don’t hesitate to say that it is true, so far as my knowledge goes. Take the young men that I know that are being drawn away. Why shouldn’t they? Here is the gathering on a Wednesday night,—that is a prayer meeting night. Here is a circle of this sort. Here is an excursion of that kind. Here is a great party. It may occur on Sunday. Every funeral of that sort that can be planned on a Sunday will be; and all those things go together to follow the man, and are the things that draw him away from the things of Christ. Now, you cannot love in two directions supremely. You cannot love the world and the things of the world, and have the heart bound up in them, and at the same time love supremely the Gospel and the things of the Gospel. These things make war upon each other; and the only possible way, my brethren, in my judgment, is to put the knife in to the very hilt against everything that leads us away,—liquor, or cards, or dancing, or tomfoolery of any kind that does not belong to the kingdom of God. (Great applause.)

MORMONISM AS AN OATH-BOUND ORGANIZATION.

ADDRESS OF REV. THOMAS D. WALLACE, D.D., PASTOR OF THE EIGHTH PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, CHICAGO.

Fanaticism, twin sister of Superstition and the daughter of Ignorance and the devil, was married to Fraud, her foster brother. From this incestuous alliance a numerous progeny have peopled the world, and in 1830 a child of their old age was born and baptized Mormonism. Joe Smith stood god-father for this child, and became the accepted prophet of its followers.

The absurd claim made by this imposter, that through supernatural means there was discovered to him golden plates, containing the sacred records of the past engraved upon them; and that he was divinely assisted to translate the same by means of Urim and Thummim; and that these records of a divine revelation run back to the time of the Tower of Babel, I will not tarry to refute. To recite the puerile story is its best refutation with intelligent and honest people. Indeed, if it were not for the fact of Mormonism and its colossal power, and its staying qualities in spite of all forces arrayed against it, I would feel like making apology for any reference to these absurd and childish tales touching its origin.

It claims to date its origin from the event of the building of the Tower of Babel, and that, if I mistake not, leaves the Masonic order a comparatively modern institution by its own confession. Logically it would seem somehow to be associated in its origin with that sort of thing, for, as I understand it, that unfortunate enterprise, though an ambitious piece of masonry for that age, meant opposition to the will of God. There is evidence also, I think, that idolatrous ideas were connected with that tower. The word “Babil” in Hamitic language means the “Gate of God,” which suggests the thought of worship, and the comparison of some modern heathen temples. But Babil of the Hamitic dialect when its letters are transferred to the Semitic, has an entirely different meaning. It means “confusion.” Hence that which was meant for a Gate of God—Babil—became Babel—a babble—confusion.

But, soberly, whatever the precise date or particular event out of which Mormonism grew, in ignorance and arrogance; in conceit and confusion; in the Satanic impudence with which it out-faces the world; in turning sacraments to sensuality; in covering the most revolting and unspeakable crimes with the cloak of a celestial marriage; in putting darkness for light, bitter for sweet, evil for good, error for truth,—I will say that it seems to be the legitimate child of the spirit which built the Tower of Babel, and that by heredity it holds all the worst traits of its ancient parentage. A missionary at Salt Lake City once analyzed it thus:

MORMONISM IS MADE UP OF TWENTY PARTS:

“Take eight parts diabolism; three parts of animalism taken from Mohammedanism; one part bigotry taken from old Judaism; four parts cunning and treachery of Jesuitism; two parts Thugism from India; and two parts Arnoldism. Then shake the mixture over the fire of animal passion and throw in the forms and ceremonies of the Christian religion, and you will have this system in its true component elements.”

Its appeals to the religious sentiment; its professed revelations from Heaven; its promise of a sensual paradise hereafter as the consummation of fidelity in the earthly and animal relations; its covering the vilest passions with the cloak of religious worship, baptizing not only pagan impurity, but sanctifying to their notions on the altar of devotion to God, the lusts of men and the incense of shame,—it would seem incredible that anyone should treat these matters seriously. But the institution constitutes a problem which confronts us now, and has for sixty years refused to yield to the plans of the politicians, although I am glad to say it shows signs of strangulation. During these six decades of its natural life the chief elements in its rapid increase seem to have been:

1. It is virtual separation from the Christian civilization of America.
2. Its immense foreign additions of a type to be easily assimilated to their notions.
3. It has been hermetically sealed by the invincible oaths of secrecy, which closed at once the doors of the Endowment House and the lips of the victim of lust.

God’s sunlight and the pure air of heaven will cleanse the foulest and most loathsome prison or person when properly applied. Thank the Lord, the doors of the Endowment House have been carried off by the Samson of the Supreme Court; and a sweeping cyclone of testimony from many witnesses has unroofed it, and the Augean stables—to stick to the figure—have been washed by a stream of truth, which has not only swept away the filth from the surface, but has flushed the sewers of Salt Lake’s secret oath-bound organization, and carried the fraud and filth of her moral shame into the desert. Gentile aggressiveness and Christian fidelity have seized the reins, to hold or drive the chariot of progress as Christian, conscientious people shall determine. The Christian churches and schools which already have their coronation in the victory recently won, are glad and go on their way rejoicing. They have endured all things; they hope all things.

Says Dr. McNiece: “The rapidity with which important events succeed each other in the capital city of Utah in connection with the overthrow of Mormonism, makes it an unusually interesting place to live in or read about. In November last the public interest was aroused by the Endowment House exposure in the Third District Court, by the important decision of Judge Anderson, that no one who has been through the horrible Endowment House, and still maintains his connection with the Mormon organization, is entitled to naturalization as an American citizen.”

This is good reading, even when found in the Deseret News, and is the harbinger of brighter days.

We need not go into the matter particularly touching the early close association, and suspicious connection of Mormonism with Masonry, for it is known that in the early days at Nauvoo there were Masonic lodges composed exclusively of Mormons, working under special dispensation; and the statistics show that there was a time when they had a majority of the members of that order in the State. Besides there is evidence to show that some of the Mormon and Masonic work was so intermingled that it was difficult to tell "which from tother," the Mormons being the judges. It is quite enough to know that the tap-root out of which the poisonous stem and malignant deadly fruits have come, was and is the common root of an IRON-CLAD, OATH-BOUND SECRET ORGANIZATION, with pains and penalties for revealing secret mysteries, such and such like organizations being, I think, disloyal alike to Christ, to the home, the church and the state.

It is this phase of the Mormon infamy, which the November (1889) trial in the city of Salt Lake uncovered in all its hideous, leprous loathsomeness; so that it stands in its naked deformity and devilishness, exposed to the withering contempt of our civilization.

The case was that of John Moon and others in the matter of their application to become citizens of the United States. The charge was made by those who objected to their application for citizenship, that they were members of the Mormon church, and that they had gone through the Endowment House of that church, and there had taken an oath or obligation incompatible with the oath of citizenship. In the Deseret Weekly News, the official organ of the Mormon church, under date November 23 and 30, may be found the proceedings of the trial, evidence, etc., as brought out in the District Court for the Third Judicial District of the Territory of Utah, Judge Thomas J. Anderson. Many witnesses testified to having gone through the Endowment House, and to the fact that a penalty was attached for revealing certain mysteries of the Endowment House. One specifically says that the penalty of death was attached for revealing these Masonic—mark the word—Masonic ceremonies. One cannot gather whether the witness used the term "Masonic" in this connection to designate the actual character of the ceremonies, making it thus synonymous with Mormon; or whether he used it wittingly for the supposed weight it might have with the Judge in securing exemption from making damaging testimony by exposing secrets. Witnesses testified that penalties were also attached to revealing signs, grips, passwords, etc.; and a number of witnesses agreed that the penalty for disclosing these "secret ceremonies" was "having the tongue cut out," "throat cut from ear to ear," "right hand forfeited;" being "disemboweled," "dissected," etc.

Then there were unwilling witnesses who, when hotly pressed, declined to answer concerning the secrets of the Endowment House; said the endowments were for future use, and were not to be made public. In this they "were like the Masonic ceremonies," said the witness. Again and again witnesses took refuge and sought escape from the troublesome inquest of the court by saying that those matters and ceremonies were moral and religious rites to which the United States government had no right, and they stood stubbornly, refusing to let in the light on these secret and scandalous ceremonies—all the while protesting that there was nothing in them whatever that conflicted with good and honest citizenship and loyalty to flag, country, and Constitution.

There is quite enough of this to conclusively show that the safeguard and shelter of this was, and is, the secret oath-bound character of the institution, buttressed by the most brutal penalties which the heart of fiend or fanatic can conceive.

Having gone over the evidence somewhat fully as addressed before the court from all classes of witnesses to sustain the case, and having carefully reviewed the opinion of the learned Judge Anderson, as given in the Deseret News of Dec. 7, 1889, it will be evident that loyalty to the Mormon church and loyalty to the United States government at the same time, by the same person, is an impossibility.

In closing his opinion, which occupied an hour in reading, and goes over the whole proceedings of the Federal Court in this matter of the naturalization of Mormons, the Judge says:

"The Mormon church teaches:

"1. That it is the actual and veritable kingdom of God upon earth—not in its fulness, because Christ has not yet come to rule in person; but for the present he rules through the priesthood of the church, who are his vicegerents upon earth.

"2. That this kingdom is both a temporal and a spiritual kingdom, and should rightly control, and is entitled to the highest allegiance of men.

"3. That this kingdom will overthrow the United States and all other governments, after which Christ will reign in person.

"4. That the doctrine of 'Blood Atonement' is of God, and that under it certain sins, which the blood of Jesus Christ cannot atone for, may be remitted by shedding the blood of the transgressor.

"5. That polygamy is a command of God, which if a member obeys he will be exalted in the future life above those who do not.

"6. That the Congress of the United States has no right under the Constitution to pass any law in any manner interfering with the practice of the Mormon religion, and that acts of Congress against polygamy and disfranchising those who practice it are unwarranted interferences with their religion.

"Can men be made true and loyal citizens by such teachings, or are they likely to remain so, surrounded by such influences? Will men become attached to the principles of the Constitution of the United States when they hear the government constantly denounced as tyrannical and oppressive? It would be as unreasonable to expect such a result as it would be to expect grapes from thorns or figs from thistles. It has always been, and still is, the policy of this government to encourage aliens, who in good faith come to reside in this country, to become citizens; but when a man of foreign birth comes here and joins an organization, which although professedly religious, requires of him an allegiance paramount to his allegiance to the government; an organization that impiously and blasphemously claims to be the kingdom of God, and to control its members under its immediate direction; and yet teaches and practices a system of morals shocking to Christian people everywhere, and under which the marriage of a man to two or more sisters or to a mother and daughter is sanctioned; an organization which sanctions blood atonement as a means of grace, and murder as a penalty for revealing the secrets of its ceremonies; and which for nearly half a century has refused to acknowledge the supremacy of the United States or to render obedience to its laws,—it is time for the courts to pause and inquire whether such an applicant should be admitted to citizenship.

"The evidence in this case establishes unquestionably that the teachings, practices and aims of the Mormon church are antagonistic to the government of the United States, utterly subversive of good morals and the well-being of society, and that its members are actuated by a feeling of hostility toward the government and its laws; and therefore an alien who is a member of said church is not a fit person to be made a citizen of the United States.

"Signed,

THOS. J. ANDERSON,

Associate Justice Supreme Court and Acting Judge Third Judicial District."

This, to my mind, is the best reading I have seen in many a day—the Judge swings a scythe and cuts a swath right through the swamp and marsh of foreignism, and alienism, and disloyalty, which not only lays low the reeds and cat-tails of Mormon treason, but cuts also on either side some of the rankest and most pestilential weeds of Jesuitism and Clan-na-Gaelism. Let there be here between these seas and under these stars no room for any foreign flag or for any citizen which, with mental reservation in its oath, to us, owes allegiance first and foremost to foreign prince or pope, to any other power, political or ecclesiastical, than to the one starry flag, or the Constitution for which that flag forever stands. (Applause.)

This trial, with its evidence, its arguments and its opinion, rendered by Judge Anderson, marks an era in this Mormon problem—it is the thin edge of the wedge which is to cleave wide open the toughened trunk of this iniquity; already the light shines along the plane of cleavage to the rotten heart of this Upas tree; when shivered into fragments we will burn the stuff and scatter the ashes over the alkali plains, or tramp it into a roadway along which the clank of twentieth century civilization shall roll in triumph.

Only two weeks after the trial exposing the Endowment House business had been ended, came the report of the grand jury, published in the Salt Lake Tribune, Dec. 15, 1889. This was another exposure of favoritism, extravagance and fraud practiced by the Mormon officials for the preceding five years. The report, summed up, shows that the city and county officials have for years been plundered without mercy by Mormons who occupy high positions in the church, and who have kept themselves constantly out of breath warning their people against the incoming Americans and urging them to vote against the American ticket for fear the Americans would use the public offices to defraud the people. Following these events in startling swift succession came the Idaho law, disfranchising Mormons—polygamists, and declared by the United States Supreme Court to be constitutional. And then, a little later (Feb. 10), the overwhelming defeat of the Mormon power in the municipal election in the city of Salt Lake. These two events show us the crest of the wave in the conflict between American civilization and Mormonism.

The crisis has come at last in this conflict—the culmination is reached when the conspiracy of all most wholesome and virile moral forces swell the flood of righteous indignation against this outrage, until it shall be swept off the face of the fat valleys of the West, and from under the shelter of our flag. (Great applause.)

The increase of secret societies, the separate organization of classes, and the efforts of each class to obtain legislation for its own exclusive benefit bodes no good to the general public. This special and class legislation is sought through secret combination, the members of the society taking an extra-judicial oath of secrecy. The result is that what ought to be a united people is becoming separated into segments, each organization for itself and against all the other people of the commonwealth. The result is that those that do not organize and combine together for their own protection are left at the mercy of these combinations, and it is the honest, industrious, well-doing class who do not combine to promote their own pecuniary interest. I may say it is only secret societies for the promotion of the pecuniary interest of the members which are objectionable, and it is the element of secrecy which renders them dangerous to the community at large. Of course religious or beneficial societies of any kind or partnership for business purposes are not objectionable, but they are never connected by any element of oath-bound secrecy. The fruits of secret society policy are beginning to ripen. Those of Mollie Maguires, anarchists and Clan-na-Gaels have already been tried, and found bitter to the taste. By their admitted necessity for secrecy they declare that their ends and purposes are such as will not bear the light. —Associate Presbyterian.

REFORM NEWS.

NEW YORK AND BROOKLYN.

A HARVEST FOR A WORKER.

NEW YORK CITY, April 29, 1889.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I am constantly finding new friends, and new doors are being opened to receive the unpopular truth I bring. Sabbath before last I addressed a goodly number at the regular afternoon service in the First Reformed Presbyterian church. This body was formerly located near the business center of the city, but feeling they were more needed in a new but growing portion, they removed to Harlem, where a neat and substantial church edifice has been erected. This removal materially diminished the congregation, but God's blessing attends a devoted, self-sacrificing spirit, and we shall look for a great ingathering of souls in this new field. The pastor, Rev. J. C. K. Milligan, is a true man of God.

The multiplicity of meetings connected with the recent communion season in the Third Reformed Presbyterian church doubtless diminished the attendance at my lecture on Friday evening. The pastor, Rev. J. M. Foster, is a strict Covenanter as to reforms, and will gladly arrange to give me another hearing at a more opportune time.

Another visit to the Free Methodist church in Brooklyn proved very pleasant, and I trust profitable. The great Head of the church was visibly present by his Spirit, and we had a blessed service. I had planned to speak for Bro. Eakins morning and evening, but as another door providentially opened for the evening service, I changed that appointment to the afternoon, speaking at that time of the anti-Christian character of the lodge. The friends responded liberally in a collection to further our cause.

My evening address was given in the Bethlehem Swedish Lutheran church. As it was raining I did not anticipate a large gathering, but was happily surprised to find a large and intelligent audience waiting. Those present were mostly young people. The strictest attention was given as I showed that the lodge was seeking to close the only gate to heaven. For there is only "one name given under heaven among men whereby we must be saved." Together with kind wishes expressed by many, a five-dollar bill was given by the pastor, Rev. A. Rodell, as a substantial evidence of their interest. A letter since received from him assures me that the way will be open for future lectures to his people.

While crossing the Brooklyn Bridge in company with Bro. James Gray, I was introduced to a member of Dr. Talmage's church, who proved to be a zealous lodge advocate. This man made a number of very foolish statements. The following are samples: "All the secrets of Masonry are exposed in the Bible." "We have St. John the Evangelist in our order." A young man had joined the church to which he belonged, he said, and when asked what led him to become a Christian, replied that he did not like to tell. When pressed for an answer he replied, it was the lodge. He had been seeking light in the lodge and not finding it, was then led to be a Christian. He could have commended the "joss house" on the same ground. Doubtless some have become disgusted there, and are forced to seek light elsewhere. He stated that all the trustees of their church were Masons but one, and that he said he did not know why he was not. It will be remembered that Dr. Talmage preached a sermon on the lodge in which he made statements like these: "A good man will not belong to a bad society; neither will a bad man belong to a good society." A simple-minded child might have corrected the doctor in this. When a man undertakes to defend a bad institution, it should be expected he would use bad logic. Indeed, he cannot do otherwise.

Our list of new subscribers to the Cynosure increases every day. Over seventy have already been secured. I shall hope to plant at least one hundred before returning to Washington. I have circulated the account of the Masonic killing of Rev. Johnston in the Huntington pit extensively, and find it attracts universal attention. Friends will do well to secure a quantity of these circulars for their neighborhoods. Any G. A. R. men visiting this city and wishing to meet the "Grand Commander" here will find him in a gilded saloon at the corner of Fourteenth street and Broadway. At least a large sign announces his headquarters there.

Rev. J. C. K. Milligan heard Mr. Moody give another ringing testimony against the lodge in a series of meetings he has been holding in this city. I speak to-night in a Danish Lutheran church, Brooklyn, and Sabbath evening next in the largest Reformed Presbyterian church in the city. Encouragement for lectures has been given by German Lutheran friends, but no arrangement has been definitely made as yet for them. Bro. Conant of Willimantic, Conn., has written two kind letters requesting work there. If time will allow I shall hope to meet with these friends before my return home. Will not those who know their subscriptions to be due me for the Cynosure, please remit to 215 4½ street N. W. Washington, D. C. Mrs. Stoddard will credit you in my absence. Yours for Christ and reform, W. B. STODDARD.

A QUESTION ABOUT CORNER-STONES.

DENVER, Colo.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I find your coming looked forward to as among the things which give me courage and hope, in the midst of much that gives grave fears for the future of our own fair country and the world which is still under the power of "the wicked one." It gives me hope because you do not shun to declare the whole counsel of God, whether men will hear or forbear. Is it not true that our pulpits, or many of them, give the people an emasculated gospel, tickling their ears with commonplaces, rounded off and cushioned with the iteration of the manliness of Christ, the fatherhood of God, and the brotherhood of man; all woven in so prettily that the people separate, saying, What a beautiful sermon! But who says, "Men and brethren, what shall I do to be saved?" Not one! Why should they? for so far as appears there is nothing to be saved from.

I have looked forward to the convention in Chicago with great interest, and am sure of a treat when I get the proceedings.

Will some one familiar with Oriental architecture as it prevailed 2,000 years ago, tell us in your columns what use was made of the corner-stone, which made it a suitable symbol of the Lord Jesus Christ as the "Chief Corner-stone," "the head stone of the corner"—"a tried stone, a precious corner-stone, a sure foundation, in whom all the building fitly joined together groweth into an holy temple in the Lord?"

Was it a stone wrought into the foundation? or did the safety of the building depend upon the timbers being framed into it, and therefore the stone of necessity being upright? Dr. Smith tells us of such a stone having been found at Baalbec, 28 feet long, 6½ feet wide, and 4 feet thick. No wonder it should grind to powder whomsoever it should fall upon. Looking at the symbolic character of the corner-stone, we should like to be informed when or how the placing of it came into the hands of the Freemasons; or made it seem plausible or decent that they should be given the privilege of taking charge of the placing of a stone symbolizing the Lord Jesus Christ, and then pouring out libations upon it as to heathen divinities, when the structure is ostensibly to be a house of God, in which the Gospel of Christ is to be proclaimed, and the blessed Redeemer is to be worshiped as God.

In our growing city we have corner-stones, and corner-stones, to be laid. And soon the Capitol is to furnish a grand show by the Freemasons, and anon a large church is to be built for the accommodation of those who believe that "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." Shall heathen rites be performed here by those who dare approach the Father, leaving out this only precious name by which we may hope to have access to him? Any information on this point will be timely, and useful.

A. E. KELLOGG.

THE LODGE IS ARMING.

GALVA, Ill., Apr. 25, 1890.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—What does it mean? A G. A. R. paper, the Division News, published at Springfield, Ill., says the South Dakota legislature has passed a bill "To Loan Arms and Equipments to the Sons of Veterans' Lodges;" to become a law the first day of July. Why make such a law? Would not a "joint resolution" have answered the purpose? Or is there some hidden object that led to such a step? If so, what can that object be? Does it not look a little suspicious? What if all the States fall in line and do likewise and furnish the 80,000 Sons of Veterans with arms and equipments,—would it add to the safety of this American people?

The same G. A. R. paper advocates the forming of another secret society, Daughters of Veterans. What next?

In the little town of Galva we have "in active, healthy operation, the following societies: Masonic, Odd-fellows, Eastern Star, Grand Army, Women's Relief Corps, Sons of Veterans, Ancient Order of United Workmen, Independent Order of Red Men, Modern Woodmen." If lodges are a blessing, surely we are a blessed people.

R. CANNING.

PITH AND POINT.

ROME AND THE LODGE.

I have had opportunity, during my fourteen years missionary and evangelistic work, of seeing the baneful influences of secret lodges, and I have in the name of my God denounced them. The same spirit I have seen manifested by these sons of darkness that I had to endure from Rome's allies. I believe secret societies and Romanism to be of the same spirit.—(Rev.) N. W. DEVENEAU, Kankakee, Ill.

BUT FAITHFUL CHURCHES DO THIS WORK.

Some three years ago, I tried to interest some Christian young men in forming a mutual benevolent society on the plan of the lodge, with the secret left out. I had a constitution written out: but I did not succeed to form the society. There is a work of financial help which ought to be done, and which the churches cannot do.

They cannot turn away from their spiritual work to serve the tables of the needy. Let that be done systematically by some society that goes hand in hand with the church, and that will not make a mockery of religion and of prayer.—T. T. FRICKSTAD, Raymond, Cal.

PRAYER ANSWERED.

As the time appointed for the meeting of the Chicago Conference is drawing near, I am becoming intensely interested in the business for which it has been called. Oh, how I wish I could be there to listen to the discussion of the secret empire by those noble Christian reformers. I have been praying for the success of the Conference, and shall continue so to do, believing that God is able and willing to do great things; and that he is now ready to display his almighty power in the overthrow of the kingdom of darkness, and in the advancement of the kingdom of Christ. He has said, "I will for this be inquired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them." May we not believe that, in answer to the many earnest prayers of his people, he will at this time display his matchless power and grace, and lead back his people from their captivity and out of the cruel bondage of the secret empire. I believe the Conference will prove a great blessing, which may God grant for his name sake. Amen. The Cynosure is doing good. God's blessing attends its circulation; therefore, be encouraged. Slack not your efforts. The harvest is sure, and "in due time ye shall reap if ye faint not." Praise the Lord.—R. S. MORTON, Millville, Nova Scotia.

LITERATURE.

Scribner's Magazine for May contains an article of unusual richness in illustration, dealing with the country around Barbizon, made famous by Millet's pictures, and with the artist's personality; the second paper in the useful "Rights of the Citizen" series; and a description of Japanese theaters by a Japanese author, fully illustrated by Japanese artists. "Co-operative Home-Winning"—by W. A. Linn, an acknowledged authority on Building and Loan Association work—presents for the first time in a popular magazine some of the definite practical results of this method of home-building as told for the most part by the men themselves who have tried it. The numerous illustrations are from actual photographs of the houses which these men have built, and they are representative of the whole country, having been collected in leading cities from New York to San Francisco. Eugene Schuyler tells for the first time the full story of Madame de Stael's adventures in Italy, and correspondence with the poet Monti. "Glimpses of Napoleon in 1804" is an historical corollary of much value. It comprises portions of a journal by an American gentleman who spent several months in Paris while Bonaparte was mounting to his zenith. It gives some views of the popular idol of French history which detract much from the glory with which historians have surrounded him.

The Converted Catholic, edited by Father O'Connor, comes to us full of good things. The May number opens with an article on Converts from Rome, which is followed by an account of the conversion and experiences of Rev. Jos. Sullivan; then an account of the work among the Catholics in Baltimore, Md., is given, after which comes the second notice of the Nun of Kenmare's new book. The third article on the Primacy of Peter, by Rev. Thos. Connellan, late Roman Catholic priest, Athlone, Ireland, is a valuable contribution to this subject, as is also the fourth article by Rev. Mason Gallagher, Brooklyn, N. Y., on, Was the Apostle Peter ever at Rome? Reflections upon the Catholic Centennial by a Philadelphia lawyer are full of significant thoughts. The history of the Jesuits is continued and one of Father O'Connor's racy letters to Cardinal Gibbons completes the volume.

The Evangelical Repository for May has not fallen below the usual high standing of this magazine. Rev. Mason W. Presley contributes The Metaphysics of Theology; "C. C." The Brahma Somaj, or the Theistic Church of India; J. T. McClure, D. D., continues the valuable treatise on the Trial of Christ; Edward A. Thomson, D. D., takes us back to the family at Bethany. Penurious ones should read Rev. John T. Chalmers' Giving, an Act of Divine Worship. Several other important and interesting articles make up the number. A large place is given to church work, editorials, and book notices.

Light and Life, a quarterly covering the course of the international series of Sabbath-school lessons, has a new map of the lands of the Gospels, and opens with two beautiful poems. The original thoughts and lesson illustrations are very good, while the "Bible Dictionary" published in the back is a very valuable help to the scholar and teacher. Published by T. B. Arnold, 104-106 Franklin St., Chicago.

The American Agriculturist for May gives us glimpses of nearly every side of farm life and labor, from vineyards and pretty girls in California to rice fields and Mongolian farmers in China. The army horse and Indian ponies, sheep, cows, and bulls, all get their place. Vines, flowers, trees, none are slighted. Nor is the household neglected. Boys and girls, too, come in for their part.

THE N. C. A. FUNDS.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of — dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be sufficient discharge.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, MAY 8, 1890.

DR. GOODWIN'S SPEECH.

The good-humored remarks of Dr. Goodwin, given in the present number, will please as well as instruct. No one can read the story of his friend in Palestine creeping into the stone coffin of Hiram without seeing how stone-blind Freemasons are to the Baal-worship which they practice, and boast of as their origin, because it is ancient; forgetting that worshipping idols is worshipping devils, and that men become like the objects which they worship. (See 1 Cor. 10:20.)

The stones of the size found in that old Tyrian tomb could now hardly be moved by the entire population of the Holy Land; and, like the pyramids, they entomb the dead energies of nations where Christ and apostles once walked and taught, but where hyenas have come back to howl, and owls to hoot over once waving fields, and the pilgrim beggar and the wandering Arab, the muttering monk and cringing native roam over barren hills, where monarchs once ruled in palaces, and prophets once called down fire from heaven and gave the laws, and furnished the literature to the now civilized world.

The one sole, solitary cause of this grim desolation is given in one steady blaze of the Old Testament Scriptures, and its sum and substance is seen in the secret lodge system now pouring in over the United States—a system of religion without law or Gospel, Decalogue or Christ. The Jews originally had both. Their father Abraham "saw Christ's day, and was glad"; and every lamb on their altars meant Christ—innocence suffering to make atonement for sin. And as for the New Testament, Masons cut Christ's name out of it when it occurs in the passages they quote; and hence they have neither "the Way," "the Truth" nor "the Life." The crime of that Christian "good fellow" was that which Moses punished with death, viz., idolatry, as Dr. Goodwin strikingly shows. And idolatry is putting out the eyes of the inhabitants of the world, so that they cannot behold THE SUN.

A LUTHERAN CLOUD-BURST ON MASONRY.

The Daily Independent, Massillon, O., of April 26th, prints a wonderful notice in its church list, and adds the reasons therefor, from the pastor of a Lutheran church in that city. The same facts are given in the New York Times and other prints of April 28th.

St. Paul's Lutheran church, of Massillon, has 320 members, over whom Rev. S. P. Long is the young and popular pastor. The Independent's reporter received from Mr. Long the facts that, on Sabbath, April 13th, at a meeting after service, the church came to the unanimous decision that Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias, etc., may not continue in Lutheran churches, because they practice, in their lodges; essential idolatry, pagan in origin and heathen in fact; and that the Joint Synod of Ohio is almost a unit in support of the position of St. Paul's church. The whole interesting statement is given on the 12th page of this number.

This is no sudden outburst. In "Rebold's General History of Masonry in Europe," page 54, we read: "The Reformation, led by Luther, gave the death-blow to the Masonic corporations in every portion of the European continent." "In 1522 the Helvetian Diet dissolved the Swiss lodges," and "in 1707, March 16th, the Diet of the Empire took away the authority of lodges to arbitrate between workmen." This is the history of the overthrow of the builders' associations, which, in 1717, were transformed into speculative Masonry.

This same high Masonic authority, whose book is dedicated to the lodges of both continents, tells us that "after the death of Charles I., 1649, the Masonic corporations of England, and more particularly those of Scotland, labored in secret to restore the throne destroyed by Cromwell, and for this purpose they instituted many degrees hitherto unknown" (page 54). These degrees were formed in France, whither the Stuarts had fled, and where Charles II. and his brother, James II., both joined both Masonry and popery; and the degrees "hitherto unknown" invented by Ramsey and priests in the Jesuits' College of Clermont, now constitute the "ancient and accepted Scottish Rite, of thirty degrees," which is now the ruling rite of the world. We commend this writer (Rebold) to Mr. Joseph Cook, where he will learn that Masonry and Jesuitism are one in origin, in history and in fact.

The young pastor, Long, prints a monthly paper for his congregation. The number for the present month begins with such lines as must give joy to the angels of God. They read:

Geo. Snyder left the lodge.

E. Gleitsman left two lodges.

All Christians will leave their lodges, if rightly instructed by their pastor.

This Lutheran outburst, or sun-burst, in Massillon, O., April 13th, is the flame of a fire which has been smoldering for three hundred years; and it is not likely again to be quenched. It is like a flame fed by the oil wells of the globe.

THE ORIGINAL-PACKAGE DECISION.

The decision of the Supreme Court at Washington, of which there is a particular account on the 11th page of this issue, is as likely to be as historic as the Dred-Scott decision a generation ago, or the annulling of the Civil Rights law in our own time. It has not, indeed, aroused so great indignation as those well-remembered judgments, because not bearing so directly upon the personal rights of men. But there are reasons for surprise, especially when we remember the State-rights affiliations of Chief Justice Fuller and Mr. Lamar. Both these gentlemen, in the recent case of Marshal Nagle, who shot Judge Terry in California while protecting the person of Justice Field, gave their voices strongly for the right of the State of California to try Nagle, and against the prior jurisdiction of the Federal Government.

Now the transportation and sale of liquors in "original packages" is decided by these gentlemen in blank defiance of State laws and State rights. To be sure they make a half apology by intimating that Congress should modify inter-State commercial laws so as to remedy the difficulty. But is there not ground enough for the conclusions of the three dissenting justices, Brewer, Gray and Harlan? The trade in cattle is also in its inter-State relation a business of the general Government, but Governors of States are every month or two proclaiming against the cattle of other States, and forbidding them to be brought over their borders. If cattle distempers may be so barred out, much more is the reason that the agent of wholesale poisoning of men and women should be kept out of a State if its people so determine.

The decision is manifestly unjust. Although it may be proved by some to be within the letter of the law, it is surely alien to its spirit. There are, however, some mitigating circumstances. Active State officers may make it exceedingly troublesome to dispose of original packages. If we remember aright an Iowa court has given a decision on the nature of an "original package" that makes a bulky possession for the ordinary drinker.

But its effect upon prohibition is direct and unquestionable. As Charles Sumner used to say of the repeated victories of the slave power in Congress, "The worse it is, the better it is." The decision voiced the heart of every liquor-maker and dealer. To them it seems to annul and destroy the whole work of prohibition. But at the same time it will convince sincere haters of the traffic, who have been satisfied to oppose it in local and State elections, that their opposition must be without exception. For town, county, State, Nation and the RACE, we must be PROHIBITIONISTS.

The decision of the court rendered at the same time on the case from Michigan decides as well against all State license laws as against those which are prohibitory. The liquor-dealers themselves will, on second thought, see that they are likely to be only losers in the end. Their infamous traffic is the curse of the age. It must be put down.

LABOR DEMONSTRATIONS.

The month of May, 1890, will be remembered for its troubled opening day. In Europe and America the labor organizations made the eight-hour day their common cause. The gravest apprehensions were felt in France, Germany, Austria and Spain lest the day should be one of horror and bloodshed. Socialists, anarchists, and revolutionists of every hue were promising such an uprising of the people as should shake thrones, and overawe parliaments. Everywhere extraordinary precautions were taken to suppress riots of workmen, and in France vigorous measures were employed against the anarchists. Forty more anarchists were arrested by the police of Paris a few days before; and other arrests of anarchists were made in Lyons, where explosives have been discovered in a number of the houses.

The dispatches show that the disturbances were comparatively trivial. In Berlin and other parts of Germany the large majority of the workmen ignored the agitators, whose influence seems to be greatly broken.

The great English demonstration took place on the Sabbath, May 4th, in London, many from other cities joining in the procession which numbered from 150,000 to 200,000, and the spectators swelled the multitude to a half million. The day passed quietly, and the crowd dispersed peaceably to their homes.

In Chicago an immense procession of labor unions and lodges took possession of the streets for the greater part of the day. At the close of their march they halted on the Lake Front to hear brief speeches and pass resolutions in which Mayor Cregier was freely denounced. No other incident marked the day, and no disturbance occurred. The carpenter's strike, after four weeks of loss to thousands of men, is partially settled. The men are to begin work for a new association of employers who allow them an eight-hour day, but pay by the hour. Numerous other strikes during the same time have been settled in a day or two; and the threatened uprising of labor which some imagined, will not transpire. Powerfully, of the Knights of Labor, and Gompers, of the American Federation, have been supremely active issuing proclamations and making speeches. The latter visited Chicago a week or two since, and in a speech in Battery D said:

"No man would want to work beside a leper, and a non-union man, the scab, is a far greater danger to the social, progressive and economic welfare of the world than all its lepers. They are the self-elected targets of both employes and employers, respected by neither. A scab, a non-union man, is the enemy of his kind, to his wife and to his children, and it is not strange that we should not want to work beside them."

Such language betrays the dangerous agitator and incendiary. In direct terms it incites men to violent and unlawful actions. The mouthings of the anarchists, which grew into actual crime and massacre, were no worse. It is lamentable to add that Judge Tuley, an aged member of the Cook county judicial bench, listened to this language, and followed it with an harangue of his own, but had no censure for the incendiary speaker to whom he had listened.

DR. HASSELQUIST'S TESTIMONY.—In our late sketch of this eminent Swedish educator and theologian, whose name is well-beloved by all his countrymen, we had no particular word from him on the lodge. But in a personal letter written on the 1st inst. to the editor, he says: "I did not learn from you to hate secretism, but I am on your side on that question, and regard secretism as one of the greatest dangers to Christianity as well as to the state."

An apology is due to Dr. Hasselquist and to our readers for the ill appearance of his portrait, which was altogether due to the carelessness of the printers. The proof of the plate before printing was in every way satisfactory.

—As indicating the themes that are taking strong hold upon the minds of young men and women in our colleges, the literary society of the young ladies of Wheaton College discussed the subject of self-supporting missions last Friday night, at a meeting to which the public were especially invited. Both sides of the question were well presented, but that of self-support in mission work was especially able, receiving the unanimous decision of the judges and the popular verdict as well.

—Mr. Porter, manager of the next census, proposes to include in the enumeration the secret assessment and beneficiary lodges, and has organized a department for this purpose. Under one pretense or another nearly every lodge in the country will creep into this record. If Mr. Porter would undertake this work from a patriotic motive, and the suppression of these orders as un-American and dangerous to our institutions, the work might be endorsed, but not so when it is for the glorification of lodgery. The record will some time be valuable, however, for the reform.

—It must certainly amaze many good men in the leading denominations, to mark the silence of their great papers in this city on the Conference. We do not find that either the Advance, the Standard, Interior, or Northwestern Christian Advocate, respective organs of the Congregational, Baptist, Presbyterian and Methodist denominations, took any notice of the Conference before or after. We need not attempt to name the motive for such silence. It may not be a guilty one. God knows. It is enough to know that the time will come, as it did in the anti-slavery agitation, when such papers must speak out or be set aside.

—The sickness of Mr. Pritchard, of the Christian Worker, was indirectly the occasion of our failure to hear from Prof. Joseph Moore, of Earlham College, at the Conference. His address had been carefully prepared on the topic, "Have our Best Men been Masons?" Being unable to attend in person, Prof. Moore sent this paper to Mr. Pritchard, and, with other mail, it was sent out to the latter's home, at Western Springs, and was therefore not reported. It will, however, be printed. Prof. Moore writes a cordial letter, saying how great was his regret at the necessity of his absence, and gives this good word: "I would like it to be known that I am ready to stand with the brave men and women who are of the light and of the day, as opposed to oath-bound secrecy."

—The Chicago Conference had no warmer appreciation from any quarter than the members of the United Brethren church who were present. Editor Dillon, of the Conservator, Dayton, gives hearty expression to this sentiment in the last number of that paper. To find that the best men of conservative denominations, like the Presbyterian, Baptist and Congregationalist, are standing up for the same truths for which they are struggling in the midst of great trial is good cheer, indeed. As bitterly as they—and as all Christians—must regret the defection of the former leaders of the United Brethren in their denial of Christ and embracing of the lodge, it is a compensation to know that the best and most thoughtful Christians are taking their stand for Christ against this manifestation of worldliness.

PERSONAL NOTES.

—Bro. Harry Agnew intends sailing, about May 15th, on his return to his mission work at Inhambane, on the east coast of Africa.

—Rev. S. F. Porter, our college agent, started from Chicago Saturday morning, by the Alton road, for a visit to a number of institutions in Illinois and Iowa.

—Rev. H. H. Hinman left this city for his home, in Oberlin, after the Conference, feeling quite unwell. He wrote, Friday, that his health was not materially improved.

—Calvin W. Pritchard, editor of the Christian Worker, was taken suddenly ill during the week of Conference, and was therefore prevented from attending the meeting, in which he had taken a deep interest. He was also expected to preside at one session.

—The missionary work of the American Sunday-school Union is attended with constant and growing success. During the last three years the number of missionaries has increased from sixty to ninety-five. Their field of labor covers from ten to twenty counties each, excepting those cases in which single counties support their own missionary. In the year closing March 1, 1890, they organized 1685 new Sunday-schools in thirty-one States and Territories, in places hitherto destitute of religious privileges. In addition to this, they gave aid to needy schools in 1852 instances; besides aiding schools previously reported in 4461 cases. Very frequently these schools have developed into churches of different denominations. These missionaries have also made 42,222 visits to families, in addition to distributing a large amount of religious literature, besides 6779 Bibles and 9337 Testaments. During the winter they earnestly conducted evangelistic work, and gathered many hundred souls into the kingdom of God. It is utterly impossible for us to estimate the far-reaching and beneficent results of such missionary work as this,—and all accomplished in one year.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

The closing of open bars in Boston—The labor situation—Evening schools—A new danger from the parochial system—A defaulting epidemic—The pulpit and the lodge.

The Board of Police Commissioners have decided that open bars in Boston must go. Whereupon an injured wail has gone up from the entire rum-selling fraternity, but loudest from the hotel-keepers, and the proprietors of the gilded palace saloons to whom the new law is especially obnoxious. While I cannot see that it will make any great difference in the amount of liquor drank as both they and their customers will probably find some way to adapt themselves to the new conditions, anything which the liquor sellers do not like a good prohibitionist is bound to like, and therefore this decision is to be welcomed. Even the recent judgment of the Supreme Court that ardent spirits sent from one State into another are articles of inter-State commerce, and cannot be seized under State prohibitory legislation, is not an unmixed evil, for it will lead prohibitionists to see the folly of working for anything less than national prohibition. It is rather curious, however, that this legal opinion, overriding as it does all State rights, should receive the endorsement of Lamar of Mississippi; but Bourbon theories of State sovereignty and Bourbon whisky are very easily reconciled.

In the great world-wide labor demonstration which May first will see inaugurated, Boston and Worcester will be the chief battle-grounds for New England. Many Boston ministers preached last Sunday in favor of the eight-hour law, and there is no doubt the modern trend is towards less hours for labor and more hours to think. The situation is enough to make the most thoughtless thoughtful. The world is entering on a new era of history, and as it looms up dim and portentous before the governments of the earth, no philosopher is wise enough to trace its veiled outlines or say whether they are the features of sphinx or angel.

Under the old regime New England mechanics were a class of thinkers—the shoemakers of Massachusetts notably so. But all this has changed; not only through the inrush of a foreign element unused to think, but by the changed conditions of modern labor. Formerly the workman pursued his craft in quietness and solitude. Now he is surrounded by other operatives, and the noise and din of machinery rendering anything like consecutive thought impossible. I know of nothing that in itself is more narrowing to the mental faculties than "tending a machine," but the great law of compensation holds here as well as in other things. Machinery makes fewer hours of toil possible and thus gives the workman a chance in the evening schools. Boston's evening schools, by the way, are doing a grand work. One noticeable feature about them is the presence of pupils fifty and sixty years old. In the High School department there is a system of examinations with certificates in each study, and when a certain number of certificates are obtained the graduate receives a diploma that is the equivalent of the English High School diploma. If Government would close every dramshop, and establish in their places evening schools and free libraries, it need have no fear, though every other went down in the crash of revolution. But until we send a different class of men to make our laws, I fear that the nation will still continue to put a higher value on its ninety per cent blood money than on its own peace and safety.

The parochial schools are getting to be a menace to the community in a way quite unforeseen. Many Irish parents unwilling or unable to pay the increased expense, and forbidden by the priest to send their children to the public schools, compromise matters by not sending them to any school, and thus a set of young hoodlums are thrown on to the community to grow up in ignorance, and in a few years from now bear rule in our country's affairs. This is another reason and a very strong one why parochial schools should be suppressed.

The 71st anniversary of the introduction of Odd-fellowship into this country was celebrated by Boston members of the order in a way that, judging from published reports, seems to have fully carried out the traditions of its convivial origin. While the lodge is continually boasting of the great and good men who belong to it, they are chiefly to be noted at these gatherings of the secret fraternity by their absence. Their official list may be searched indefinitely without finding a single name of world-wide reputation, either in philanthropy, letters or science.

There is another epidemic of defaulters on us. Among them I notice the name of a Springfield man high in the order of Masonry and for many years secretary of the Knights Templars. I have sometimes thought that a good subject for a ministers' meeting would be, "How far is the church responsible for the downfall of so many young men?" Does she from her thousands of evangelical pulpits warn them against the snares and dangers which lie in their way? How often do pastors make it a point to preach to this class—not merely in a general, "be good and then you will be happy" style, but pointedly and plainly? How many warn them of the danger of yielding to the first desire to go beyond their means? and directly, solemnly tell them that though they may walk in the way of their heart and the sight of their eyes, "for all these things God will bring them into judgment." And yet such a sermon in most of our churches would have to be preached to their mothers and sisters because our young men are lodge instead of church goers. It is not the press, but the secret worship of Baal that has shorn the pulpit of its old time power.

ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

THE DAYTON CONFERENCE ON CHRISTIAN UNION.

OBERLIN, Ohio, May 1, 1890.

To all readers of the Cynosure who wish to attend the Conference of all Christians, to be held at Dayton, Ohio, May 21-23, I wish to say that arrangements have been made whereby persons attending from Ohio and Indiana can go to such Conference and return at one and one-third of the regular rates; provided, always, that they obtain a certificate from the ticket agent that they have paid full fare in going, and a certificate from the clerk of the Conference that they have been in attendance. This last will entitle them to return at one-third of the usual rates.

H. H. HINMAN.

THE PROCEEDINGS of the late Conference of Christians on the Secret Lodge System will contain in full the addresses of:

Prof Henry C King, Rev E P Goodwin, D D, Rev J S T Milligan, Col George R Clarke, ex-Prest A A Smith, Bishop Halleck Floyd, Rev B T Roberts, Rev W P McNary, Rev H A Day, Prest C A Blanchard, Rev Thos D Wallace, D D, Prof David McDill, D D, and Joseph Cook of Boston.

It is placed at the nominal sum of 15 cents per copy and sent postpaid.

The Proceedings will be ready for delivery next week.

Ex-President Cleveland, at the celebration of Washington's Birthday by the Southern Society in New York, quoted the famous passages relating to morality and religion from the Farewell Address, and added:

"When did we outgrow these sentiments? When did we advance so far in knowledge above our fathers as safely to cast aside these beliefs? Let us be sober and thoughtful, and if we find that these things have lost their hold on our minds and hearts, let us take soundings, for the rocks are near.

"Point to your immense fortunes if you will; point to your national growth and prosperity; boast of the day of practical politics, and discard as obsolete all sentiment and all conception of morality and patriotism in public life, but do not for a moment delude yourselves into the belief that you are navigating in the safe course marked out by those who launched and blessed the Ship of State."

—The interest in the revival services at the Chicago Avenue Moody church, in this city, continues unabated. Mr. Telford, the English evangelist, makes most forcible and eloquent pleas for salvation. Mrs. Telford, who is a singer, has a voice of wonderful purity and sweetness. The Philharmonic Society of young ladies also assists in the singing.

THE HOME.

CHRIST WITHIN.

Why wouldst thou teach my soul to rise,
And seek for Jesus in the skies?
Is He so far apart?
Are skies a better dwelling place,
Than man's celestial heart and face
Made pure and bright with heavenly grace?
Oh! find Him in thy heart.

Why wouldst thou teach my thirsty soul
To wait till death shall make it whole?
Is Christ so far away?
Oh no! I see Him now and near,
His throbbing life, his word of cheer:
He turns my night to day.

Then cease thy looking here and there,
And first of all thy heart prepare
By purity from sin;
And then lit up with Heaven's bright glow,
Thy soul of truth and love shall know,
That Heaven above is Heaven below,
And Christ is found within.

—Prof. T. C. Upham.

THE CARD TABLE.

Skill and chance are distinguished by three things: A game of skill begins with a definite situation of each player with reference to every other; in games of chance this is determined by lot. The position of the men is fixed beforehand in a game of chess. In a game of cards the cards are distributed by lot. In the next place, skill is improved and increased by practice; chance is intended to prevent all such personal skill. In the third place, the player accepts the responsibility of his conduct in games of skill, while in games of chance he puts much of the responsibility on his luck. Any game may have these two elements intermingled; but games of chance, while calling for some skill, have this element of lot incorporated in them, while games of skill have no element of chance in them, in the same sense that there is chance in the cutting, shuffling and dealing of cards.

Casting lots is a specific appeal to divine providence. "The lot is cast into the lap, but the whole disposing thereof is of the Lord." Under proper circumstances casting lots is no more criminal than is the taking of an oath in the name of God. When irreverently or heedlessly done, it is a violation of the Third Commandment, just as profane swearing is. The Decalogue does not merely prohibit the specific act of theft and murder, but everything associated therewith, or that tends to such ends. The profanity involved in appealing to chance to distribute the cards among the players, is a specific act of profanity, essentially incorporated in the game, and wholly distinct from the plain swearing by the voice indulged in by some players, and avoided by others. It may have been proper enough to determine who should be an apostle by casting lots, and is recorded in the first chapter of Acts; but it is thoroughly irreverent to appeal to the Almighty to give us a start in a game for our own amusement.

The usual reply to this is that in these games of chance no appeal to God is intended. But to what is the appeal then made? It must be made to something, and what is that something meant by luck or chance? Go into the gambling room where they think out loud, and hear them "D—n this luck," or "Bless this luck" that gave them their hand, and hear them substitute the name of their Maker for the luck that is in your thoughts, and you will readily find where the instinct of the human mind locates this appeal. You say you never thought of any such thing, and that this, therefore, does not apply to you. So many people swear and never think of it; but that is no excuse. Their thoughtlessness is rather conclusive evidence of sinful heedlessness. It is no excuse to say that in the game of cards a great deal of skill is required. Is your skill exhibited in dealing the cards so as to locate the leading cards as you will? Then that is cheating, and you know it. The card-player is shut up to exclude skill in dealing his cards, or else cheat in playing the game. If he does the first he is appealing to the Almighty; and if he does the second he is a dishonest man.

Progressive euchre is a recent institution, but it has brought the evils of gambling promptly into fashionable and unfashionable circles. All the feverish excitement over the result in securing the prize is found in that which is found in the pool-room. Old gamblers sneer at the idea of people getting excited over such trivial matters; yet whether true or false, the charges and insinuations about cheating, and in some cases cheating by the very persons who bought the prizes and offered them, are proofs conclusive of the frame of mind produced by such parties. Is this picture overdrawn? No doubt there are many cases in which no such results actually follow; but if any really wish to know the end of this so-called amusement, they will find it in the hands of philanthropists who study lotteries. The physical effects of the excitement may not be very manifest, but the mental and moral intoxication of this is spreading its ruin all over the land. Most States have, by law, prohibited lotteries; but the gambling fever is fed by these games in private, and by horse-racing and professional base ball in public.

A Pinkerton detective, in explaining how he so promptly captured a bank thief, said that they had learned to watch the base ball pool-rooms to see what bank clerks were winning by betting on horse-races and base ball games. "If a young man loses for a few times, not much harm comes to him; but if he begins to win, then we begin to watch him."

Card-playing, in the family circle, is one of the places where the seeds of this appetite for an uncertain issue is sown. It has thus its two evils: A specific violation of the Third Commandment in its appeal to the Almighty to determine a lot concerning so frivolous a matter as a game of amusement; and, second, the development of the appetite for getting prizes and stake money, whether in the form of cigars, ice-cream, or progressive euchre prizes, or stakes of the pool-room, without any form of compensation paid for them. Betting is getting money's worth without working just as much as stealing.

It is said that this is drawing rather fine distinctions on moral questions. That, however, is a poor reply for a Christian to substitute for a real answer. The United Presbyterian Board of Publication issues "Cases of Conscience," by Pike & Haywood, in which this subject is thoroughly discussed. These subjects are not proposed for the benefit of "dough-faces" easily ridiculed out of their convictions. Persons who have no convictions, or who are unwilling to stand by their convictions, are nuisances to the church. If they were outside of the church they would be more likely to be converted. Yet how many professing Christians can be ridiculed out of praying, and ridiculed into dancing and card-playing.—From Lectures of Rev. Geo. P. Hays, of Kansas City.

SOME THINGS THAT JESUS WAS NOT.

A Christian is a follower of Jesus. The actions of some of his professed followers suggests that they need to be reminded that Jesus

Was not a formalist; he neither read his prayers nor his sermons, and held his most important meetings out of doors.

Was not a politician. Though great issues were at stake in his nation, he insisted that his kingdom was not of this world. There is no doubt, however, that had he lived in this day and nation, that he would have been active in all great moral questions.

Was not wealthy. His wealth was not of this world, and he brought to light riches likened to which all earthly gain is dross.

He was a slave to no filthy habit. One could no more conceive of Jesus going around with a tobacco quid in his cheek, or a pipe in his mouth, than they could of an angel attending a horse-race, dance or circus.—Sel.

Dr. Wm. M. Taylor is reported as saying, "Unless there is something on which I cannot hold my peace I leave them alone." Some men held their peace on slavery until the guns of Beauregard almost knocked them out of their pulpits. Some men will hold their peace on the sin of intemperance until the saloon strangles public virtue. The State Superintendent of Prisons in his last annual report said rum furnished nearly two-thirds of all the convicts in the State prisons of the State. Will not that make a man speak? We fear not that ministers will speak too soon on public abuses, but most fear that they will be dumb until compelled to open their lips by God's righteous judgments, or the thundering accusations of their own congregations.—Christian Inquirer.

"A BOY OF HIS WORD."

You may sing of the heroes of yore,
You may speak of the deeds they have done,
Of the foes they have slain by the score,
Of the glorious battles they've won;
You may seek to eternize their fame,
And it may be with goodly success;
But it is not the warrior's name
That my heart and my spirit would bless.
Though oft at their mention my soul hath been stirred,
Yet dearer to me is the boy of his word.

You may speak of the great ones of earth,
Of prelates, of princes, and kings;
I doubt not there's something of worth
In the bosom of all human things;
But dearer to me than the whole
Pageantry, splendor and pride,
Is the boy with a frank, honest soul,
Who never his word hath belied.
Yes, prized above all that this earth can afford,
Though lowly and poor is the boy of his word.

TAKING THE BOY'S MEASURE.

Jimmy Jackson was in high glee. He had just been measured for his new spring suit, and was to have it next week, in time to wear down to Squadunk on the picnic excursion.

"Pin-check," said Jimmy; "picked it out myself; that is, mother and I did. Didn't we, mother? Smith says he can fit me to a T. Good shape. Some boys have crooked shoulders, and some grasshopper legs. Hard to fit. Take a twenty-four, I do. Remember all the measurements, 'most—twenty-four breast, fourteen collar, twenty-nine long, twen—Say there, Dick, let that bat alone, I tell you! Yes, mother, I'm going in a minute—didn't I tell you so (impatiently)?—soon's I settle Sue, here, for nabbing my ear."

"What are you laughing at, Uncle Harry?"

"Oh, nothing much! Just thought what a chance it was for the recording angel to take your measure—that's all."

Jimmy went on about his errand, and when he got back it was high bedtime and a little past; so after the usual amount of teasing to wait for just another game, and grumbling at the injustice of sending a boy to bed before it was dark, when all the other boys in town could sit up until ten, he stumbled up the stairs in a very bad humor.

He got out of his clothes, but how, no one but a boy in bad humor and a hurry to have it over, can tell. How he was to get into such a tangled, criss-cross muss the next morning was another puzzle.

"Blessings on the man that invented sleep!" would have been a very appropriate motto to tack on Jimmy's bed that night; for, embraced in its arms, he soon forgot Dick's felonious intentions on his bat, the pending settlement with Sue of the "nabbing" case, and the ill-humor of the last moments, aroused by his sense of ill-treatment, and was living again the proud moments in the merchant tailor's room, where the soft, handsome folds of the "pin-check" goods were being admired, and the hum of the tailor's voice, as he said, "Open your vest, please; now lift your arms, so; stand straight, please; fourteen, twenty-four; that will do," etc., rang in his ears.

Presently it became indistinct and confused. Then it began to ring again with new distinctness.

"Stand straight, please. Humph! Very much shrunken calves, these. One, two—only two errands for mother to-day, and a good deal of growling over those. Open the vest please. Thirteen breast measure; small heart inside; cold and selfish; wants everything for himself. Some boys with generous hearts measure twenty-five. Stand straight, please! Nineteen high; good deal of a baby yet; whines and pouts like one. A boy with sense and manliness enough to take things reasonably ought to measure thirty."

By this time Jimmy was tumbling and rolling at a great rate. Great beads of sweat stood on his brow, and something suspiciously like groans broke from his lips.

"Pretty crooked, shriveled specimen this! Hard to make his robe look decent at all. Got in by the skin of his teeth."

You would have thought Jimmy was trying to put himself through a knot-hole, he shrank into so small a ball in one corner of the bed.

"Cut a sorry figure before the throne. If he'd only thought as much of how his spirit grew, as having a well-shaped body!"

A long, low, gurgling sound came from under the bed-clothes, which were gripped tight in both Jimmy's fists. Tiptoe, tiptoe came footsteps down the hall, and a light gleamed along the wall, and then shone into Jimmy's face.

"Oh, how it shines! Let me go away—away back please, Mr. Recording Angel! I'm so un—"

"Jimmy, Jimmy! Wake up! What's the matter, boy?"

"Oh! Mr. An—Why, Uncle Harry! I'm so glad! I—I guess I've been dreaming; but I tell you it was mighty natural. Don't go yet!"

"But what about the recording angel?"

"Why, don't you know what you said last night about—about—"

"Taking your measure, eh? As good as Smith's?"

"No; but I mean to make it so, Uncle Harry."

TEMPERANCE.

A BLOW AT PROHIBITION.

[Special Telegram to Inter-Ocean.]

The United States Supreme Court, by a decision to-day, would seem to have put an end to all statutes prohibiting the sale of liquor within the several States. The case was that of Gus Leidy & Co. vs. A. J. Hardin. It came up from the State of Iowa. The firm which composes the plaintiffs in error is doing business in Peoria, Ill., and shipped a certain quantity of beer amounting to about $500 in value, in kegs, to Iowa to be sold. The beer was there seized on the charge that it was in violation of the latest law of Iowa to sell it there, in that it was an intoxicating beverage. The case was decided in favor of the Iowa statute by the lower courts, and came to the Supreme Court on appeal. The Supreme Court has reversed the decision and remanded it for further proceeding not inconsistent with the opinion which is given. There was a dissenting opinion by Mr. Justice Gray, which is concurred in by Justices Harlan and Brewer.

The effect of the decision of the court is perhaps best illustrated by a paragraph in the dissenting opinion, which defines it and indicates what the consequences will be from such a determination of the law. Mr. Justice Gray, in commenting on the decision of the majority, says: "If the statutes of a State restricting or prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors within its territory shall be held inoperative and void as applied to liquors sent or brought from another State and sold by the importer in what are called original packages, the consequence must be that the inhabitants of any State may, under the pretext of inter-State commerce, and that without license or supervision of any public authority, carry or send into or sell in any or all of the other States of the Union intoxicating liquors of whatever description, in cases, or even in single bottles or flasks, despite any legislation of those States on the subject, and although his own State should be the only one which had not enacted similar laws."

Yet that is exactly what the decision of the majority of the United States Supreme Court has affirmed. It has decided that it is violation of that provision of the Federal Constitution relative to the commerce between the States for the State of Iowa to prohibit the sale in original packages of kegs or flasks of beer, which were shipped from Peoria, Ill., to be sold within the State of Iowa. In other words, it is impossible for any State to enact a prohibitory law under the police power of the State or under any other supposed power of the State which shall prevent the bringing into that State packages of intoxicating liquor from without the State, no matter what the size of the package and irrespective of the character of the liquor. The constitutional function of the State to regulate the sale of liquor, and its police power to prescribe what shall or shall not be sold, does not take effect until after the liquor so imported into the State shall have passed from the hands of the person to whom it was consigned and be offered for sale to some other person. In other words, it is not possible for any State of this Union to enact a prohibitory law which will prevent any person from bringing in by any mode of conveyance which it will carry any quantity of liquor which the person ordering it may desire to have for his own use.

The decision of the court by which this principle is affirmed, was drawn by Mr. Chief Justice Fuller. It is concurred in by all the Judges of the court except Messrs. Gray, Harlan, and Brewer, who join in the minority decision. Mr. Brewer's confirmation was opposed by the prohibitionists upon the theory that he was not sufficiently sound on prohibition and the temperance question to suit them. Mr. Brewer, in this minority decision, has heaped coals of fire upon their heads. He follows Justice Gray and Justice Harlan in assuming that the police power of the State is exactly what the prohibitionists have claimed that it was.

The effect of this decision is very far reaching. It is the general opinion about the Supreme Court to-day, as expressed by the most eminent counselors practicing at that bar, that this decision renders nugatory all of the prohibitory laws in all of the States as applicable to liquor brought into the States from without those States in original packages and designed for consumption by the persons to whom they are consigned. The prohibition leaders who carefully read the opinion stated that there was no remedy against this decision but to make prohibition a national question and to have prohibition incorporated in the Federal Constitution as an amendment. They admit that the effect of the decision is what the dissenting judges in their opinion say it is.

THE DISSENTING OPINION.

Justice Gray delivered a dissenting opinion in behalf of himself and Justices Harlan and Brewer. It says: Common experience has shown that the general and unrestricted use of intoxicating liquors tends to produce idleness, disorder, disease, pauperism and crime. The power of regulating or prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors appropriately belongs, as a branch of the police power, to the Legislatures of the several States, and can be judiciously and effectively exercised by them alone, according to their views of public policy and local needs; and cannot practically, if it can constitutionally, be wielded by Congress as part of a national and uniform system. The statutes in question were enacted by the State of Iowa, in the exercise of its undoubted power to protect its inhabitants against the evils, physical, moral, and social, attending the free use of intoxicating liquors. They are not aimed at inter-State commerce, they have no relation to the movement of goods from one State to another, but operate only on intoxicating liquors within the territorial limits of the State; they include all such liquors without discrimination, and do not even mention where they are made or whence they come. If the statutes of a State, restricting or prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors within its territory, are to be held inoperative and void as applied to liquors sent or brought from another State, and sold by the importer in what are called original packages, the consequence must be that an inhabitant of any State may under the pretext of inter-State commerce, and without license or supervision of any public authority, carry or send into, and sell in, any or all of the other States of the Union intoxicating liquors of whatever description, in cases or kegs, or even in single bottles or flasks, despite any legislation of those States on the subject, and although his own State should be the only one which had not enacted similar laws. We would require affirmative and explicit legislation on the part of Congress to convince us that it contemplated or intended such a result.

ANOTHER CASE.

The court by the same vote reversed the decision of the Supreme Court of Michigan, in the case of Henry Lyng, an agent for a Wisconsin brewery, who was fined for selling liquor without a license. Lyng attacked the constitutionality of the law on the ground that it would compel agents for outside brewers to pay $300 a year license, while brewers within the State could under their manufacturers' license sell at wholesale after paying only $65 annual license. He contended that this was practically a regulation of inter-State commerce, and the court decides in his favor. The opinion rendered by the Chief Justice in this case concludes as follows: "The same rule that applies to the sugar of Louisiana, the cotton of South Carolina, the hops of Washington, the tobacco of Maryland and Connecticut, applies to all commodities in which a right of traffic exists recognized by the laws of Congress, the decisions of courts, and the usages of the commercial world. It devolves on Congress to indicate such exceptions as in its judgment a wise discretion may demand under particular circumstances."

THE CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE

RESOLUTIONS.

1. WHEREAS, The Bible, both in its historic object lessons, and in its authoritative precepts, demands that God's people should be separate from the world, in spirit and affiliation, as seen in the call of Abraham, the Redemption from Egypt, and the New Testament command, "Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers;" and

WHEREAS, This divine teaching seems entirely ignored in these days by large numbers in the churches—in pulpit and pew—greatly to the detriment of individual piety, and to church efficiency; be it therefore

Resolved, That we, as a Conference of Christian churches, declare it as our solemn conviction that intelligent fealty to Freemasonry and kindred associations can only be maintained at the cost of loyalty to Christ; and we therefore call upon the ministry and church to inform themselves on this subject that they may intelligently obey the divine command, "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness."

2. Resolved, That the underlying principles of Masonry, and of secret societies in general, are in direct conflict with the policy and example of our Lord Jesus Christ, who did nothing in secret; that they endanger spiritual life and activity of their members, and therefore we feel it our duty to warn all Christians against any affiliation with them.

3. Resolved, That Freemasonry, being a system fabulous in its origin, false in its history, bombastic in its literature, selfish in its charity, degrading to manhood in its rites of initiation, sworn to secrecy in its membership, impious in its oaths, blasphemous in its assumption of titles, childish in its regalia, ludicrous in its ceremonies, demoralizing in its morality, misleading in its promises, Bible-mutilating in its official quotations, Christless in its prayers, and pagan in its worship, is radically inconsistent with the Christian religion.

4. WHEREAS, The true intent and tenor of an oath administered to a witness in court of civil law is to the effect that he shall tell the whole truth, so far as known to him, in the case under investigation; and,

WHEREAS, Roman Catholic priests claim and receive exemption from this obligation, so far as concerns knowledge acquired by them in the confessional; therefore

Resolved, That the claim set up by Roman Catholic priests, and it is believed conceded to them, when testifying under oath in law courts, of withholding all information communicated to them "in confession," is at variance with the law of God and hostile to the interests and rights of society.

5. Resolved, That while Freemasonry is the rival, and therefore the enemy of the church, it is equally so of the state—claiming that its obligations are the most sacred and binding ever taken by man; thus bringing its subjects all too often into antagonism with both, as well as with the family. It is, therefore, the duty of every lover of these divine institutions to labor for the complete overthrow of this purely human and worldly order.

6. Resolved, That the so-called minor secret orders, of whatever name, partake more or less of the nature and spirit of the major, and are too often used as feeders thereto; they are liable to the same objections, and should be subjected to the same antagonism from every American citizen.

7. WHEREAS, All oath-bound secret orders, which are sanctioned by the government, are chartered conspiracies against that government and are certain to destroy the liberties and deny the civil rights of its citizens; therefore

Resolved, That it is the duty of every Christian patriot and true American citizen to use all the political influence in his power to abolish such institutions from our country.

Wednesday noon members of the Conference representing different denominations, met separately for consultation. The following organized under the plan of work adopted:

Free Methodist—president, Rev. F. D. Brooke, Aurora, Ill.; secretary, Rev. W. P. Ferries, 108 Franklin St., Chicago; treasurer, Rev. J. W. Kelsey, Evanston, Illinois.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 30, 1890.

At the request of the united temperance organizations here, all of the pastors of the evangelical churches of this city delivered sermons, on last Sabbath night, in support of the temperance movement. Such concerted action gives a new enthusiasm to the work, and it was intended to follow up the impetus given the cause by these sermons by a general movement here all along the temperance line.

A case of great importance to liquor dealers and to prohibitionists has just been decided by the United States Supreme Court, and although the decision was against the latter, it is the painful duty of your correspondent to report the facts. The case was brought here on appeal from the Supreme Court of Iowa, and this Court reversed the decision of the State Court. The opinion of this Court is, that that section of the Iowa law which provides for the seizure of liquor brought into the State in original packages, is unconstitutional. Such laws, the Court holds, are in interference with inter-State commerce. In delivering the opinion, the Chief Justice said the sale of liquor might be properly regulated or prohibited by the action of the proper State authorities, after it had found its way into the State, but that there could be no legal interference with it while in transit, unless there should be Congressional action in that direction. There were three dissenting Associate Justices, namely, Gray, Harlan and Brewer, the latter being the most recently appointed, and, I believe, the only thorough temperance man on the Supreme Bench.

It is feared, among temperance people, that this decision will act as an entering wedge in rendering the enforcement of the other laws connected with the Iowa prohibition system more difficult in the future. So long as it is legal to carry liquor into the State in original packages, it will not be difficult to find some practical way of transferring the contents of the packages to the stomachs of those Hawkeyes who want it.

Congress is occupied, this week, with the consideration of a great many miscellaneous measures. Some of them are land grant forfeitures, the silver bill, the bill for the admission of Idaho and Wyoming, appropriation bills, pensions, the customs administrative bill, and District of Columbia matters.

We are assured now of peace on one half of the earth. On Sabbath day representatives of ten of the seventeen nations participating in the international American conference signed the agreement drawn up by the conference for the settlement by arbitration of all differences and disputes between them. This was the crowning act in the conference, as it was the principal business for which the conference was called. One of the interesting features in connection with the signing of the treaty, was the evident appreciation by the signers of the fact that the occasion was one which will be historically great. Some of them provided themselves with new gold pens and holders for signing, and afterward sent them, as souvenirs, with their documents, to their respective governments.

Last Sabbath was called "University Sunday" in the calendar of the Methodist churches of this city, and was observed with great enthusiasm. It was dedicated to the presentation of the cause of the proposed university. In each pew of each church was found a printed circular, saying: "We have raised $35,000 on the purchase of the ground. We have $65,000 yet to raise. Our people in this city can supply this balance. It will require great sacrifice, but trust in God, and remember the money put in Christian education is always a good investment." The churches all responded by satisfactorily liberal subscriptions. And the proposed institution seems to be meeting with liberal encouragement outside of the denominations. It is promised that its relations to the Methodist Church shall prove no bar to the breadth and completeness of it as a national university.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The transfigured Christ. Vs. 28-31. Doubtless the chief object of this scene was to strengthen the faith of the disciples—these three on whose confidence in him he seemed especially to lean—during the dark hours of his coming crucifixion and entombment. Grace is given to us sufficient for our needs. The three who were chosen to be eye-witnesses of his transfiguration glory were also the ones chosen to be with him in Gethsemane. So when we pray for peculiar spiritual blessings we must remember that an unusual experience of blessing is often sent to prepare us for some peculiar trial, and consider whether we are ready to drink of our Redeemer's cup and be baptized with his baptism. Our Saviour in taking upon himself our nature must have also in a measure bound himself by the same spiritual conditions. If he desired some convincing sign by which to stay the faith of his disciples in the dark days before them, he had to "pray the Father" for it. So the greater the blessings we desire the more earnestly we must pray for them, for prayer is the God-appointed channel through which they are to come. If our Redeemer had to pray for what he desired, much more we. What he wanted his disciples to have is what he wants for us—the gift of spiritual insight; of seeing things in their divine relationship, undistorted by the earthly, the seeming, the transient. This is the gift that makes the great spiritual leaders—men who see beyond this age—men who are willing to take the revilings of the mob, and suffer poverty and persecution for a righteous cause; who let the shadow go that they may grasp the eternal substance. It is noticeable that the two men who "appeared in glory with him" were not only the two most heroic characters of Scripture but the most highly dowered with that keen-sighted faith which lies at the root of all true heroism. One turned his back on all the honors of the most splendid royal court in the world; the very name of the other has been a synonym ever since for a brave and uncompromising reformer. It was fitting that these two should be the ones selected to talk with Jesus of his coming death, and no doubt to strengthen him for its endurance with thoughts of "the glory set before him."

2. Peter's proposal. Vs. 33-36. Peter "wist not what he said." Probably his thought was twofold: to keep these celestial visitants on the earth, and thereby bring in at once the coming kingdom, of which the place where they stood should be the capital, the new Mount Zion. The world is full of theories, social and political, which their advocates claim will do away with poverty and ignorance, and make earth a second heaven. But they have always been found impractical in their workings. So long as sin remains and holds sway there will be no perfection in human governments. But to us the voice still speaks out of the cloud: "This is my beloved Son; hear ye him,"—not Moses or Elias, but Christ. All the socialist and nationalist theories of our day, though they have their place in working out humanity's problems, will be worse than nothing if we turn away from the great Teacher. "And when the voice was past Jesus was found alone." Neither saints nor angels can satisfy the soul, or teach it what it wants to know—none but Jesus. The most celestial experiences are only inspirations to help us live more nobly and wisely; they would have no value if they were not transitory. On earth the Bethels where we must not, may not linger; but above, the Mount Zion which cannot be moved.

The diamond fallen into the dirt is not the less precious, and the dust raised by high winds to heaven is not the less vile.—Persian Proverb.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

SEPARATION.

A LUTHERAN PASTOR SHOWS HOW IT CAN BE DONE QUIETLY, HARMONIOUSLY AND SUCCESSFULLY.

An unusual church notice was handed to the editor of the Daily Independent, of Massillon, O., on the 26th ult. It presented, in unmistakable terms, the position of the St. Paul's Lutheran church, of that city, on the issue between Christianity and the lodge, and read as follows:

"As Christians, infidels and Jews believe in a Supreme Being, but do not all believe in Christ; and as all these three classes in nearly all secret societies must confess their faith in a Supreme Being, then swear to Him and pray to Him; therefore it stands to reason that the God of these orders is not the Christian's God, the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, and because God commands all Christians to come out of such organizations (2 Cor. 5: 14-18); therefore St. Paul's Lutheran church unanimously decided that none of her members dare continue in this sin of idolatry."

The passage from the Scriptures referred to in the notice reads as follows:

"Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

The editor of the Independent, desiring to know the reasons for this action of the church, and, perhaps, preferring that the responsibility of the publication should seem to rest on other shoulders than his own in a town so sadly given over to the lodge as Massillon, sent a reporter to learn more exactly the views of Rev. S. P. Long, the eloquent young pastor of St. Paul's church. The latter answered frankly, like a Christian who does not fear to give a reason for his hope. He said, substantially:

"St. Paul's Lutheran church, as you possibly know, was an independent organization up to my arrival here, but now affiliated with the Joint Synod of Ohio. I find that the church as organized took substantially this same stand, and that we have but reiterated now a principle which has not been strictly enforced. The Joint Synod is almost a unit in support of the same position. I do not hesitate in saying that all my sympathies are in accord with what I believe are the demands of my Christianity. The action of the congregation which is mentioned in the church notice sent you, was quietly taken on Sunday, April 13, at a called meeting, after service, with the unanimous result stated. The adoption of the resolution was consequent upon a recent sermon of mine on this line of thought. You understand it is wholly a question of principle and thus far there have been no unpleasant personal results."

"At the time of the church meeting we had eleven members that I know of who belonged to secret orders. We have 320 recorded communicants. Ten of the eleven who fully concur with our determination have severed their society connections. I understand that the Odd-fellows, Knights of Pythias, National Union, and Home Circle, have been affected. We have one member who is yet undecided, but is in a position in which he must conclude to retire from us or his society. How do we propose to enforce the resolution? Well, we'll not be arbitrary in our procedure. We desire to convince our members if any there yet should be who retain the forbidden relation, that we are right. So long as a member maintains a conscientious doubt, he may remain in the church. But in case of a positive disagreement with us, we should expel such a member. I might add that twelve communicants who were formerly members in secret orders, are leading this movement with me."

—The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South meets in convention in St. Louis, May 10. The communicants of this great division of American Methodism numbers about 1,800,000 souls, against 3,000,000 or more in the Northern division. The split between the two happened in 1844 and 1845, when at the General Conference in New York in 1844 the Northern and Eastern delegates suspended from his Episcopal functions, Bishop James O. Andrews, of Georgia, who had married a lady owning by inheritance a number of slaves. The delegates of the slave-holding States withdrew from the general organization and began their existence as the Methodist Episcopal Church South at a convention in Louisville in 1845. The church had rough sailing during the war.

—“Christianity has made greater progress,” writes Mr. Wishard in the Young Men's Era, “in southern India than anywhere else in the empire. In 1881 there was in India a Protestant Christian population of 417,372, of whom 299,742 were residents of Madras. By Christian population I mean all who have abandoned Hinduism, including the members of families of communicants, and the villages whose inhabitants have announced their abandonment of Hinduism and their desire for Christian instruction. The whole number of actual communicants in India in 1881 was 113,325, of whom the proportion in Madras exceeded 100,000, while that of Bengal could not have been more than 25,000, and that of Bombay presidency not over 3,000.”

—Rev. Geo. C. Needham, after three weeks of labor at Macon, Ga., has commenced a series of union meetings at Augusta, Ga. He also addresses the Young Men's Christian Association convention between his services on Sunday. Several men professed conversion—one an old gentleman over sixty years of age. After closing his work at Augusta, Mr. Needham will return to his home in Manchester, Mass.

—A revival of religion has been in progress for some weeks in Wolfboro, N. H.; 141 conversions are reported. Many conversions are reported as taking place in all parts of the country; 150 are reported at Wellsville, O.; 200 at Lancaster, S. C.; 100 at Berea, O.; 100 at Hyde Park, Mass.; 250 at Chattanooga, Tenn.; 200 at Jacksonville, Fla.; 500 at Wabash, Ind.; 130 at Jacksonville, Ill.; 1,000 in New Brunswick, N. J.; 300 in New York city; 100 at Bement, Ill.; 100 at Osage, Iowa; 150 at Cortland, N. Y. Evangelist R. Kelso Carter reports 700 converts in two months in his fields of labor. About 1,300 converts are reported to have been secured at Decatur, Ill., in revival services, conducted for sixteen days by Rev. B. Fay Mills, of New Jersey, and G. M. Greenwood, a Boston vocalist.

—Of the 1,500 Chinamen in Chicago, several hundreds regularly attend Sunday-school, and about fifty have made profession of the Christian religion. It is intended to have a Chinamen for superintendent, and Mr. Smithson is in correspondence with Lee Hain, an exceptionally bright and intelligent Chinaman, who has just completed a two years' course at Mr. Moody's school at Northfield, Mass.

—The Rocky Mountain Christian Advocate says: While the Dakota Indians were savages it cost the government $1,848,000 to take care of them seven years. The cost after their conversion for the same length of time was $120,000, a difference of $1,728,000 in favor of Christianity.

—Rev. S. H. Anderson (Congregational) said the Bible is unknown in France, save amongst the 700,000 Protestants who spread the knowledge of God's Word to others, but so slowly that in the majority of booksellers' shops not a Bible or a Testament can be found, nor can they tell you where the Bible can be obtained. The missionaries spread the Word of God by distributing gratis Gospel portions and selling the Bible in families visited.

OBITUARY.

Died in Chicago, April 4th., Mrs. CHLOE ANN ASHLEY, aged 61 years.

The subject of this sketch was born in Fredonia, N. Y., April 21, 1829. Her maiden name was Thompson. Her parents came to Wisconsin when she was a youth of fifteen, and settled on Spring Prairie. Here she spent some time in teaching. She early embraced the Saviour, whose faithful servant she remained till death. At the age of nineteen she was married to John Bacon, son of Deacon John Bacon of Spring Prairie, who succeeded his father in the office of deacon. She was the mother of seven children. Three of them only survive her, the two eldest being practicing physicians in this city. In 1886 she was left a widow, with three small children, for whom, with true motherly instinct, she lived, labored, and sacrificed to direct and educate in the way of the Lord. In 1870 she was married to John Ashley, by whom she had one child, now a lovely girl of nineteen. Her husband dying some four years since, she came to Chicago to live with her children, who had the privilege of administering to her every want in her declining health, and to close her eyes in death.

Her remains were taken to Spring Prairie for interment and laid to rest beside her kindred dust. The funeral was attended by a large concourse of friends on the Sabbath, April 6th., Elder E. L. Harris preaching the sermon from 2 Cor. 5:1.

Sister Ashley was a true specimen of Christian womanhood. She was an active worker in the Master's vineyard, ever ready to put her hand to the work of moral and Christian reform, never waiting for any movement to become popular before she espoused it. Possessing great independence of mind and character, nothing would swerve her from her convictions of right. Hence, in her the temperance cause, anti-slavery, anti-sworn secrecy and the missionary enterprise found a heart-and-hand sympathy. Truly the world needs such and can ill afford to lose them. E. L. HARRIS.

She reckons well who does her housecleaning and washing (or has her servants do this work) with PYLE'S PEARLINE.

Why? Because Pearline makes the largest saving all around; saves half the time; half the labor—more than half the wear. Do you know you don't have to rub the clothes when washed with Pearline? This saves the woman and makes the clothes last longer (besides, they look better). What can be harder on woman's health than bobbing up and down over a washboard? What can be harder on the clothes—anything harder don't exist.

Millions of women know these facts well; it takes many millions of packages of PEARLINE to supply their demands for it. You have only to prove these facts and you'll demand it. The best way is—try it. Costs little and every grocer has it.

Beware

Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers are offering imitations which they claim to be Pearline, or “the same as Pearline.” IT'S FALSE—they are not. JAMES PYLE, New York.

The object of this volume is to give to that great army who are fast hastening toward the “great beyond” some practical hints and helps as to the best way to make the most of the remainder of that now is, and to give comfort and help life that is to come.

“It is a tribute to the Christianity that honors one gray head and refuses to consider the oldish man burden or an obstacle. The book will aid and comfort every reader.”—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

“The selections are very precious. Springing from such numerous and pure fountains, they can but afford a refreshing and healthful draught for every aged traveller to the great beyond.”—Witness.

HOME AND HEALTH.

REMEDY FOR SLEEPLESSNESS.—Sleeplessness is often aggravated by the very effort to get sleep. Sound, natural sleep is spontaneous, the result of a suspension of effort, and is not to be secured by any amount of effort. A writer well says:

"If the endeavor to sleep is made as soon as it commences, expectancy begins, and paradoxical as it may seem, the consciousness is actually kept awake to watch for sleep! This watchfulness, arising out of the eagerness of the desire for sleep and the intensity of the effort made to woo it, throws the mind into a state of tense anticipation incompatible with somnolence. Then comes the period of restless and irritated disappointment, in which the mind is so vexed, the brain so excited, and the organism as a whole, thrown into such a state of irritability, that the best thing to do is to rise and take a bath, or wash from head to feet.—Good Health."

HOW TO DRINK MILK.—Some complain that they cannot drink milk without being "distressed by it." The most common reason why milk is not well borne is due to the fact that people drink it too quickly. If a glass of it is swallowed hastily, it enters into the stomach and then forms one solid, curdled mass, difficult of digestion. If on the other hand, the same quantity is sipped, and three minutes at least are occupied in drinking it, then on reaching the stomach it is so divided that when coagulated, as it must be by the gastric juice while digestion is going on, instead of being in one hard, condensed mass, upon the outside of which only the digestive fluids can act, it is more in the form of a sponge, and in and out of the entire bulk the gastric juice can play freely and perform its functions.—American Analyst.

CONVULSIONS IN CHILDREN.—When a child has a convulsion, or what is commonly called "a fit," attention should be given to the urinary secretion at once. If there is suppression of urine, the child should be put into a warm bath, and made to sweat as speedily as possible. In many cases in which children die from a succession of convulsions, the real cause of death is suppression of urine (a fact which is probably not so generally known as it should be), so that the child really dies of poisoning through the retention of the urinary secretion. When a child is subject to attacks of this character, care should be taken to dress it warmly in flannels, so as to keep up a degree of perspiration most of the time, and hot baths should be administered frequently.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Fresh cold water is a powerful absorbent of gases. A bowl of water placed under the bed of the sick room and frequently changed is among the valuable aids in purifying the air. The room in which the London aldermen sit, is purified by open vessels of water placed in different parts of the room. It can be easily inferred from this that water standing for any length of time in a close room is unfit for drinking. Experiments of this kind are not costly. It has frequently been observed that restless and troubled sleep has been corrected easily by placing an open vessel of water near the head of the bed.

Let a sick person sleep; unless you want to murder them, never wake them to give them medicine.

Rheumatism is caused by an acid in the blood; therefore, external treatment affords no permanent relief. To eliminate the poison and make a thorough cure of the disease, nothing else is so efficient as Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Give it a trial. Price $1. Worth $5 a bottle.

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED.

MABEL'S GRANDMA.

"The world is even as we take it,
And life, dear child, is what we make it."

This is sense, even if it is not Shakespearean. Indeed, it is the opening stanza of an anonymous poem. It was the sentiment of an old lady to her grandchild Mabel. And many a Mabel has found it to be true, and she has made her life a very happy one because she has taken care of her health. She keeps on hand a supply of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, and so is not troubled with those wasting diseases, weaknesses, "dragging-down" sensations and functional irregularities that so many women endure. It is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrappers, and faithfully carried out for many years.

"Favorite Prescription" is a legitimate medicine, not a beverage. Contains no alcohol to inebriate; no syrup or sugar to derange digestion. As peculiar in its remedial results as in its composition.

As a powerful, invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the whole system, and to the womb and its appendages in particular. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon; being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic, or strength-giver.

As a soothing and strengthening nerve, "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and other distressing, nervous symptoms, commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

FARM NOTES.

AN INTERESTING VEGETABLE GARDEN.

A vegetable garden may be made to look quite pretty and inviting by simply running paths through it, and in planting and sowing the seed along the same for a border or edging. Most vegetable gardens are a labyrinth, a maze, a tangle; there is no way of getting around or through them; one can go so far and no farther, can view the landscape o'er from a point or two, can see that there is a forest of corn, a patch of potatoes, a few sprigs of lettuce, and generally plenty of weeds. There seems to be so little ground to spare in the country, every inch seems to be of so much consequence that none can be wasted in paths. But I think a path, instead of being a waste, is a great advantage, for the sun gets a chance to warm the ground, and makes the vegetables much sweeter and earlier.

Now a vegetable garden can be made as interesting and as beautiful as a flower garden, and I must say that I enjoy mine as much as I do my flowers. I have it laid out with straight paths, the main paths being five feet wide, and are bordered with salsify and parsnips; the narrower paths between the beds are eighteen inches wide, and can be bordered with fern-leaved parsley; it makes a beautiful edging, and grows handsomer as the season advances.

Everything should be planted in straight rows; mine run east and west, as that offers less resistance to the west wind, and everything looks much neater, the wind not having a chance to confuse things.

A garden the size of mine, eighty feet wide by one hundred and fifty feet long, furnishes much work, but "knowing how is half doing it," holds true. Never let the weeds get ahead. The scuffle hoe is the most important implement, and must be kept in constant use. If the weeds are cut down when they are just above the ground, it is comparatively little work to have the garden look neat and clean, and a woman can accomplish much, as I can testify.—E. W. L. in Vick's Magazine for October.

SPRAYING FRUIT TREES.—Professor Lintner, State Entomologist of New York, avers that the benefits resulting from proper spraying are marked and surprising. It has given 75 to 90 per cent of fruit free from the attack of the apple worm of the codlin moth. The professor adds that with a knowledge of what spraying can accomplish, he has not hesitated to assert and emphasize at our Farmers' Institutes that a force-pump should as uniformly have a place upon every farm as a plow. It has become an indispensable instrument.

GRAPE GROWING IN TOWNS.—A Philadelphian avers that people in towns and cities might have grapes with but little trouble if they would just plant a vine or two. No matter if the surroundings are paved with brick, the vines may be carried to the second or third story and trained in front of a balcony, where grapes enough for a family might be grown. He saw in Philadelphia a vine covering a space 20 by 12 feet, at least 30 feet from the ground on the west side of the house. It shaded a balcony and the vine was one mass of purple with Isabella grapes quite free from rot. As fine Catawbas as he ever ate grew 60 feet from the ground, the vine being on a cherry tree.

POINTS FOR APPLE GROWERS.—In an essay read before the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, Mr. O. B. Hodmen observes that when apple trees are set in land too rocky or steep to cultivate they should be dug around and the land enriched to give a good start. In such land straight rows are, from the nature of the ground, impracticable, but the trees can be set where there are spots of deep soil among the rock. No facts are better established than that apples to bear good fruit should not be crowded, and in planting the space should be estimated for the trees at maturity instead of the small tree in hand.

The True Way To Reach Boils

TO CURE Eczema, Pimples, and Eruptive Diseases of all kinds is to purify the blood with Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Until the blood is cleansed, there can be no permanent relief from these troubles.

"Four years ago I was severely afflicted with salt-rheum, the itching being so incessant as to seriously interfere with sleep. Painful scrofulous sores appeared on my neck and the upper part of my arms, and from there the humor went to my eyes. My appetite being poor, my health rapidly failed. I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and before I had finished ten bottles I regained my appetite, improved greatly in strength, and was permanently cured of the salt-rheum and scrofula. I consider that what I spent for this medicine was well invested. The Sarsaparilla has indeed done me incalculable good."—Mrs. Caroline A. Garland, Deerfield, N. H., (formerly of Lowell, Mass.).

"My little niece was afflicted with a severe cutaneous disease, which broke out at intervals and resisted treatment. At last, we tried Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This acted like magic. She is now entirely cured and has been in perfect health for several months."—Margaret Peyston, Clarendon, Ark.

"For a long time I was afflicted with salt-rheum, and could find nothing to relieve me. A friend recommended

And Carbuncles, take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. No other medicine produces such immediate and salutary results.

C. K. Murray, of Charlottesville, Va., was almost literally covered with boils and carbuncles. These all disappeared as the result of using only three bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This proves that the true way to reach these troubles is through the blood. "It is now over six years," writes Mr. Murray, "since I took Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and I have not had a pimple, nor boil, nor a sign of one in all that time."

"Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore. Another effect of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I had a number of carbuncles on my neck and back, with swellings in my armpits, and was tormented with pain almost beyond endurance. All means of relief to which I resorted failed until I began to take Ayer's Sar-

PAGAN COUNTERFEITS IN THE Christian Church.

A pamphlet of 52 pages, by Chas. A. S. Temple.

The following from Rev. H. H. Hinman shows his estimate of its contents:

"I have read with great interest 'Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church' by Chas. A. S. Temple. I regard the subject discussed as important, and its presentation both able and timely. There is a most manifest drift in all our Protestant denominations towards unauthorized ritualism and the substitution of human inventions in place of the simplicity of the Gospel, as given by Christ and his apostles. In calling attention to this tidal wave of formalism, the author has conferred a lasting benefit on the church as of Protestantism."

REMARKABLE OFFER!

Nearly everyone is familiar with the name, but it has been estimated that only one in every two hundred and eighty persons in the United States is fortunate enough to have access to the valuable information contained within the covers of the grandest work ever written by mortal man.

Webster's UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY.

That this is an unfortunate state of affairs will be admitted by all, and it is due to the fact that no one save the rich could afford them.

The Dictionary is a necessity in every home, school and business house. It fills a vacancy and furnishes knowledge which no one hundred volumes of the choicest books could supply, and all young or old, educated or ignorant, rich or poor should have it within reach and refer to its contents every day in the year.

The Loomis reprint contains all the matter as compiled and arranged by our esteemed and honored author and statesman,

NOAH WEBSTER.

About forty years of his life was devoted to this great work, and when we consider the fact that this book contains about 100,000 words with their correct spelling, derivation and definition we will appreciate that these years must have been well spent.

Some idea of the magnitude of this book may be gained from the fact that it contains over 440 cubic inches of paper and has about 300,000 square inches of printed surface. The printing is very clear, plain and distinct, the paper firm and durable, being manufactured especially for this volume, the boards are extra heavy and covered with an excellent quality of leather and thoroughly laced by hand to the book proper.

In addition to the 100,000 words it contains an excellent portrait of the author, together with his biography and a valuable table of 12,000 synonymous words.

By special arrangement with the publishers, we are permitted to furnish this valuable volume: 1st. To any subscriber to our paper; 2nd. To any renewal subscription; and 3rd. To any person who has paid a full year's subscription within the past six months, on receipt of $1.50 for the paper one year, and two dollars and seventy-five cents to cover express charges, packing, etc., of the Dictionary.

Not a plantation is left, not a levee, while hundreds of families are homeless. Providence, Rhode Island, must be put upon the roll of dishonored cities which have cast out the Bible from the American common school. Cincinnati and Chicago head the gloomy list. By the act they deny and defy the God of heaven, inflict an injury on their children which they are most unlikely to repair, invite the evil spirits of anarchy, infidelity and misrule, and begin with a high hand to overturn the foundations of American free institutions.

Joseph Cook in his great speech in the April Conference distinguished between Romanism as a religion and a polity. The following is a clear-cut and comprehensive view of the latter from the Signs of the Times: "The Roman Catholic church is the only institution which combines politics with its teaching of morality. It can't help being a political religion. It has been carried along through centuries in such a plan. The religion is the side show. The papacy has always had for its aim the subjection of all rulers and governments to its power."

A college fraternity revival was experienced at Michigan University last week. One student was abducted and carried from Ann Arbor to Milan, sixteen miles, while their dress suits were stolen from others, amid mutual crimination and muttered threats of revenge. If by any mischance these student secret societies should be of any benefit to any of their members, it is most certain that such vicious sprees as this Ann Arbor affair, that at Rutgers College lately reported, that at Madison, Wisconsin, last year, the murder of Leggett at Ithaca, and scores of similar cases utterly overcast and annihilate such benefit. It is no wonder such men as Dr. Goodwin, Gov. Bross, Gen. Phelps, James A. Garfield, Senator Evarts and hundreds of equal eminence and piety enlist themselves against these college pests.

From Indianapolis we learn that the secret order of the Railway Conductors' Association is in trouble. Its members have lately seen, with consternation and anger, the railways discharging many of their number, which their secret manipulations seem powerless to prevent. It comes out that nearly all the men discharged were Masons of the thirty-second degree, Sovereign Princes of the Royal Secret, and it is claimed that their discharge was brought about by a fellow Mason of the same degree who traveled over all the roads and succeeded in getting transportation at lower rates by giving the Masonic sign of distress. The distressed brother Mason, whose grip was so good for transportation, was a detective, and reported the "good Masons" at headquarters. The discharged men may blame the detective, or the Masonic grips which gave him his power, whichever they please.

Last Sabbath evening at Pittsburgh a Romanist organization was begun which is proposed to extend over the country. It is named the American Federation of Catholic Societies, and its object is a kind of trust, a consolidation of all Romanist organizations. It aims to unite and promote the fellowship of Catholic laymen, and maintain the welfare of Catholic communities "as regards either the advancement of general brotherhood or the vindication of common manhood against any and all ignoble encroachments." That means a political combination against compulsory school laws. This organization will be a plaything for the Jesuits and the papal hierarchy. A more complete consolidation of Roman Catholic interests than they already form we cannot easily imagine; but it will placate the "laymen" to have something they may call their own of the same sort. Thus men are being bound in bundles for the last day.

The decision of the Supreme Court on "original packages," is viewed by Gen. Fisk with his usual hopeful temper. He thinks that the "original" package is the box, case or cask, and the officials have only to be alert to discover when this is opened for distribution, to become mingled with the common mass of property in the State. It becomes that moment subject to State law and to confiscation. Senator James F. Wilson of Iowa is recognized as one of the ablest lawyers of the State. He says of the decision: "The practical effect of the decision does not spend its entire force on laws of States prohibiting the manufacture and sale, within their limits, of intoxicating liquors, but it applies with equal effect to those States which, without resorting to such prohibition, have nevertheless applied the regulative features of a license system. Indeed, it covers the entire field of effort to suppress or regulate the traffic in intoxicating liquors, whether by prohibition, local option, high license, or any other kind of license." It is found also that the laws of several States prohibiting or limiting the sale of oleomargarine, are equally affected with those respecting intoxicants. On the whole, we believe it best to take a cheerful view of the case, although the decision be not founded in the primary ideas of justice, as we understand them. It must of necessity compel all sincere men to take a stand against the liquor power in national as well as local elections.

George Kennan has in the last Century one of the most remarkable of his articles exposing the tyranny of the Russian government. There have been few exhibitions in history of despotisms so ferocious and at the same time so puerile. Alexander III. has been exasperated, it is true. His father had set free twenty million serfs without a war or a long anti-slavery agitation; and he had just written an order for the assembling of a constitutional convention when the nihilist secret assassins killed him with a glass bomb. A few weeks since there was a rift in the gloomy cloud of oppression that hangs over Russia. The Czar, it was said, had visited the political prison at St. Petersburg, had talked freely with its inmates and ordered the release of many. An intrepid woman, who had been condemned for writing him a daring letter on the condition of his empire, he had forgiven. The bird of hope began to sing in a million hearts for Russia. But it is now said that the brave Madame Tschebrikova was not released but transported with peculiar hardship. America is grateful to Russia for the noble sympathy of the Czar during a dark hour of our war. We may repay that kindness, not by indifference to the torn and suffering condition of that empire, but by a kind and Christian protest which shall help Alexander to see more clearly his duty as the head of a great nation in the light of the New Testament civilization. Petitions are being circulated by the W. C. T. U. to this effect and should be signed by every American.

Prof. Moorehead's lectures at the Moody Bible Institute in this city are growing in interest, and are listened to by increasing audiences. Friday morning the subject was "Justification," and the students were electrified by the clear teachings concerning God as a dispenser of justice. "There is in our day," said Prof. Moorehead, "a tendency to suppress the fact of God's justice. As a consequence there is a flagrant disregard of God's laws, even among members of the churches. Where God's true character as a God of justice is hidden, the tendency of the church is downward in morals. That is the condition of the churches to-day. Never was there so great need of proclaiming a full Gospel as to-day." A voice from the audience was heard, "God bless you, you are telling the truth." Prof. Moorehead replied, "May God not only bless one of us, but all of us, and enable us to stand for the complete truth."

CRUSADER'S BATTLE-SONG.

BY VICTORIA ALEXANDRA BUCK.

DEDICATED TO THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

Fling out the white banner of heaven again,
Let the crusader's war-cry sound far o'er the main!
For He who for aye is so strong in His might,
Comes down in His glory to join in the fight!
Like the shout from the hosts of brave Gideon that rose,
The sword of the Lord it shall be to our foes!

There's a power that can thrill from the days that are past,
When Luther's grand anthems rose high on the blast;
When the bugle call rang through the forests of pine,
And the martyr's blood crimsoned the laurel and vine;
Then all to the rescue! o'er mountain and main,
Fling out the white banner of heaven again!

THE FOE BEFORE US.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

The G. A. R. held their annual reunion in this city this week. The old veterans made an imposing display. It is well enough for them to gather and recall their experiences in war times. But the great moral conflict that is now upon us is of unspeakably more importance. It is many sided. The labor conflict is attracting attention. Strikes are multiplying at an alarming rate. There is no hope of relief until employer and employe are ready to recognize each other's rights and obligations. Here is a remedy:

"To thine own self be true;
And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man."

But here is the perfect rule: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you; do ye even so to them." St. Bernard has truthfully said: "Nothing can work me damage except myself; the harm that I sustain I carry about with me, and never am a real sufferer but by my own fault."

Romanism is becoming more aggressive. The White Pope—the Roman Catholic church—is strong; but the Black Pope—Jesuitry—is a lurking foe. "The Pope interferes, either openly or by secret agencies, in the internal political movement of all civilized countries." They say: "When Protestants are in the majority we tolerate freedom of conscience, because that is their belief. But when Catholics are in the majority we suppress it, because that is our belief." The Pope, with his Jesuitical organization, controlling 225,000,000 souls, is an alarming spectacle.

The Sabbath contest is advancing. This language is used in "John Swinton's Paper:" "Is there any law in New Jersey in defense of Sabbath? If so, why is it not enforced against the railroad corporations? When laboring men violate any law of the money power, it is anarchy, and the law-breakers are imprisoned or hanged. But when the money power violates all laws, both human and divine, there is neither penalty nor remedy." A Chicago paper, the Knights of Labor, says: "From thirty to forty thousand employes in Chicago alone are compelled to work for seven days in each week. How shall their shackles be unloosed and the slaves set free? Men and women have been discussing this question as individuals for many months. It is now time to discuss it as a body politic. Is it not time to cry halt? Are the people, by their apathy, avarice, and selfishness, willing to blight the prospects of the working class of America by condemning them to a slavery that knows no day of rest?"

The temperance conflict is becoming a battle between Christ and Satan. Dr. McArthur has truthfully said: "The Spirit of God's book and the Gospel of God's Son destroyed the monster, slavery, in the early history of the church, under the most despotic governments. The same spirit and Gospel struck the chains from four millions of slaves in our own land. Not Sherman, not Grant, not Lincoln, destroyed slavery, except as they were God's instruments in accomplishing his great purposes. The Gospel of the Son of God made the Emancipation Proclamation possible. Back of the hand that wrote it, was a hand bearing the print of a nail in its palm—a hand that once was nailed to the cross. That Gospel says, with a profound meaning, whether a man be black or white, red or yellow, rich or poor, bond or free, 'A man's a man for a' that.' That same Gospel will strike down the monster, alcohol. He is a worse tyrant than slavery; he enslaves body and soul, and destroys both in a drunkard's hell. The great principles of God's book, the divine maxims for human conduct, teach us how to regard the drunkard and how to abstain for the sake of our own safety, for the sake of our example, which might hurt the weak, and for the sake of our divine Lord's glory, which this curse does so much to tarnish."

The conflict with secret oath-bound societies deepens. They are the dry-rot on the political body, that will be fatal to the national life if suffered much longer. They are the giant among the Philistines, Goliath of Gath, that must be smitten by our New Testament David before the enemy can be driven from the field. The forces of evil are upon us. We must be "up and at them."

"Rise, rise, and for the fight
Of onward, upward Christian life
In earnest faith prepare."

Cincinnati, Ohio.

When a Christian lodgeman discovers what the lodge is (an institution of organized selfishness, a religion with Christ shut out by law) he withdraws from it as he would from fire. The wonder is that anyone who values his right of private judgment will allow himself to go in past oaths or obligations to keep secret—he knows not what. —The Aurora, Knoxville, Tenn.

A TEST OF COURAGE.—One of the severest tests of courage is to carry on one's life quietly and faithfully under the cloud of a great uncertainty—something which makes it uncertain in what direction one's activity is hereafter to be put forth. This is not an uncommon experience, but, although it happens to many, it is never on that account the easier to bear. Living by faith has always involved a struggle even for the most heroic souls; most of us learn it by the most painful processes. Nevertheless, if we are to live with any strength and peace, learn it we must, sooner or later. If one broods over an uncertainty, strength is paralyzed and work half done. The man who worries loses the power which comes from concentration and a calm putting forth of his whole force. There is nothing to be gained by this brooding; there is everything to be lost. A strong life is one which commands itself and does not give up the rudder to every wind of circumstance. When the time of uncertainty comes to a strong man, he is not deflected from the thing in hand; if possible, he puts more strength and skill into it; not defying fortune but accepting Providence by that calm doing of one's work which goes with the consciousness that the honest laborer is worthy of his hire, and that work well done to-day means the opportunity of more work to-morrow. Take your life bravely and strongly; if uncertainties come into it, meet them with quiet courage and good cheer. Above all keep heart and hand in your work, and trust the future to that Divine Providence which has ordered the falling of every sparrow.—Christian Union.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT AND SECRET SOCIETIES

ADDRESS OF REV. B. T. ROBERTS, EDITOR "EARNEST CHRISTIAN" AND "FREE METHODIST."

I hardly know why the most important subject on the program was assigned to me this afternoon, unless it is because I am about the only one who has called attention to the subject, from time to time. I wish I might be able to awaken such an interest in it that abler ones would take hold of it and call attention to the greatness of the subject on which I am to speak this afternoon.

In prophetic language, the sun stands as a symbol of the civil power. It is a fitting symbol. The sun knows no partiality; it shines alike for all. It sends out its light and its heat equally for the peasant and for the prince. It has no broader, purer rays for the palace than for the cottage. However humble the plant, the sun gives to the dewdrop on every leaf the beauty of the pearl. It is no wonder that the sun was the first object of idol worship. Job, who lived before the days of Moses, says: "If I behold the sun when it shines, or the moon, walking in brightness, and my heart hath been secretly enticed, or my mouth hath kissed my hand, that were an iniquity to be punished by the judge, for I should have denied the God that is above."

Civil government, like the sun, should be impartial,—it should have no favorites. It should give the same protection to the lowest as to the highest. It should mete out justice equally to all. It should extend the favor that it gives to one citizen, to all citizens. In every department of our government should be set forth the equality of mankind. The manhood of man should be vindicated in every act of civil administration. We should say to the dignitaries of foreign countries that come to make a home with us, "Forget you now your state and lofty birth; not titles, here, but works must prove your worth." God, by direct inspiration, founded one form of civil government. It had no aristocracy, hereditary or monetary. Under its operation there were no paupers, and there were no millionaires. We should do well to study its provisions. It treated all men as equal. It made no provision for one class that it did not make alike for all classes. As far as possible, we should carry out that same provision.

The principles of our Declaration of Independence should be the cherished principle of every American. We hold these truths to be self-evident: That all men are created equal; that they are endowed by their Creator with inalienable rights; that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Jefferson says that, in an age of revolution and reformation, our steps are guided safely by the observance of strict and impartial justice towards all men of whatever state of persuasion, religious or political. Our civil government should be what the poet says the church is,—

"Our mother, the church, hath never a child
To honor above the rest,
But she singeth the same for mighty kings
And the veriest babe on her breast;
And the bishop goes down to his narrow bed
As the plowman's child is laid;
And alike she blesseth the dark brown serf
And the chief in his robe arrayed."

There should be no preferences, no prejudices, in our civil government. Long before the age of our revolution Montesquieu wrote that if there were no God we should still be bound to love justice; that is to say, we should strive to be like him of whom we have so grand an idea. Among the painters justice was portrayed as blind, for she knows no distinction in those who appear before her bar. She awards to each one according to his deserts, apart from all other considerations. Macauley said of Hume that he hated religion so much that he hated liberty, because it had been allied with religion, and he pleaded the cause of tyranny with the dexterity of an attorney while affecting the impartiality of a judge.

CIVIL GOVERNMENT AND THE BIBLE.

But the principles of civil government, the principles of liberty, are interwoven all through the Bible, and all through men who have been inspired by the Spirit that wrote the Bible. It should be strictly impartial. One of the provisions of this early commonwealth was, ye shall do no unrighteousness in judgment. Thou shalt not respect the person of the poor nor honor the person of the mighty, but in righteousness shalt thou judge that neighbor. But here come in secret societies, and they interfere with the equal distribution of justice. This is their real, though never their avowed, intention. What man ever joined a secret society without expecting to derive from it some advantage? Do they pay their fees and their dues in order to fare the same as the uninitiated members of civil society? The whole system is founded on human selfishness. Christ said: "The field is the world," and not an eye walled up so tight as to keep out the light. The men who in fighting the battles of life go into some dark corner, do it with the expectation of receiving some protection which otherwise would not be granted them, or of being able to sally forth with their associates and gain some victory which they could not achieve in a fair and open fight. The whole system of secret societies is based on selfishness.

But let us notice a few principles. First: Through secret societies unsuitable men are elected to office. Men are placed in positions which they have neither the intellectual nor the moral ability to fill. They are put forward by the lodge. They are placed in positions that should be occupied by better men. The most meritorious act that many of them do is to draw their salaries. We have illustrations of this on every hand. The papers of this city are complaining of their mayor. I remember at the time the canvass was going on in which he was elected, I was talking with an old resident of this city. I expressed my doubts about his election. He said: "There is no doubt about it," and then he mentioned the secret societies to which he belonged, and he said he belonged to the same society, "and," said he, "we shall be able to elect him by a large vote." The recent city treasurer of Rochester, New York, was a thirty-two degree Mason. He was a man who had never been heard of until he was put forward by the lodge, and by the aid of these votes of men who labored for him in secret, was elected to the office. He became a defaulter to the amount of sixty thousand dollars. His elevation turned his head. Because a good deal of money passed through his hands he thought he was immensely rich, and he used the money as though it were his own. When the matter came out it was so plain that even Masonry did not attempt to save him. He acknowledged his guilt, was sent to State's prison for five years, and, doubtless, will be pardoned out as soon as it is deemed expedient to do so.

In the Congressional district in which I reside is the city of Rochester, a university, many large towns, and perhaps as intelligent a population as is to be found in the United States, and yet for a quarter of a century we have not been able to elect but one first-class man to Congress from that district, and he was sent for only a single term. Secret societies for office in the nominating convention. They get them nominated and then they get them elected; and then they go on, and if there is not much to be done, why they get along and fill the office; but if there is work to be done there is a failure. When there is work that must be done they are obliged to give place to better men. The sword falls from nerveless hands. When battles are to be fought McClellan gives place to Grant, and abler men must take the place. But secret societies keep inferior men in office and the country suffers. There is great danger in that direction. Carlyle said that men of world-renown may succeed by their quackery for a day, but their race is short; but men can in a little time, under bad leaders, do mischief that will take generations to repair. France had many noble and patriotic men when she was struggling to establish free institutions. Some of them were men of very marked ability. LaFayette, Necker and Murat, and men like that, could have guided the people in safety to the establishment and operation of free institutions. It was in vain that LaFayette wrote: "If the conspirators exist they should be punished only by the sword of the law. It is necessary that the reign of the clubs should give place to the reign of law. They are disorganizing maxims to the true principle of liberty, their mad fury to the calm courage of a nation that knows its rights and defends them." LaFayette and men like him were driven into banishment, or imprisoned, or beheaded, and the Girondins and the Jacobites held sway until Paris and the leading cities of France became as a slaughter house, and the best blood of its citizens flowed like water down their streets.

We have had a trial of government by lodges, and this trial is a failure. We cannot afford to repeat the experiment. We need to have our best men placed in office. One of the provisions that God made in his Old Commonwealth was, "Thou shalt provide out of my people able men, such as fear God and hate covetousness, men of ability, men fit to be rulers over you, rulers over thousands, over hundreds, over fifties, and over tens." We ought to carry out that same principle. Carlyle says: "The finding of your able man and getting him invested with the symbol of authority so that he may be able to act according to his faculty of doing it, is the great business well or ill-performed of every social procedure whatsoever in this world." But secret societies interfere with this. They put forward men who are not fitted for the position, and the consequence is that the nation suffers. We are suffering, and we shall continue to, unless there is a reform in this particular.

THE LODGE IN COURT.

Again, in the second place, secret societies interfere with the equal distribution of justice. It is almost impossible, under their influence, to have justice fairly administered. Said Edmund Burke: "Fair trial by jury is the very soul of government, and all our legislation and administrations and parliamentary debates, and such like, go on in order to bring twelve fair and impartial men into a jury box." Wherever a secret society succeeds in getting just one man in the jury box, where the interests of that lodge to which he belongs are concerned, or any of its members, the ends of justice are defeated. We have many notable examples of this kind. One of them occurred in my own neighborhood. It is familiar to the old generation, but the present generation has well nigh lost sight of it.

William Morgan was a Mason. He was a citizen of the United States. He resided in Batavia, near where I lived. William Morgan exposed Masonry. He was taken to jail on a false charge, and was acquitted on his trial. He was kidnapped, gagged, put into a waiting coach, carried 120 miles through a thickly settled portion of the country, and confined in a United States fort on the charge of one officer, a Freemason. He was sentenced by the lodge to the Masonic penalty of death. The penalty was inflicted. I suppose that more than one hundred men were concerned in this conspiracy. The whole State of New York was agitated. The whole nation was agitated. And yet in the long ably conducted trials that followed, not a single one of the men who murdered Morgan was brought to justice. They all escaped. Secret societies showed themselves stronger than the law. We have had a recent case in this city. That Dr. Cronin was foully murdered there is not the slightest doubt. That he was murdered by authority of the lodge is equally clear. The men who executed the sentence are confined in your State's prison at Joliet. Perhaps their sentence was thus light because the conviction is deep-settled that these men who were apprehended and tried were only the tools, that abler and more wicked men lay at the bottom of this movement. When Fouquier-Tinville, who had brought hundreds to the guillotine in France in the French Revolution, himself came to be beheaded in the fluctuations of power among the different clans and different societies, he said: "I have been simply the axe of the convention. Do men punish an axe?" You have the axe with which Dr. Cronin was taken off, safely locked up in Joliet, but where are the men who wielded the axe? Where are the principals in this foul murder? Have one of them been apprehended? Is there any persistent determination expressed to bring them to justice? Is there any well-directed and earnest effort made in this direction? Is there the slightest probability that the men who plotted the death of Dr. Cronin and brought it about will be punished? Then the ends of justice are defeated. Then, in this case, secret societies show themselves stronger than the law, and they do so right along in almost every case where there is a conflict of this kind. When a conspirator against his fellow-man comes into court he regards his oath to his fellow-conspirators as more binding than the oath administered to him by the magistrate, and the consequence is that it is impossible through their influence, where they are concerned, to have justice administered.

And so it goes on, and so it will continue to go on until there is a remedy applied, until the influence of these societies is put out of the way.

Another objection to these societies is that in their conflict with the civil law they rob many of their inalienable rights. Our Declaration of Independence, as we have stated, and as you all know, secures to every man the pursuit of happiness, but never in the darkest ages of the world, under the most despotic government, has a worse tyranny been exercised than is practiced by secret societies in this free country, in these last years of the 19th century. They rob men of the right to win bread by honest labor except at their dictation. They say when men may work and when men must be idle. They prevent men from using their God-given powers as they are pleased to use them. At the close of our war, Whittier represented the freed-men as singing,

"We own a hoe, we own a plow,
We own the hands that sow;
We sell the pig, we sell the cow,
But never a child be sold."

The working man of the city cannot say that. The lodge claims to own their hands, and it says when they may work and how they may work. A winter or two since, our New York papers gave the account of a man who was arrested and brought before the bar of justice for failing to support his family. On the trial these facts came out. He said: "I am a blacksmith; I belong to the Blacksmiths' Union. I was working for $3.00 a day. The Union decreed that I must not work short of $3.50 a day. My employer was not willing to give it, and so I was compelled to go idle. I would like to work, but I cannot work." That man had to go idle and his family had to suffer.

In the New York Tribune of the 14th of this month, I read a special dispatch from this city. It said that a carpenter, I think by the name of C. S. Marks, landed in this city on that morning from Twin Lake, Wisconsin. He had with him a kit of carpenter's tools. As he stepped on the sidewalk, he was met by a committee from the strikers. They asked him if he belonged to the union. He said no. They said, "Then we will take your tools," and they took his tools and carried them to their headquarters on Lake street. He appealed to the nearest police station. The captain said to him, "Are you a member of the Carpenters' Union?" "No, I have just returned from a job of a month at Twin Lake, Wisconsin." "Well," said the captain, "they took your tools from you because they were afraid you would go to work; I can't do anything for you." That was right here in this city of Chicago. Why, if there is justice, this city will be held accountable at the bar of justice to make that man good for the loss which he has sustained by being deprived of the protection that the law should afford him. Chicago has been awarded the World's Fair. I am glad of it. I am glad that it is to come here. But if the lodge steps in and says to men whose work may be needed in making the necessary preparations, "You cannot be employed unless you put your neck under our yoke," then I say the lodge should be suppressed.

I say the right to work is a right that God has given to every man, and that right ought to be defended. I remember when this conflict between labor and capital began. So far as I know, I printed the first labor advocate that was ever printed in this country in the interests of the laboring men. My sympathies were wholly with them, and for this reason: The manufacturers had entered into a conspiracy under our laws, which are always rendered possible by preventing imports of their articles except at a high price,—they had entered into conspiracies all around to raise the prices of their products. The men found out that these manufacturers were making themselves very rich on their labor, and so they insisted on higher wages, and my sympathy was with them. I did all I could to help them. I printed their paper. But when these labor unions took one step farther and said that a man cannot work unless he belongs to our lodge, then I quit them. I say that every man has a right to work on such terms as he pleases, and that freedom is a mockery that does not leave men free to work on the terms that they may agree upon with their employers.

THE LODGE RE-INSTATING A FRENCH REVOLUTION.

If we knew it, we are in the first stages of the French Revolution. The reign of anarchy is upon us. The reign of the clubs is upon us. We are under its reign now. We say the people rule in Chicago, but the clubs really rule in Chicago. And it is time that we see to these facts and to the dangers that threaten us on every hand. If it should take the whole power of our national government to defend a man in his right to work, that man should be defended.

Here is where secret societies are doing what would not be tolerated from any other source. If our State legislature should exercise the tyranny that these lodges exercise there would be a revolution; men would not stand it. If your legislature in Springfield should say, "Carpenters shall not work in Chicago except so many hours a day and at such wages an hour," every man who shoves a plane, who had the spirit of a man in him, would say, "I work when I please, and I work for whom I please, and I will work for what wages I please, and now I take the consequences." And I say that it is time that this anarchy that is upon us was brought to an end.

Again, secret societies are a standing menace to our institutions, to our free institutions. They accustom those belonging to them to the language of nobility. Their "Grands," their "Noble Grands!" Their language is not the language of free men, and the men who act under them cannot be free men. They are bound and shackled hand and foot. One of these societies, at least,—and I don't know but more than one—has a large, well-drilled, well-armed military organization. If a crisis should arise, as may arise in our political affairs, such an organization could very easily seize the reins of power. There would be nothing to prevent it. Does any one imagine that men of mature age, business men, intelligent men, would spend the time necessary to secure the military drill of which the Knight Templars boast and pay a million of dollars for their uniform and equipment, for no other purpose in the world than to make a gratuitous exhibition of themselves in one of our cities once a year and drain dry the saloons? Why, the very idea is absurd. It is said the King of France with 40,000 men marched up the hill and then marched down again. Is this all the Knight Templars propose to do? I repeat, the very idea is absurd. General Sheridan said, years ago, "A government that allows bodies of men on its soil to acquire military drill and discipline independent of its control does not deserve the name of a government," and events may show that General Sheridan was right. The arming of one body of men, of one secret society, renders necessary the arming of another, for those opposed to them are in danger; and these armed societies in our midst, with an organization as perfect as the organization of the army of the United States, and with numbers far exceeding that of the army of the United States, are a standing threat to our free institutions.

THEY SHOULD NOT BE TOLERATED.

Finally, let me call your attention briefly to the position that the civil government should take towards these secret societies, as they are, as we have seen, its enemies. They should give them neither toleration nor support. From White Caps to Jesuits they should be suppressed by law. The influence of the Jesuits was found to be so detrimental to even the limited liberty enjoyed under the monarchies of Europe, that years ago the Jesuits were suppressed in France, they were suppressed in Spain, they were suppressed in Austria, and yet perhaps of all secret societies they are the least to be dreaded. We are in danger from them and they should be put down. We give to a certain class of men in our laws the right to administer an oath. If our laws are good for anything they ought to protect that man in the exclusive exercise of that right, and they should punish every other who assumes to administer an oath as a usurper of the rights belonging to the nation.

The axe should be laid at the root of the tree, and the foundation of these secret societies should be cut off at once, and all these organizations that bind themselves together by an oath, and all members who administer an oath, should be treated as enemies of the government, and we should stand out God's free men in the broad sunlight, according cheerfully to every man the privileges and the advantages and the rights and the liberties which we claim.

THE EXALTATION OF CHRIST, AS LORD AND SAVIOUR, OUR PURPOSE.

ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT C. A. BLANCHARD, WHEATON COLLEGE.

There are two things which I think we should constantly keep before our fellow men. The first of these is not contained in the subject upon which I was requested to say a few words, but it is so important that I pause a moment before taking up that theme to advert to it.

The fact is, and it is a singular fact when we consider the probabilities of the case, that the most distinguished statesmen, the most successful evangelists, the most influential pastors, the most energetic and aggressive religious bodies of the United States have, during the past forty years, been unfriendly to secret organizations. Take, for example, that little list of testimonies which you find on the last page of the programs which were put into your hands as you came into the hall, and I suppose I am speaking far within the line of the truth when I say that it would be absolutely impossible to make any list of names approximating that in weight of character, in ability as statesmen, of men who have given testimony in favor of secret societies.

Take, for example, George Washington, who is so frequently quoted. Aside from the letters which are said to have been forged as from him, and which are published in the book entitled, "Washington and his Masonic Compeers,"—aside from these letters, which do not appear in the "Life and Letters of Washington," edited by Sparks, of Harvard University—aside from these letters which are credited to him, but which he did not write, almost everything which we have from George Washington with respect to secret societies is inimical to them. Take our own age, the age in which you and I live, and take that age which lies just behind us, when great men held the ship of state on her course through stormy times; when rebellion and the institution of slavery were feeling with the knife for the very heart of the Republic,—take those great men, Salmon P. Chase, William H. Seward, Charles Sumner, Thaddeus Stevens and Henry Wilson, and so far as they are on record, they are against the lodge. Take our evangelists, read their testimony; and if you are Christian men and women I do not believe you can fail to be thrilled with the feeling that these men are speaking words of truth and soberness; and I do not believe you can find one man greatly honored of God in the salvation of men who has ever said, without repentance and acknowledgment, words in favor of secret associations.

I was riding one day on the train with a gentleman who is in business in this city, and yet he spends much time in evangelistic work, and as the subject of secret societies was mentioned he said to me: "Did you know that I had been a Freemason?" I said, "No, sir." "Well," he said, "I was a Freemason; I took three degrees." "Well," I said, "what do you think of it?" "Well," said he, "I think this: in a thousand converts and I never knew a Knight Templar to be converted in my life." That is the testimony of a man who lives in Chicago to-day. I saw him in the restaurant where I took my dinner at noon. He is doing business in this city, is a successful business man, and is very successful as a soul-winner.

Now, when you and I permit facts like these to lie hidden away, when we print these testimonies once a year and let that suffice, we are sinning against the souls of men. It is not at all true that numbers or weight of names determines the character of this organization, and I suppose I am speaking to men and women who have learned to stand, even if it be all alone, with Jehovah in defence of a principle which is believed to be true. But, friends, if it be true that God has stirred up many men to the advocacy of those principles which you and I hold, and if these men, living and dead, have uttered testimonies which the souls of men need, then you and I are recreant to our duty as leaders of the people, as watchmen on the walls, as men entrusted with the souls of our fellows, we are recreant unless we keep constantly before the people this fact that God has moved these men thus to speak. Here are snares, traps, gins, pit-falls, on every side. Young men here in this city are approached every week and invited to pledge their liberty for life to some irresponsible secret association, to take insurance in some secret society that never writes a policy, and that spends two-thirds of its receipts in fuss and feathers and self-glorification, and a little per cent of the one-third remaining in the relief of actual suffering. These men are about us by scores, by tens of thousands. They want fellowship, every man of them, and they are naturally inclined not to want it in Jesus Christ. And these men are told continually that great men belong to their organization. They are told that even ministers belong to secret societies, and that they cannot be harmful, or why should these great men belong to them. Testimonies like these ought to be in the hands of these young men that they may be enlightened and warned in time and enabled to preserve their liberty, which is the choicest heritage of man.

I remember very well to have heard Gerrit Smith say—I think it was in 1870, I know it was in the city of Syracuse, New York: "We who were men at the time when the Masons protected the murderers of William Morgan, have sinned greatly against the young men of this generation in that we have allowed the memory of those facts to die out from memory. Because," said he, "if it had not been that a generation arose who were entirely unacquainted with the facts, that organization which went down under universal condemnation of Christians and patriots and fair-minded men, would have found it absolutely impossible ever to get back into power as at the present time." Let us then, friends, so far as God gives us the voices of our fellows, men whose names are distinguished by gifts and by position; let us, so far as we may, use these testimonies, not because these men have been honored, not because they are numerous, but because these many men, and these eminent men, have testified to the truth.

THE PROFIT OF IT.

But I was requested to speak respecting the purpose which we have in view in meetings of this kind. Now, in the first place, negatively, we are able honestly to affirm that our purpose is not to make money. Men do not make money by antagonizing popular evils. It is easier to make it by crooking the pliant hinges of the knee where thrift may follow fawning. Men who are here in this conference this afternoon, the men who wrote their names on the call for this conference, the men who have been for twenty-five years testifying to the world that secret organizations are needless at the very best and are terribly harmful at the very worst, these men have not been actuated by love for gain. They have not been making money out of this work. They are spending it; not making it.

Nor is this movement a movement to promote the political fortunes of any particular set of individuals. We are Christians conferring respecting a great, and, as we believe, iniquitous system which exists among us. We are citizens as well. Our fortunes and fate are identified with the fate and fortune of the Republic. When Jerusalem fell, compassed by the armies of Titus, those who were innocent fell with those who were guilty. When the Angel of Death placed his bits of crape on Northern doors because of the sin of American slavery, he did not pass by the door of the Abolitionist. So always. We are citizens, and as citizens we have civil duties, and, I trust, perform them in the fear of God. But these meetings and this movement are not for the purpose of securing political preferment. I am not prepared to say that secret societies make men greedy for office. I am not prepared to say that all men who join secret societies are greedy for public office before they join. But every man who is reasonably intelligent knows that the civil offices of this country are very largely held by lodge men. You know either that lodge men become greedy for office in the lodge, or that men who are greedy for office go into the lodge for the purpose of promoting their political fortunes. The men who permit gamblers and saloon-keepers (according to the newspapers) to run Chicago, are members of secret lodges. They were two years ago, and they are to-day. They were four years ago, and, unless the people change their temper, they will be four years hence.

M'GARIGLE.

When a man, a criminal sentenced to the State's prison, was carried by a sworn official for miles through this city in an open buggy after dark, and finally turned loose in a big house, that of ficial and that criminal were Knights Templars; and when the Knights Templars got together to turn out the man who ran away, they kept in honored membership the man who took him out and did not bring him back. And when they were having their dance the other day that public official who permitted his brother Knight Templar to escape from him in some way, by his fault or by his misfortune, was among the honored guests with sword and hat and feather, on the floor of that ball-room.

Now, I say again, we are not here seeking after political preferment. If that were what we want we should take another road. But, once more, we have not for our purpose and object the promotion of denominational interests. I take it we are all of us wishing for that day to come, when, in place of separate denominational flags floating over different fortifications along the line which the church has reared against the power of the enemy, there should be one name above every name, the name of Jesus Christ, so that when men say "I am a Christian," they shall say all that anybody will care to know. One camp for us all over there, over which floats the white flag of Jesus Christ sprinkled with his precious blood; and one camp over there, over which floats the black flag of the enemy of God and man, and a straight, clear line between the two; no friends of the powers of darkness on that side, no friends of the power of light on this side; but a plain demarcation between the followers of Jesus Christ and the followers of Satan, and fair battle joined between the two. But, while we hope for this day, and long for this day, and while we know that this day will come, we know also that this day is not here. But we have not come here to promote Presbyterianism, nor Congregationalism, nor Methodism, nor Free-Methodism, nor Episcopalianism, nor United Presbyterianism, nor Reformed Presbyterianism, nor any other ism. We are here united in Jesus Christ, men and women saved by his precious blood from the pollution, and from the guilt, and from the power of sin, believing our names to be written in the Book of Life; believing that it was well that he went away that he might prepare a place for us, and believing that, having gone to prepare a place for us, he will come again and receive us unto himself; and we are here to-day for the honor of Jehovah Jesus and for the salvation of the precious souls for which he died.

WHO SHALL PLEAD FOR A MAN WITH GOD?

Now, we look over this wide field of the world, fourteen hundred millions of human beings like ourselves, born in the image of God, an image defiled and debased and broken, but nevertheless in the image of God, looking forward to that long eternity that lies beyond the grave, and all of them, every man of them, heathen or Christian, wondering what shall be beyond that grave, and every man of them longing at times for some one who shall point him the way by which he may approach to God—every man and every woman of them all longing at times for some one who may tell how a man can be just with God. We look over this wide, surging field of the world, and we find that there have been devised various methods of leading men to suppose that they may be safe for eternity, and we find that these methods which men have devised, in place of being like the methods which Christ has appointed, are directly contrary thereto. The method of salvation through faith in Jesus Christ is very simple. "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." "Repent and be converted and your sins shall be blotted out when the times of refreshing come from the presence of our Lord." "Him hath God exalted to be a Prince and a Saviour to give repentance and remission of sins." We read these Scriptures, they are familiar to us all, and we understand that we are commissioned, you and I, to go out into this world and to preach this Gospel to every creature; to whisper in the ear even of a sinner who lies right down by the crumbling edge of the grave, to say to him, the blood of Jesus Christ can cleanse you from all sin. So that there is no place for despair for any man who is willing to repent and to forsake his sins and believe on Jesus Christ.

But we find here other organizations scattered all about us on every side, springing up like mushrooms and growing like the wheat that Pharaoh saw on the banks of the Nile.

WHAT DO THESE ORDERS SAY?

Well, in the first place, they preach invariably on the line of men's selfish interests. They say to the man: "Now here, you come and join our organization, and you will get this and you will get that, or you will get something else." This has been very clearly brought out in the paper read by one of the gentleman who addressed us this afternoon. Join the organization. What for? If you need money when you are away from home, some one will lend it to you without security. If you die they will see that you are buried. If you die your wife and children will be cared for. That is the way they approach them. Why, when they were trying to induce a young man who was playing an organ in a church where I was ministering, when they were trying to get him to join them, they said to him: "You come and join our lodge and play the organ for us and we will give $2,000 insurance on your life in favor of your family." And another young man coming to this city to begin to practice as a physician was told, "Join our lodge and we will make you examining physician for our order; it will be worth $1,000 a year for you." And when the messengers from the first lodge are out the messengers from the second one come in and tell him the same thing,—a bribe of $2,000 to a young man with his wife and babe here in this city, and seeking for his clientage,—a bribe of $2,000 a year offered to him if he will forsake his convictions and join a secret society or two. And we could get along with this moderately well, if this were all. We should feel that it was unmanly and unjust for men to seek by secret and under-handed methods for political positions, but we should not as mere Christian citizens complain. We should say, let these potsherds strive with the potsherds of the earth. Let these men who want political office and who think there is something in it, let them get it; we don't want it; we have other work to do. If the only thing that Freemasonry did was to give the merchant who was a Mason a little better chance than the merchant who was not a Mason, and to increase his profits a little without reference to the excellence of his character or the honorable method with which he conducted his business, we should still say, these riches perish with the using; after a few years here it will be all gone; let it go. If the only things which the Freemasons, and the Royal Arcanum, and the Modern Woodmen, and the Ancient Order of United Workmen; if the only thing which these "ancient" orders (which are ten years old) give a man, is a place among strangers to which he is not entitled, we should say, let that pass.

ALTARS OF BAAL.

But what do we find? We find that when they have entrapped these men into joining, they proceed to give them a faith which is adapted to satisfy this longing of the heart after a religious hope on which man may rest. We find in their lodge rooms, even down to the Good Templars, an altar, and a Bible. In the Grand Army hall at Saratoga where a section of the National Educational Association met a few years since, was an altar, a Bible and crossed swords in the middle of the room. We find in almost every one of these organizations also some kind of a religious officer. He is called a Chaplain, a Priest, a High Priest; in the State organization, he is a Grand High Priest, and in the organization of the United States he is a General Grand High Priest. In

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

LODGE BENEVOLENCE.

Boston, May 9, 1890.

A few doors from where I write is an elevated structure, the upper part of which is largely devoted to lodge work. Below, and entered from the sidewalk by the same broad stairway, are two spacious rooms used for Christian mission work, free to all, and sustained by the voluntary offerings of men and women who give of their means and their time for the only compensation of witnessing the honor of Christ in the conversion of souls. Some of the workers conceived and put in practice the happy thought of "feeding the hungry" in connection with a simple Gospel service one evening in a week. Tickets were issued and every precaution taken to prevent disturbance or obstructions to the entrance. The bulletin at the foot of the stairs announces to the passer-by that seven lodges of the Knights of Pythias order meet in the upper chamber. These Sir Knights and one female lodge were so exasperated by the work carried on by the Christians, that a lodge vote was taken and the landlord notified that unless a stop was put to this work of feeding the hungry, and thus annoying the valiant Sir Knights by the presence of real objects of charity, they would not renew their lease and would leave the building. There was one evening on which no lodge meeting occurred, and a compromise was effected, not by the lodge making any concession, but by the mission changing to the vacant evening. The clannish, selfish, heartless arrogance of pagan and Christless religion prevailed, and the Bride of Christ was forced to take a back seat, or leave the building, or cease to obey the Bridegroom in doing "unto others as ye would that they should do unto you."

This is lodge benevolence in the Puritan city of Boston, whose near neighbor, Mr. Lawrence, for years Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts, has contracted to supply the Congo dealers with rum from this center of Christian culture. Five hundred and ninety-nine of these secret "benevolent" lodges in this city alone are forcing the 345 churches to silently acquiesce in their boasted charities, while the press teems with laudations of festivals and balls.

THE LODGE WORK IN NORTH CAROLINA.

A gentleman, recently from his Southern home, has been making repairs on our rooms here. He is quite intelligent, and seems honest and industrious. On making inquiry about churches and lodges in the city whence he came, he spoke freely of the former, but of the latter he was reticent. I stated to him my business here, and when he knew my views he was ready to talk. He said in substance:

"It is understood among our people in the South that a Freemason cannot be convicted and punished for any crime, however strong the proof of his guilt. I am a Christian, and Christ has promised to take care of me, and I don't want anything to do with secret lodges. I had to borrow money to come to Boston. I did not know anybody here, but I thought there must be some Christians in the city that sent so many good teachers to help the colored people. A friend who is an Odd-fellow came with me. He urged me to join the order; but I said, 'No, I am a Christian.' We both found work, and I have been doing well. The lodge gave my friend fifty dollars to send for his family; and I have paid back what I borrowed, supported my wife and six children, and by Saturday night I shall have enough money to buy tickets and send to my family and bring them here as soon as my friend's family will come. I am a free man, and I had rather trust in Christ than the lodge, and I can't do both, for I can't serve two masters."

The faith and devotion of this colored brother merits careful consideration by some of the professed disciples of our Lord, who have had less obstructions to overcome in the pathway to success, but who say they must "yoke up" with unbelievers to get cheap insurance, secure employment, or make a success in business. Does not God care for his own? He surely does, more than for the lilies, and his promises cover every need of body and soul to all who keep within the conditions.

A DEAD MASON AND DEAD TO MASONRY.

NEW YORK CITY, May 6, 1890.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The death of Dr. Yung Chee Yang, Grand Eastern District Secretary of the Chinese Freemasons, has afforded another opportunity for the members of this body to display themselves in true Masonic fashion. The following is a partial account of the man and the funeral as it appeared in the Journal this morning:

"He had been prominent among the Chinese in New York for over six years. At one time he had amassed quite a fortune, but high living and ill-health beggared him.

"Just before the casket was closed Tom Lee, who had charge of the funeral arrangements, delivered a short address on the admirable qualities of the deceased man. Tom then scattered some Chinese playing cards over the corpse, so that Yang could amuse himself on the long journey, and then Wo Kee made an address similar to that of Tom Lee.

"After that a dozen loud-mouthed Celestials began to yell like mad, and the Chinese band in the rear room created a rumpus. The noise was to frighten away the devils until the coffin had been securely nailed up.

"Seventy-two carriages, four tally-hos and eighteen saddle horses had been hired as the funeral cortege. The hearse, which was drawn by four black horses, had light, large plumes, and the horses wore coverings of black netting.

"Before the coffin was placed in the hearse the eighteen saddle horses were mounted by the leading officers of the Chinese Masonic order. They carried big fans to keep devils from the path of the procession. Then the Italian band which had been hired got into a big tally-ho and played all kinds of music to amuse the dead on the way to the cemetery.

"Then came the hearse. On either side marched forty loudly-dressed Chinamen, who were to keep a vigilant watch for devils. Next came the carriage laden with the food for the dead man, and all of his effects. Two tally-hos with two Chinese bands came next. Following were the carriages containing the friends of the dead man.

"The multitude in Mott street numbered fully 12,000 people, and it took all the reserve force of the Elizabeth street station-house to keep them in order.

"Evergreens Cemetery was reached at 3 o'clock. Without much ceremony the coffin was placed in the grave. Bags of rice, and pieces of paper containing prayers to the Joss were thrown in, and then the grave was filled up.

"When the grave-diggers had concluded, a fire was started over the grave and all the clothes and personal effects of the dead man were burned. Then the food was placed on the grave so that he could eat whenever so disposed.

"When this had been carefully performed the Chinamen returned to this city satisfied that Yang was safe from the devils."

Judging by what I have seen, these Chinese are but little in advance of their white Masonic brethren in heathenish displays on funeral occasions. What difference can it make whether the prayer offered is to the "Great Architect of the Universe," or Joss, so long as Christ is rejected? Are not the joss-sticks cast in the grave as fitting emblems as the sprig of evergreen? This Masonic Grand had dangled over a Masonic pit similar to that which proved so disastrous to Rev. Johnston of Huntington, W. Va. Why should he not have as much blasphemous mockery at his funeral?

The bachelor Catholic priests feel that the emigrant girls greatly need their kind protection and have instituted a fair to raise money to assist them in their charitable work among this class. It was opened last evening at the corner of Broadway and Sixth Avenue by Cardinal Gibbons. The Journal says of the opening, "It was a grand success." But from the description it is evident it was a grand debauch. There are tables dedicated to various saints. Gambling (or taking chances, as it is called,) for a piano, etc., is one of the attractions.

I am indebted to Mr. K. J. Sundstrom of 122 W. 100 street, this city, for two valuable Masonic books. They contain the cypher helps furnished members for instruction in conferring the degrees of the Blue Lodge and Chapter. They are of the latest edition, being published in 1885 and '86. Mr. Sundstrom was initiated into the Blue Lodge in Stanhope, N. J. He afterward became a member of Baldwin Chapter, Newton, N. J., and finally a member of De Molay commandery, Washington, N. J. Like Paul before conversion, he, without realizing, was very zealous in building up one of the greatest foes to Christianity. He held office in the lodge and was assured of election as "High Priest" when he withdrew,

He subscribed for the Cynosure, and was rejoiced to know of our work. He has not regarded his Masonic oath as binding since becoming a Christian, and assured me that he was willing to give information to any one regarding the iniquity he found in the lodge if he could thereby help them to shun this evil.

In his lodge, in the Royal Arch degree sharpened boards were placed on ends, so as to be very painful to the candidate passing over the "rough and rugged road." The "pit" had three apartments. In each some Masonic trinket was placed which the candidates were supposed to find and bring to the surface. The third apartment, in which was placed the box representing the Ark, he thought was at least eighteen or twenty feet down. Great care should be taken in letting Masonic preachers in such pits on Saturday nights. If the rope is not strong they may not be able to carry a Gospel message to a dying world the next day.

Space does not permit a detailed account of work for the week past. I have lectured twice. Have increased the list of new Cynosure subscriptions here to over one hundred.

BRO. HAWLEY'S LABOR IN ILLINOIS.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—On my return from the tour through Henry, Mercer and Warren counties, I stopped at Smithville, Peoria county, and spent the Sabbath with Rev. John Harper, pastor of the United Presbyterian church.

I preached Sabbath morning to his congregation and received from him five dollars for the State work, and a pledge of ten more from him and his people, to send the Cynosure, for four weeks, to a hundred Illinois ministers.

Bro. Harper has thoroughly instructed his people in the principles of reform. If the pastors of all our churches labored as faithfully to promote Christian reforms, as does he, no special agencies would be needed.

On my way home from Peoria Co., I called at various points, prospecting the field, and working up the Chicago convention. Among other places I stopped at Wenona, former home of that Christian philanthropist, Peter Howe. I called upon his sons, and was led to hope that they would become illustrious examples of the beneficent spirit that adorned the character of their sainted father.

While there I made the acquaintance of Bro. S. J. White, who lives four miles in the country, who is an active worker in the N. C. A. reform. I have since engaged to return there and do some lecture work; but, before going, I must meet engagements, already made, to lecture at Melrose, Prospect Park and Aurora.

I preached at Melrose, since the Chicago convention, and while contrasting the Gospel of Christ, which is the power of God unto salvation to every believer, with the Satanic counterfeit of the Gospel found in the secret lodge system, the people were stirred, and a demand for a lecture more fully to develop the subject, was created.

Let us unitedly pray and faithfully work for the coming of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ. The secret lodge system, and every other stronghold of Satan, must be pulled down with the weapons of truth and love, that everywhere the church of our Lord Jesus Christ, clear as the sun, fair as the moon, and strong in the power of the Spirit, may arise and practically manifest the love of Him who hath loved us and redeemed us with his own precious blood. Yours in Christ,

C. F. HAWLEY.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CHRIST AGAINST ALL SECRETISM.

BARABOO, Wis.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Some good men are waking up at this late day and are speaking out; but the enemy has already come in like a flood. It is pretty hard to stop a break in the levee when the flood is once fairly pouring through. The church is not now running the world, but the world is running the church. Still it is better to speak out boldly. Dr. Henson does not get at the inwardness of the words of Christ, where he says, "I ever spake openly to the world, and in secret have I said nothing." The Pharisees had asked Christ concerning his disciples and his doctrine.

It is a fact, that all the old pagan idolatries and worships had a secret ritual, with secret ceremonies which were given only to the initiated. In Greece it was manifested in the Greater and Lesser Mysteries, of which death was the penalty for revealing. Even Judaism had degenerated into nearly the same thing in its Targums and mysterious explanations of the law and prophets.

Now these Pharisees were searching for the hidden part of Christ's teaching, being sure, of course, that there was a secret ritual of some kind. Christ appeals at once to those who had heard him teach in the temple and synagogues "where the Jews always resort," "and in secret he had said nothing." So that his doctrine involved nothing to be given in secret. In this it is opposed to all secretism and to all paganism.

LESSONS OF THE CONFERENCE.

BLOOMINGTON, Ill., May 5, 1890.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—When a certain ancient reformer had "troubled" his people for a long time, and finally had caused the destruction of four hundred of the popular preachers of his time, he fled to the wilderness to escape the vengeance of the queen of the realm, who was the patroness of the discomfited religion and the defunct religionists. Here the prophet received a good meal to sustain physical strength; had a vision of the great power of God, and received assurance that he was not alone in opposition to the false religion. After this he returned with renewed faith, courage and energy to the work God had evidently laid upon him.

There were doubtless many who came from much the same predicament to the Chicago Conference on April 22, and have also returned with renewed faith and energy to their fields of labor; believing that God and right are with the N. C. A., and that with these success is certain. While each has thousands around him who claim they have not "bowed the knee" to the secret lodge (Baal) system, but dare not let their opposition be known, here was actual contact with those who know the malignity of the thing and openly defy it in its stronghold.

Then to see such noble men coming out and standing up in the cause; men whose intellect, religion, and worldly respectability are so well established that it is too late to cry out, "crank," "idiot," or "scapegrace," against them. Many of these spoke evidently without specific knowledge of the lodge chicanery, which is so very apparent to those who will give the system a little attention. Their view was only that of the Christian, and was evidently directed by the common Christian instincts; yet it was none the less clear, pointed and positive in condemnation of the whole lodge system. Thank God! we have made one more stride onward in our reform; one more development from negative to positive, from passive to active in the Christian elements which alone can oppose Satan and his inventions.

I wrote you a short time since of some rather intemperate language used by Mrs. Helen M. Gougar in a speech here, denouncing ministers and deacons who vote a license ticket, and of the arraignment of that lady and the whole body of prohibitionists by the Rev. Dr. Jackson of this city for their wicked intolerance.

Mrs. Gougar immediately challenged the Rev. gentleman to a discussion of their differences, to which he paid no attention. On May 1st she returned and made her defense, holding a large audience for two hours and three-quarters. She plainly showed the unity of his position with that of saloon-keepers, brewers, and distillers, and his antagonism with other noted ministers of the Gospel; and finally she proved by the utterances of his own denomination that he was not in unison with them. She had her address prepared and read from a printed copy; three thousand of which were immediately sold from the platform. This has proved a complete wet blanket to the lodge tactics which was employed against her. Boycotting was used, but misrepresentation was powerless against her, and the daily press are very silent regarding the whole affair. It is stated that at our late election three-fourths of our ministers voted license tickets, and now the people are quite resigned to see their clerical broadcloth thoroughly dusted.

It is very evident our clergy will steer clear of the liquor question for some time to come, at least until the welts on their backs have had time to heal. The Rev. J. himself has not escaped censure for stirring up the matter and calling her back. Our imperious Sunday paper, the Eye, says of our preachers: "Although some of them may teach that the devil and hell are myths, they now certainly know that there is a Hell-in-Gougar."

Mrs. G. addressed another lecture to others of our spiritual guides who have weakened on the license vote, but stickle on the equal suffrage plank of the prohibition platform. Speaking of the large majority, ten to one, of men to women in our penitentiaries, and the great majority of women over men in our churches and institutions of learning, she asked, "Where are our men? There are often not enough to furnish a bass to our choirs." We wanted to answer, they are in the lodges which exclude cripples, incompetents, idiots and women.

It is strange indeed that such earnest, clear-sighted and heroic champions as Mrs. Gougar, while marching forward to equality and justice regardless of accidents of birth or sex, should consent to leave such a malignant stronghold of Satan as the lodge, in their rear. To us nothing is plainer than that the lodge and the saloon will stand or fall together. Certainly they are an unit in their estimate and treatment of women.

LITERATURE.

The Plantation Missionary is a bi-monthly magazine published at Oberlin, Ohio, by Rev. C. B. Curtis, Cor. Sec'y of the Industrial Missionary Association of Alabama. The president of this Association is Rev. G. M. Elliott of Selma, Ala. This Association has for its object the mental, moral and material improvement of a neglected class, namely, the plantation Negro. Much has been done for the colored people of the cities of the South; but over wide areas, especially in the Black Belt of Alabama, their condition on the plantation is little better than when they were emancipated. This Association is a joint stock company chartered by the laws of the State and has for its objects, to purchase lands and lease them to colored families of good character, using the rentals to support schools and churches for the mental and moral improvement of the people. Rev. C. B. Curtis, who has inaugurated this movement, has had long experience in the South as a laborer amongst the freed-men. Rev. G. M. Elliott of Selma is among the ablest and best of the colored pastors of that city. A good beginning has already been made. A considerable tract of land has been purchased and something of a colony gathered. The outlook seems hopeful.

The price of the magazine is but 25 cts. per annum. All interested in the material development of the Negro will do well to investigate and aid in this work.

The May Century is a Washington number again. The several numbers that have been devoted to this heroic topic would form an attractive volume. Mrs. Edith Robertson Cleveland writes of "Archibald Robertson, and his Portraits of the Washingtons;" William Armstrong and Edmund Law Rogers contribute two articles on "Some New Washington Relics," and these papers are supplemented by a short one on "Original Portraits of Washington," by Charles Henry Hart. All of these articles in the Washington series are profusely illustrated. The first installment of Mrs. Amelia Gere Mason's valuable series on "The Women of the French Salons" opens in a delightful way, and is finely illustrated. Mr. Stillman, in his Italian Old Masters, writes of Andrea del Verrocchio, to which Mr. Cole has added a magnificent engraving of a detail from Verrocchio's "The Baptism of Christ." Articles which will have a wide reading are George Kennan's striking paper on the methods of the Russian censors, entitled "Blacked Out," with which is given a fac simile of two pages of one of Mr. Kennan's Century articles on Siberia erased by the government censors; "Chickens for Use and Beauty," by H. S. Babcock, profusely and charmingly illustrated; "Two Views of Marie Bashkirtseff," with portraits and pictures by Marie Bashkirtseff; Prof. H. C. Wood's striking paper on "A Study of Consciousness;" and Major J. W. Powell's valuable contribution on "Institutions for the Arid Lands."

The frontispiece in The Arena for May is a finely executed photogravure of the Rev. Phillips Brooks, the distinguished Episcopal divine, of Boston. An entertaining sketch of Dr. Brooks's life and work also appears in this issue, written by Rev. Thomas Alexander Hyde. The opening paper on "Rock or Natural Gases" is of more than ordinary interest, prepared by N. S. Shaler, of Harvard University. Hon. J. H. Keatley, late U. S. Judge of Alaska, contributes a paper of great interest on "The Gold Fields of Alaska." Judge Keatley spent much time personally investigating the mineral resources of Alaska, and the facts related are important. Dr. Henry A. Hartt, of New York, contributes a brief paper to the "Rum" series, in which he maintains that drunkenness should be treated as a serious crime.

No woman could fail to be interested in some articles of the Ladies' Home Journal for May. Mrs. Frank Leslie points the way to success for "Women in Business Life;" Augusta Prescott tells "How to Take Care of Kid Gloves;" Ellen Le Garde urges "Woman's Need of Exercise;" Emma M. Hooper tells prospective brides how to buy "A Wedding Outfit for $200;" Helen Jay gives the most practical hints on "How to Take Care of Clothing." Mrs. John W. Bishop tells women what will be the hats and gowns worn this summer. Mary J. Holmes gives a good glimpse of "Domestic Life in Egypt;" Dr. H. V. Wurdeman tells women "How to choose Eye-glasses."

The May number of Vick's Magazine is most seasonable with its plate of pinks and useful articles on "Open Air Flower Gardening" and "The Gardener's Prospects." The floral notes of all kinds are unusually full and varied.

LODGE NOTES.

The Grand Secretary of the order of Elks has been enjoined from removing the seal or other property of the order from the State of New York.

Before adjournment Thursday the Ohio G. A. R. encampment passed a resolution demanding of Congress the passage of a per diem service pension bill.

The Masonic committee of the dedication of the Garfield memorial extends an invitation to all Masonic bodies to participate in the ceremonies at Cleveland on May 30 next.

The first lodge of the Independent Order of Machinists of the United States was instituted lately at Lynn, Mass., with 180 charter members. It is expected that lodges will be organized in every city in the country.

George W. Wright, ex-Supreme Treasurer of the order of Tont, pleaded guilty at Philadelphia to embezzling $38,666.20 of the society's funds, and was fined $1,000 and given four years and nine months in the penitentiary.

Advices from the Chickasaw Nation say that a large band of White Caps raided the southern part of the reservation Tuesday night, whipped a number of men and gave them notice to quit the nation in five days, and a number of other persons, who were not whipped, were notified to leave in ten days.

From a speech by Postmaster Steane in Hawthorne, Victoria: "So it was with Masonry. Although it sent out no missionaries; paid for no recruits; urged no one to seek admission; yet it had covered Europe with its shadow. Some of its most splendid temples adorned the cities of the New World. It was said to be no stranger to the swarthy Africans who inhabited the mysterious interior of that dark continent. The Arab Dervish wandering over the burning sands of the desert claimed acquaintance with its tenets. It had been adopted by the Fire-worshiper of Persia, the Parsee of India, the Mongolian of China. It was still spreading in the world; its vitality was as vigorous as ever."

The Johnson Co. Democrat of Olathe, Kan., publishes the following pretty story of Masonic high degrees. Should the wives of Freemasons follow to a conclusion the example of the three ladies mentioned, the lodge would find their opposition a serious affair. The Democrat says: "There are but three 32° Masons in Johnson county. They are J. H. Dow, H. C. Livermore and J. L. Pettyjohn, all of this city. It is the custom of this degree to meet yearly and celebrate the Feast of the Passover; eat lamb, drink wine and have a good time in general. These gentlemen meet by themselves, and no "horrid women" are admitted to their feast. These three gentlemen have met regularly from year to year at each other's home, and last week it was Mr. Dow's turn to prepare the feast. Covers were laid for only three, and, we are informed by one of these high Masons, it was the finest banquet ever given in the State. The menu consisting of wines and fruits which could only be procured at the greatest of trouble, expense and time. The feast commenced at 6:30 P. M. and lasted until 10 o'clock P. M., Mr. Dow doing the honors in a very dignified and pleasant manner. The ladies were not to be outdone, however, and Mrs. Dow entertained Mrs. Pettyjohn and Mrs. Livermore during the evening. They had a banquet also, but alone and aside from the three gentlemen. It was, beyond doubt, the richest banquet ever given in the city, and the exclusive three will long remember Mr. Dow's hospitality."

Dyspepsia causes depraved blood, which, in time, affects every organ and function of the body. As a remedy for these troubles nothing can approach Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It vitalizes the blood, strengthens the stomach, and corrects all disorders of the liver and kidneys.

THE N. C. A. FUNDS.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of — dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be sufficient discharge.

MASONS AROUSED.

The Chicago papers print a list of fifty-two Masons who were raised to the 32d degree, Scotch Rite, April 24. Their names are as follows:

S. S. Dingee, Evanston; F. W. Schmidt, Riverdale; E. B. Atkinson, Moline; D. R. Harrison, Herrins Prairie; C. C. Stevens, Danville; L. L. Stevens, Elgin; J. B. Armstrong, N. P. Anderson, J. W. Buehler, O. H. Burbridge, Rev. H. W. Bolton, A. Bausman, A. J. Barter, Wilson Brooks, J. H. Campbell, B. F. Davis, C. F. Engstrom, D. B. Falter, D. F. Flannery, John Glaze, N. W. Gifford, E. L. Heidenrich, August Hansman, A. D. Hayner, J. M. Hutchinson, M. I. Jacobs, W. C. Jordan, James John, W. A. Jones, Arthur Klaus, A. H. Loeb, J. H. Lion, C. D. Montague, C. Z. Mag-nan, T. P. Moody, L. P. Pennypacker, E. T. Pearce, F. H. Raessler, J. S. Root, E. E. Smith, W. A. Simsrott, J. F. Sturdy, C. H. Tabor, Lewis Thomas, Rev. H. W. Thomas, C. R. Williams, J. H. Willard, George A. Wait, F. S. Young, J. M. Adams, C. E. Kryssler, B. S. Church and C. F. Watkins.

This miscalled "Scottish Rite" was formed in 1801, at Charleston, S. C., by Dr. Dalcho, John Mitchell, and a few associates, by adding eight degrees to what was called the Rite of Perfection of twenty-five degrees, which was got up by Jesuit priests, aided by an apostate Presbyterian, Ramsay, from Scotland, and hence called "Scotch," though invented in Paris, and first practiced there in "the Jesuits' College of Clermont."

Of course, the lodge knew of our Conference which was advertised months before, and called by nearly four hundred able, and many of them distinguished, men. They had the whole State of Illinois to rally from, in order to break the force of our Conference, which was held the same week. The Methodist pastor of the church where we met (Bolton) is the only name, except that of the debauched Dr. H. W. Thomas, which we recognize as having standing in any Christian church, though there may be others. We have asked several citizens, and, among them, a Christian physician of large practice; and they know none of these people as recognized children of God, except the two named. Even Bishop Fallows' name is not in the list. He may have been put through all the degrees of blasphemy and idolatry before.

Sixty-four or five years ago, after Morgan's murder, 45,000 Masons left their lodges to return to them no more. The world lecturer, Joseph Cook, spoke, in our late Conference, of this desertion of their lodges, and confession of the truth of Morgan's revelation, as a stupendous proof that he had revealed their secrets, and that they murdered him for it. The members of the lodges then were far more honest men than Masons are now. Dr. Cronin was an Irish Morgan murdered by his lodge for revealing their iniquity. And here in Chicago, where the bloody deed was done and proved in open court, fifty men are found depraved enough to take, and others base enough to administer, false and murderous oaths in secret, more fearful by far than those taken by the abhorred Clan-na-Gael.

We most respectfully appeal to the Chicago press, and more especially the papers representing the Christian churches, the paid guardians of the Christian people, to protect us from such swindling impositions, by publishing just what they believe and know to be the truth concerning these orders, which profess to save men without Christ, his atonement, or the Holy Spirit. If "wrath to the uttermost" comes on our nation for its idolatries, the blood of the deluded, unwarned people will surely be required of those who kept back the "keys of knowledge," as in Christ's day, "because they were hirelings." Men who look on in silence and see crime committed, are guilty of that crime; and suppressing needed truth is crime.

INVITING DECEPTION.

The pastor of a Methodist church in South Boston has a new idea about the lodges. He will learn the good and the evil, the right and the wrong there is in them by an original method of investigation. He wrote to a number of business and professional men, known to have considerable experience in the secret orders, for their opinion as to the benefits or dangers of lodgery. From these replies he preached a sermon. Many came from the lodge to hear it, sure that they would not be hurt, and perhaps not even amused by any analysis of the lodge system derived from such sources; and they were not disappointed. Paul tells us that the devil goes about as an angel of light attempting deception. We can hardly imagine Paul writing to this deceiver for his opinion of hell. Now this South Boston pastor, if he was not original in his method, was at least very simple. If he did not know that, beginning with Freemasonry and Jesuitism, the whole secret system is marked by its deceptive character, he might have done so. Some orders swear members to practice hypocrisy and lying. Most of them teach it in their initiation ceremonies. It is a red line of dishonor running through the whole inter-twisted scheme of the lodge. Therefore, to ask representative lodge men to give a fair and impartial account of their orders is amusing. It was asking some of them to do that which they were under lodge oath not to do; and all of them to do that which would depose them from their high place as lodge leaders.

The discourse founded on such opinions was on the whole a very pleasing report of the blessings of lodge fellowship. When the dangers were mentioned, it was found that the tendency of some men to join too many lodges to the disadvantage of home life; and the inclination of others to make their lodgery a substitute for the true religion, were all that needed notice. This pastor seemed to have sincerity in warning against these tendencies; but it is safe to say that no lodge member left the place with a regret for that relation or desire to exchange it for a knowledge of pardoned sins or a hope of heaven through Jesus Christ. The error of this method of investigating secretism is manifest. If, instead of gathering from men who were under lodge obligation to have none but good opinions of their orders, this brother had taken the FACTS of lodgery, as they appear daily in the public press, and as they are written down in the law books of secretism, and from these formed his own opinion, and fearlessly, and in the name of Jesus given it, he would have heard men saying: "What must I do to be saved?"

—Mr. G. A. Conrad, Secretary of the Students' Bureau, is laboring in the Gospel at Edison, Washington, for several months.

—A misprint in Bro. Thomson's poem last week so spoiled a good line that we reprint it correctly with the connected lines as follows:

"And so the cursed monopolies grew until they swarmed like bees,

And laid their most accursed tax on life's necessities,
Till I wouldn't stand it longer, and in their kennels low,
My dogs of war were barking to let their mistress know
It wasn't just the wisest thing, even for a queen to do,
To make the many bend their backs a platform for the few."

The error was in printing the word worse for wisest in the next line to the last.

—An incredible amount of cheap and poisonous infidel literature has been and still is being scattered throughout the entire English-speaking world. India, Japan, Australia, Ceylon and other portions of the world where the English language is spoken, are being infested by this evil literature, which is being sent out in vast quantities from England and America. Bro. H. L. Hastings, editor of the Christian, of 47 Cornhill, Boston, has set himself at work to antagonize this influence by issuing not only a number of respectable volumes on the subject, for thoughtful and careful readers, but an immense quantity of cheap tracts and small pamphlets, which are furnished at 5 or 10 cents each, and which are peculiarly adapted to meet the difficulties of skeptics, and quell the rising doubts of those who are harrassed and perplexed by infidel objections. Persons who wish well to humanity can hardly do a better service than to scatter these cheap publications broadcast among the young, placing them in Sunday-school libraries, and distributing them among their friends, and thus guarding them from the evils which follow in the train of doubt and unbelief.

—Friends continue to order copies of the Cynosure containing Joseph Cook's masterly address. That issue was immediately exhausted. To meet the great demand for that address it will be printed, not only in the pamphlet report of the Conference, but also in separate form. Mr. Cook has made a most valuable addition by way of a summary, in which he takes his stand on the immovable rock of God's unchangeable truth against the secret oaths of the lodge in the state and in the church.

—The indifference of the religious press of this city to the fact that some of the most eminent pastors in several denominations were speaking fearlessly in the late Conference, was the topic of a brief note. Since it was written we find that the Interior noticed the Conference both before and after its sitting. Its editor personally, it is said, holds the reform against the lodge to be of more importance than that against the saloon. The last Advance has a brief but excellent notice written by Rev. Mr. Kelsey of Michigan. So far so good, but these notices are altogether inadequate to the case. One of our religious papers devotes nearly a column to the removal of the Inter-Ocean from one building to another half a block away—an interesting local item, but what has that to do with the progress of the church or the salvation of men!

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Rev. J. N. Bedford, for several years associated with the Wesleyan Theological Seminary at Wheaton, before its close last year, is removing from Wheaton to Norris City, White county, Illinois, where he will take charge of the Congregational church. He has been engaged in evangelistic work since last November.

—Pres. J. Blanchard, whose health and strength have returned in a measure, expected, as this number went to press, to start for San Francisco on Tuesday night. He goes by the Northwestern and Union Pacific through line, and is accompanied by his youngest daughter, Mrs. W. H. Fischer, and two little grand-children. The home of a daughter, Mrs. T. E. Kennedy, will open to welcome them in San Francisco, and they may possibly stop a few days with Rev. A. J. Bailey in Ogden, Utah. Pres. Blanchard has been able to resume partial work on the Cynosure for several weeks, and it is hoped that the journey may greatly aid, under God, in restoring him to his usual vigor.

—Rev. J. P. Stoddard and wife are doing a grand work in N. E., and we trust they will have the earnest prayers and hearty co-operation of all Christians who believe with Dr. Pentecost that "secret societies are the greatest modern foe of the Church of Christ." The first of a series to further the work of the N. E. C. A. has just been held at Bethany Mission, No. 6 Canal St. Boston. This mission is under the charge of Miss M. L. Richards, a noble Christian worker, the result of whose labors in reclaiming the unfortunate victims of vice and strong drink, are simply wonderful, but no more so than her zeal and devotion. Brother Wm. F. Davis had charge of the meeting in the absence of Brother Stoddard. Sisters Stoddard and Gleason spoke on the great need of such a work, and a converted Freemason gave a strong testimony on the impossibility of being a Christian and remaining in the order. A converted Jew who has come from Poland to do missionary work among his countrymen in Boston, spoke of the likeness of the lodge religion to Judaism in its hatred of Christ, and in presenting no sacrifice for sin. Not the least impressive feature of the meeting was when at its close the whole audience stood up as one man to signify their readiness to help the work of the N. E. C. A., and oppose without fear of man the lodge as well as every evil which hinders the reign of Christ. Praise God for the work of the Bethany Mission!—Christian Witness.

THE FLOATING CHAPEL WILL BE BUILT.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—Since publishing the report of donations received, we have let the contract and the chapel is to be ready on the first of July for the paint and seats. It is to be 30x110 feet, will seat about 800 people, and is to cost $1,500 without painting and seats. We shall pay $500 down, and the remaining $1,000 we expect to pay without assistance. But it will cost $500 to paint and seat the boat ready for use. This amount we ask the friends of the enterprise to contribute, with the understanding that we contribute an equal amount during the year to send the Cynosure, Wesleyan and Free Methodist to colored preachers, donors to state their preference when making their remittance.

We are anxious to put the chapel into active service as soon as possible, and we hope all who have said in their hearts, "We ought to do something to help build Bro. Arnold's floating chapel," will immediately put their threats into execution. Let each person who reads this appeal please send enough to at least buy one chair.

We are now working in churches, and at times many are turned away unable to get in. There is no difficulty in getting the public ear; what we lack is room to hold the people. Direct to Wheeling, W. Va. I. R. B. ARNOLD.

P. S.—All boxes, barrels and packages of papers, tracts and books for distribution among the freedmen should be sent prepaid to Marietta, Ohio. If sent to Wheeling, we have to pay charges for forwarding.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

A lecture by George Kennan—Russia's "paternal government"—Notes of progress in the Massachusetts Legislature—Boston liquor men as moralists—The lodge after the official head of Commissioner Merrill.

One of the first things taught to a properly trained New England child under the old regime was to be duly thankful—indeed, to count it as his chief blessing—that he was born in this free and enlightened Christian land. To this day I have returns of my old childish wonderment as to what I should have been, or what life would have seemed to me born anywhere else than in Massachusetts; dear old mother, with her orthodoxy and her heterodoxy, her east winds and her Pilgrim memories. I doubt whether this feeling is indoctrinated into the children of to-day with the same thoroughness. Conditions are different. We are fast growing cosmopolitan. But any one who hears George Kennan lecture on the political prisons of Siberia may well give not only general thanks for being born an American, but also very particular thanks that he was not born a subject of the Czar.

The writer has just had this privilege, and will jot down some of her impressions for the readers of the Cynosure. In the first place, a lecture from Mr. Kennan means a great many things in one. It is a literary treat, every word being chosen with that faultless nicety which marks the accomplished writer, and delivered with a peculiar ease and grace that seems rather due to the forgetting of himself in his subject than to any study of the oratorical art. Furthermore, there is something in the full-souled earnestness with which he tells his story that enlarges all our human sympathy, and makes us go away with a clearer sense of the brotherhood of man, and how true the philosophy underlying the command to "remember them that are in bonds as bound with them."

One naturally wants to know something about the personnel of a man who, next to Stanley, is now engaging the attention of the whole civilized world. As he ascends the platform he strikes you simply as a modest, unassuming American, of good height, neither slender nor stout, with dark hair and moustache, and a pleasant, thoughtful and rather pale face. There is certainly nothing in his appearance to mark him out as the intrepid traveler, the new John Howard who has turned the light of the nineteenth century on to Russia's horrible convict system; but which does not, after all, much surpass in revolting horror that of our Southern States.

Most of us have read Madame Cottins' little pearl of a story, "Elizabeth, or Exiles of Siberia," but it is written in rose-color, and gives but a faint idea of the real terrors of such exile. The mines of Kara, where Russia now sends her political prisoners, are situated four thousand miles from St. Petersburg. Think of educated men from the universities, and fair and cultured women setting forth on this terrible journey! Four thousand miles from Europe and civilization. One thousand miles from the Pacific coast and liberty.

The Russian system of government seems to be one ingeniously calculated to turn high-souled patriots into conspirators and assassins, and petty officials invested with a little brief authority into monsters of cruelty and tyranny; in short to develop all the worst side of human nature, and kill all its finest and noblest qualities. The Czar is a man of small mental caliber, who clings with all the tenacity of a little mind to the old traditions of the Empire; but there is a bureaucratic as well as autocratic power in Russia. The officers of the government have a natural self-interest in upholding the ancient order of things. Russia's social and political condition is due, in short, to the same law of cause and effect whose workings are always the same, whether it be in an empire or on a slave plantation.

The most striking and dramatic part of Mr. Kennan's lecture was when he dressed himself up in the convict's garb which all political prisoners are obliged to wear. A cap, a shirt, a pair of drawers, shoes of such miserable material that a day's march frequently unfits them for further service, and a long coarse gray overcoat forms the only suit provided by Russia's "paternal" government with which to meet the rigors of a climate in which the thermometer often sinks to 40 below zero. The clank of the pitiless iron leg-fetters completed the picture. One needed but little imagination to see the white winter sun sinking over the steppes, and a band of political exiles, guilty of no crime but that of loving liberty too well, halting for the night under the guard of Cossack gendarmes. May the monster protest which the W. C. T. U. are preparing for Alexander III., impress on even his dull mind that the humanitarian spirit of the present age cannot safely be ignored by a regimen that whips a woman to death and shoots men down in rows for the crime of simply presenting a petition.

The Massachusetts Legislature has passed a resolution in favor of biennial elections. But perhaps the most significant event in political circles has been the late action in favor of woman suffrage taken at a private meeting of about eighty Republican members, who received with cheers the unanimous resolve that "it is the duty of the Republican party to forthwith extend municipal suffrage to women." This is all due to the earnest and courageous work of the women in the last two city elections. They have certainly demonstrated the right of their sisters to municipal suffrage; and that conceded, on what ground of logic or common sense can they be forbidden to vote on matters pertaining to a wider sphere?

The W. C. T. U. are at work trying to get some action relative to the prohibition of intoxicants when the G. A. R. encampment is held in Boston next August. Of course this will not be pleasant news for the liquor-sellers, who look upon all such occasions as their legitimate harvest. At the Mechanics' Fair, which will be held next October, the Cordelia Wine Company have applied for space, intending to present to every visitor a tiny glass of wine as a sample of their goods; but the directors not only refused absolutely,—they voted to exclude alcoholic liquors in every form from the exhibition. Boston liquor men, especially the hotel-keepers, are much exercised in mind over the new law against public bars, and their anxious care lest the morals of their patrons should be injured thereby is decidedly amusing. Fifty canvassers were out on Saturday with petitions to the Legislature to repeal the obnoxious statute on the ground that it would conduce to loafing and more intemperance than ever before. Possibly this will be its effect, but if more liquor is drunk by this means it will certainly be better for the liquor-sellers, and they are not a class inclined to put the public welfare before their own pockets.

Somebody asks why labor organizations, which are so entirely monopolistic, should be exempted from the bill against Trusts which is now pending in Congress. There seems to be no good reason why they should be so exempt, and certainly nothing would be more to the advantage of the workingman than to have monopolies of every kind made illegal. True political economy cannot look for a moment with a grain of allowance on any selfish limiting to itself by one class of advantages which should be freely competed for by all. If the bill, however, is made to include secret labor unions, this will be enough to defeat it. I notice that some are asking for the removal of Insurance Commissioner Merrill on the plea of arbitrary action on the part of the latter. As every one knows, he has persistently opposed all the secret assessment orders; and it does not take much sagacity to see the hidden hand of the lodge under this demand. ELIZABETH E. FLAGG.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 7, 1890.

All day on Tuesday the half-masted flags at the Capitol hung limp and wet over the Senate and House, as symbols of the sorrow of Congress for the loss of the distinguished Kentucky statesman, Senator Beck. Within the Senate Chamber where he had so long been an active force and a recognized leader, his obsequies were conducted with fitting ceremony.

From Saturday, when the Senator dropped dead in the Baltimore & Potomac railway station of this city, until yesterday, the day of his funeral, his remains lay in the front parlor of the house of his colleague, Representative Breckinridge, on Capitol Hill. The massive form rested in a magnificent casket covered with flowers and the grey curly head was supported by a silken covered pillow. Arrangements had been made to have the body lie in state at the Capitol from Monday until Tuesday, but the Senator's daughter did not like the idea of her father's body remaining all night in the great lonely building and the committee of arrangements of course yielded to her wishes.

The death of the senior Senator from Kentucky removes one of the most interesting figures of American politics. He was a native of Scotland, and of all the many sons that country has furnished to the United States, few, perhaps, have been truer to the land of his adoption, or have reflected more credit upon it. His death was without the least premonition of approach, and at the moment of his return from New York with his daughter. He had just been greeted by some acquaintances, but instead of replying, muttered something about "dizziness," threw up his hand, and sank to the floor.

There are yet five years of the Senatorial term to which Senator Beck was elected, and considerable interest is felt in this successorship. There is a general impression that ex-Speaker Carlisle will be the man chosen by the Legislature now in session, and that the man chosen now, if well chosen, can succeed himself. It is said here that if the matter is settled by State pride merely, it will certainly be Mr. Carlisle, as he is considered the ablest man of the State. The death of Senator Beck disarranged the fixed program of proceedings in Congress for the week, but the great tariff debate is expected to begin this week at least. An effort will be made to put a limit upon the general debate, and to make the limit short. The Republicans want to set it at one week and the Democrats ask for two. It is probable that a compromise on ten days will be made.

Extensive preparations are in progress now preparatory to taking the next census, the actual work of which will begin on the first of June. Forty thousand or more enumerators armed with paper and pencil, will begin their rounds on that day. The busiest place now in connection with the census work is the warehouse in this city where some 20,000,000 population schedules are stored, and a force of men are engaged packing them in boxes to be sent to the census supervisors. There are 175 census supervisors, corresponding to the number of districts into which the country is divided for census purposes, and the supervisors distribute them among the enumerators. The schedules are packed in boxes weighing 237 pounds each, and there are 4,500 of these boxes. These are sent by mail, which means that they are carried in the mail cars instead of the express cars, and are perhaps the bulkiest pieces of mail matter that have ever been received in a postal car.

THE HOME.

LINGER NOT.

The time is short!

If thou wouldst work for God, it must be now;
If thou wouldst win the garland for thy brow,
Redeem the time.

Shake off earth's sloth!

Go forth with staff in hand while yet 'tis day;
Set out with girded loins upon the way:
Up! linger not!

Fold not thy hands!

What has the pilgrim of the cross and crown
To do with luxury or couch of down?
On, pilgrim, on!

With His reward

He comes; He tarries not; His day is near;
When men least look for Him will He be here:
Prepare for Him!

Let not the flood

Sweep thy firm feet from the eternal rock;
Face calmly, solemnly, the billows' shock;
Fear not the storm.

Withstand the foe;

Die daily, that forever thou mayst live;
Be faithful unto death; thy Lord will give
The crown of life.

HERMANSBURG AND PASTOR HARMS.

The river Elbe rises in the mountains of Bohemia, and flowing through the heart of Germany empties into the North Sea. At its mouth for fifty miles it is really an arm of the sea. At the point where it begins to widen into this estuary stand two cities, Hamburg on the north bank, and Harburg on the south bank. A few miles above Harburg, on the line of railway to Berlin, is Hermansburg, which fifty years ago was just an ordinary Lutheran country parish. At that time Louis Harms became the pastor. He was an original, eloquent man, but above all a man of great acquaintance with God and great faith in God. He at once began preaching that his people should repent of their sins. They had all been baptized, as they believed, and were all members of the church, every soul in the parish. But they were not Christians. Most of them had never so much as heard of the necessity of being born from above. Mr. Harms' preaching and house to house visitation was new to them. But God blessed it, and such a great revival followed that soon there was hardly a house in the village where there was not family prayer. The plowboys and the weeding girls sang hymns at their work in the fields.

By and by the idea of foreign missions came into some of their heads. It was thought over, prayed over, until there were twelve who had offered themselves as missionaries. The pastor took the case of these twelve to his "dear God," and was led to open for them a special training school, with a four years' training course, in one of the houses of the village; for they were but unlearned peasants. His brother, Theodore Harms, was appointed superintendent of the school.

The mission field finally fixed on was the country of the Gallas, on the east coast of Africa. Other volunteers kept coming, until within two years sixty had offered themselves. Out of them all, however, only eight were finally chosen for the first departure—five mechanics and three farmers. For it was not intended that all should be preachers, but that they should be a missionary colony. But how were they to go? For a long time no way opened. Mr. Harms said:

"I knocked diligently on the dear God in prayer; and since the praying man dare not sit with his hands in his lap, I sought among the shipping agents, but no speed came. I turned to Bishop Gobat, in Jerusalem, but had no answer. Then I wrote to the missionary Krapf in Mombas, but the letter was lost. Then one of the sailors said, 'Why not build a ship, and you can send out as many and as often as you will?'"

"The proposal was good; but the money! That was a time of great conflict, and I wrestled with God. No one encouraged me. Even the truest friend hinted that I was not quite in my senses. Yet the plan was manifestly good, and for the glory of God. What was to be done? 'Straightforward makes the best runner.' I prayed fervently to the Lord, laid the matter in his hand, and as I rose up at midnight from my knees I said, with a voice that almost startled me in the quiet room, 'Forward now, in God's name!' From that moment there never came a thought of doubt into my mind."

And so it came to pass that that country parish actually built a ship of its own, large enough to cross the ocean. It was built at Harburg, the nearest seaport, in full sight of Harburg, where Mr. Oncken and his associates were then busily at work, in 1853. All Hermansburg worked for it, either in helping to make the parts of the vessel, or in providing the provisions and outfit. And through it all the revival did not stop. Souls were converted every week, almost every day. While God's people were working God's Spirit was working. Hundreds of souls from around Hermansburg were born into the kingdom of Christ while that missionary brig was being built at Harburg.

The money that was needed Mr. Harms obtained in answer to prayer. Outside of his own parish he asked no man for a penny. But he told God everything. When all was ready a special excursion train took the glad Hermansburgers to Harburg, where most of them saw their vessel for the first time. She was called the "Candace," after the queen of Ethiopia, Acts 8: 27, because their mission was to be in Ethiopia. A dedication service was held, the remaining preparations made, and then with captain, crew, eight missionary colonists and a cargo of supplies she floated down to Cuxhaven, at the mouth of the river, and then away, 8,000 miles, down the western coasts of Europe and Africa, to the Cape of Good Hope. Then up the east coast of Africa, 2,500 miles, to Zanzibar. But finding no opening by which they might reach the Gallas they returned two-thirds of the way to the Cape, and landed at Natal, among the Zulus. Forty miles inland they bought 6,000 acres of land for $126, and built a cluster of cabins which they called New Hermansburg. Afterwards their territory was increased by purchase and by gifts from the British government until they held in different places 40,000 acres. By 1860 they had eight stations and one hundred missionary settlers, and their influence was felt throughout all southern Africa. And still the revival continued without intermission at home, until by 1869 the converts numbered ten thousand!

Louis Harms died, and was succeeded by his brother Theodore, and he in turn by his son, Rev. Egmont Harms, who is the present director. The parish, finding but little sympathy from the unconverted Lutheran church, withdrew, and are now an independent parish, conducting independent missions in Africa, India, Australia and New Zealand. They are their own society. They have 130 preaching missionaries, 4,800 native members, and an average annual income of $50,000. They have often received in one year over $70,000, but the death of Louis Harms has made a difference. They have met many discouragements but have passed safely through them all. The latest are their losses in the Zulu war of 1883, and the slanders circulated about them at home by their enemies who resented their ecclesiastical independence. Their blessings have been wonderful, and their work abroad still more wonderful. Among the twenty-seven missionary societies of continental Europe, only seven have more native members, only six have larger incomes, and only two have more missionaries than the Hermansburg Missionary Society.—Missionary Paper.

"I AM GOING TO BE A MINISTER."

Being requested to act as substitute for a Sabbath in place of a teacher at the Harrison Street Mission, Chicago, I inquired of the boys in the class what they hoped to become. One after another expressed his hope with some spirit. It was evident that some would be benefited by a guiding hand. There were aspirations that were worthy and some not so commendable. One bright boy thought he should sometime buy a horse and drive him over town.

At last a boy with an open face and expressive eye and about 10 years old said, very seriously and in an undertone: "I am going to be a minister."

The other boys tried very hard to laugh and they poked each other as an aid to it. But like the little hero he was, the consecrated lad was not perturbed in the least. Last Sabbath I saw him at Dr. Goodwin's church sitting near the pulpit as attentive as he could well be. His home is a good long mile from the First Church.

The thought with me is, Do we look hopefully enough among the children for the future proclaimers and defenders of the truth among men? Would not the teachers in the Sabbath-schools do well to turn the attention of the boys to the great work of the ministry; and at least to know and to encourage such as are already thoughtful and aspiring?

A GREAT MAN.

Rev. Dr. Broadus recently related the following incident during a Sabbath-school talk in Detroit:

An old man used to sweep the street-crossings for gratuitous pennies, near the Houses of Parliament, for many years. One day he was absent. Upon inquiry he was found by a missionary ill, in a little attic chamber, barely furnished with cot and stool.

"You are lonely here," the missionary said. "Has any one called upon you?"

"Oh, yes," he replied, "several persons have called—Mr. Gladstone for one. He called and read to me."

"Mr. Gladstone called? And what did he read?"

"He sat on that stool there and read the Bible to me."

What a beautiful position! The greatest statesman in the world, sitting on a stool, in an attic, reading the Word of God to a street sweeper! Great men lose none of their greatness by kindness to God's poor.—Our Church Homes.

POWERFUL LENSES OF ICE.

Last winter quite a little excitement was caused among a party of skaters on the Serpentine river, England, by one of the party making a lens of ice and lighting the pipes of the others. This brings to mind the fact that this curious experiment was first brought before the public by Dr. Scoresby, who, when in the polar regions, to the great astonishment of his companions, who did not understand why the ice did not freeze the polar rays, performed the same remarkable feat. It may also be worthy of remark that Professor Tyndal, when a tutor in the Royal Institution, on several occasions set fire to little heaps of gunpowder with rays from an electric arc concentrated upon the powder by a lens of ice. His explanation was that, although ice absorbs rays of certain waves of light and is gradually melted thereby, other waves do not absorb, and these latter produce the heating effect at the focus of the lens. It is wholly a question of the relative motions of the molecules of frozen water and the motion of the waves of light.—Sel.

A CAT WITH A GREAT HEAD.

There were three cats in a Williamstreet family in Norwich, Conn., and the lady of the house concluded that one was sufficient to do all the business, and an edict of death was passed on the old cat and her kitten. The question of the manner of death was settled and chloroform was purchased. Days passed after the chloroform was in the house before the executioner could muster courage to execute the sentence. To facilitate matters the lady thought that some laudanum added to the cat's milk would produce a stupor that would make the chloroforming more easy. The drug was put in the milk and tendered the old cat. She tasted the food, cast her eyes suspiciously about her and refused to eat. The kitten rushed to the dish to partake of the milk and was violently knocked away by the old cat, who took a corner of a mat and covered over the dish to hide it from the kitten and prevent her from taking the "medicine."

The lady could not believe that the act was intentional on the part of the cat, and uncovered the dish and again tendered the milk to her. She again knocked the kitten from the dish and covered it over more carefully than before. The repetition of the protective act gained the good-will of the lady, and she gave up killing the cats. She cannot satisfy her mind, however, whether the action of the cat was prompted by instinct or reason.—Our Dumb Animals.

TEMPERANCE.

THE DISSENTING OPINION.

In the Supreme Court decision on liquors in original packages, Justice Gray delivered a dissenting opinion in behalf of himself and Justices Harlan and Brewer. It says:

"Common experience has shown that the general and unrestricted use of intoxicating liquors tends to produce idleness, disorder, disease, pauperism, and crime.

"The power of regulating or prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors appropriately belongs, as a branch of the police power, to the Legislatures of the several States, and can be judiciously and effectively exercised by them alone, according to their views of public policy and local need, and cannot practically, if it can constitutionally, be wielded by Congress as part of a national and uniform system.

"The statutes in question were enacted by the State of Iowa in the exercise of its undoubted power to protect its inhabitants against the evils—physical, moral, and social—attending the free use of intoxicating liquors. They are not aimed at inter-State commerce; they have no relation to the movement of goods from one State to another, but operate only on intoxicating liquors within the territorial limits of the State; they include all such liquors without discrimination, and do not even mention where they are made or whence they come.

"They affect commerce much more remotely than laws of a State—the validity of which is unquestioned—authorizing the construction of bridges and dams across navigable waters within its limits, which wholly obstruct the course of commerce and navigation, or than quarantine laws, which operate directly upon all ships and merchandise coming into the ports of the State.

"If the statutes of a State, restricting or prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors within its territory, are to be held inoperative and void as applied to liquors sent or brought from another State and sold by the importer in what are called original packages, the consequence must be that an inhabitant of any State, may under the pretext of inter-State commerce and without license or supervision of any public authority, carry or send into and sell in any or all of the other States of the Union intoxicating liquors of whatever description, in cases or kegs, or even in single bottles or flasks, despite any legislation of those States on the subject, and although his own State should be the only one which had not enacted similar laws. We would require affirmative and explicit legislation on the part of Congress to convince us that it contemplated or intended such a result."

GENERAL DOW ON THE SUPREME COURT.

General Neal Dow is very much exercised over the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States with regard to the importation of liquors in original packages. He said of it: "I was much surprised at the decision, for it was not in harmony with the previous utterances of the justices of the Supreme Court. It ignores entirely the police power of the several States, and the justices of the Supreme Court have always recognized that as having full authority and power in all matters relating to the health, life, and morals of the people. Some of the justices have referred to the fact that navigation and commerce are interfered with, and at times absolutely stopped, by the quarantine regulations, even of cities, by the local police power. Not only are ships stopped, but their crews and passengers are held for days, and even for weeks. The owners of the ships are put to a large expense, not only by the detention of their vessels, but for fumigation. The local police power may seize the entire infected cargo of a ship and destroy it. The local authorities prevent cattle, if sick with an infected disease, from being brought into the State, or if such cattle are brought in they may be killed. The local authorities may arrest passengers, whether by land or sea, if sick of a contagious disease, and put them in hospitals or isolate them in a pesthouse. In short, the police authorities may do whatever the local power deems necessary for the protection of the health, life, and morals of the people and to secure the good order of society, and this right has always been recognized by the Supreme Court of the United States. But this decision of the majority of the members of the Supreme Court ignores entirely that great, controlling principle. This will lead to one very good result. Congress will now feel itself compelled to concede all the powers needed to the States."

In Massachusetts, where there are 70,000 more women than men, there are also seven male idiots to one female, eight male paupers to one woman, and ten male criminals to one woman.

Of 142,342 active members of the National W. C. T. U., Illinois claims 13,504. Only two States stand above her in membership, New York which has 20,604 white ribboners and Pennsylvania with 20,509.

Rev. David A. Day, missionary, stationed near Monrovia, Liberia, writes: I sat on board a boat at one of the prominent African ports, and saw landed on a single Sunday, from two steamers, about 50,000 casks of gin.

Iowa last month paid the final dollar of her State debt, one hundred thousand dollars, and now taxes are to be reduced one-fourth. Decrease of drink, and hence decrease of crime and pauperism, always reduces taxes.—Union Signal.

Mrs. Matilda B. Carse, President of the Chicago Central W. C. T. U. and originator of the project to build a National temperance temple in Chicago, says that the corner-stone of this building will probably be laid on the 4th of July, and hopes that it may be so, in gracious prophecy of the nation's speedy declaration of independence from the tyrant alcohol.

The W. C. T. U. is deriving great encouragement these days from the reports of county conventions that are being held throughout the country. A sample record is that of Los Angeles county, California. In 1885 there were ten unions in this county with a membership of 101; now there are thirty-nine unions, membership, 889. In 1885 there were five organizations for children's work, now there are twenty-seven with a membership of 2,000.

Dr. Emma Brainard Rider, Pundita Ramabai's assistant in her school for girls and high-caste widows at Bombay, has started the circulation of a centennial temperance petition. Eighteen hundred and ninety is the hundredth anniversary of the excise regulation by the English Government in Bombay, which "regulation" has produced the same results as in America. The petition asks Parliament to substitute prohibition for regulation. At the close of the year it is to be sent to the British Women's Temperance Association, to be presented by them to Parliament.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The appointing of the seventy. Vs. 1, 2. Besides his twelve immediate followers, our Lord appointed other seventy to go forth and preach the good news of the kingdom in the towns and villages of Judea. This was a very small number for the whole country—as Pentecost computes, only about one preacher to 100,000 souls—and so our Lord evidently considered it, for he tells them to pray for more laborers. We notice (1) that he sent them by two and two. This would halve their trials while it doubled their power. Eighteen centuries of missionary effort have showed the wisdom of this plan. (2) He sent them as heralds before his face; so every missionary and evangelist of the cross is a herald to announce his coming. (3) The laborers are few. Ninety years ago William Carey was the first foreign Protestant missionary. Now we have about thirty thousand foreign and native preachers. But what are they among the many millions of idolaters? Rev. A. T. Pierson has said that it was perfectly feasible to so organize the foreign missionary work as to reach 100,000,000 of people every year. The world would soon be evangelized if the same amount of energy and will could be put forth by the church which is used every day in business affairs. Miss Ackerman tells of her visiting a heathen woman in China, sunk in the grossest depths of ignorance, and when she read her the story of the creation, and of our Saviour, the poor old woman said, "How strange! how beautiful! I have lived seventy-five years near by. I never heard this before; why did you not tell me before?" It is certainly strange that after eighteen hundred years there should still be millions of people on the earth, to echo her cry, "Why did you not tell us before?"

2. The manner of their going. Vs. 3-11. Every preacher of Jesus Christ must expect to go forth as a lamb among wolves; for though social conditions have altered since our Saviour's time, the same general principles here laid down will still be found to govern all successful missionary or evangelical work. A very popular preacher whom all men praise may well doubt his credentials. The church is silent on great evils because her pastors—they who should lead the van in all reforms—are mainly silent. They are afraid to risk their salaries by preaching against prevailing sin. They cannot bring themselves to live in the plain, simple unworldly fashion of apostolic times. Yet Christ seems to teach in the rules here laid down that any superfluity of this world's goods is a hindrance rather than a help to a preacher of the Gospel, while at the same time the laborer is worthy of his hire, and can claim enough to live on, unpinched by want. We also see very strongly brought out the necessity of house to house visitation. The decline of the pulpit in its power over the masses seems to have kept pace with the decline of pastoral visitation. To sum up: a successful soul winner is free from worldly entanglements, and is as completely absorbed in this one pursuit as the kings of the stock exchange are in money getting.

3. The judgment of those who reject God's messengers. Vs. 12-16. The great sin of the Jews, for which they were finally rejected as a nation, was in refusing to hear that long line of teachers and prophets, culminating in his Son, whom God sent them. To despise his servants, to scorn and reject their message, will bring down as swift and as sure punishment to-day. Yet how often faithful preachers who show an uncompromising front against secret false worship and all prevailing iniquity are thus treated; yet it may be more tolerable for the heathen in the day of judgment than for such opposers in a Christian land.

HELPFUL THOUGHTS FROM PELICOURT.

WHY SHOULD THE LABORERS PRAY?—(1) God is most desirous that laborers should be sent. (2) It is not his fault that there are so few laborers. He is ever stirring men up to labor. (3) Prayer leads those who pray to have the same desires as God himself in reference to the harvest. (4) The injunction is in part equivalent to this. Beseech ye the Lord of the harvest that he may accept you, and thrust you forth into the harvest field. (5) All true workers must pray; it is the natural expression of a true heart in the circumstances. (6) Prayer is God's means of communicating blessings.

PRIVILEGES RIGHTLY OR WRONGLY USED.—(1) Men are judged according to their privileges and opportunities, as well as by their actions. "Unto whomsoever much is given, of him shall much be required." (2) Wrong is always inexcusable, but it is the more inexcusable when done against knowledge and good influences. (3) Therefore we cannot truly judge of another's guilt, unless we not only know the outward act, but the circumstances, influences, and light in which it was performed. (4) Privileges, if not rightly used, tend to harden the heart, and make men less responsive to good influences, than are those who are outwardly worse, but have not resisted so much good. Good soil, though full of weeds, is more hopeful than the desert. A poor eye is better than a good one blinded by the light. (5) Those who resist the strongest influences God can send upon them to make them good, are beyond hope. There is nothing which can reach or save them. If they cannot see by the light of the sun, nothing can make them see. If springtime will not awaken them to life, they are dead forever. If the power of the Holy Spirit and the love of God in Jesus Christ, clearly manifested, does not suffice to change their hearts, there is no hope that they will ever be fit for heaven.

another organization he is a Prelate. In the upper organization he is Grand Prelate. I believe in that organization also they have a General Grand Prelate. We find these organizations not only with their altars and their religious officers, but we find them with prayers printed for use. When years ago I remonstrated with a terribly profane young man for holding the office of chaplain in a Templar lodge, he said: "Why, there isn't anything in the world to do but to stand up and read a prayer off from the card; anybody can do that." We have these organizations not only with their altars, with their chaplains, with their priests, with their prelates, with their prayers, but we find some of them, notably the Masonic institution, with a service of baptism for babies; that repeatedly in years Masons have baptized babes—I don't know into what name, but I suppose some name, perhaps the name of the God of the Grand Lodge above. And we find that the moral teaching, so-called; the prayers which they print, oftentimes putting them into the mouths of godless men, men who drink and swear and dance and ride on the Sabbath every time they are going to the conclaves of these organizations, we find that these produce one effect on the hearts of men; that is, the men who join these organizations for the sake of getting help in business, for the sake of getting relief in sickness, for the sake of having friends, if they should be among strangers—when they have gotten into them they begin to believe that if they are faithful to the organization they are assured of life eternal in the world to come. And men will tell you by the hundred, and men who are evidently sincere in what they say, that they do not recognize the church because their lodge is religion enough for them.

A young man once offered himself for membership in a Presbyterian church for which I was at the time preaching, although not its pastor, and I said to him, looking at the three links on the lapel of his vest: "You are an Odd-fellow?" "Yes, sir." "What do you think of Odd-fellowship?" "I think it is just as good an organization as there is in the world." "You don't think it is as good as the church, do you?" "Yes, I do." "Well, you belong to the Odd-fellows; what are you joining the church for?" "Well, I don't care much about it myself, but my wife wanted to join it and so I thought I would." I said: "Is not the fact that your wife can join the church a point of superiority?" He said: "I don't know but it is, and I'll tell you another good thing about the church; it takes a good deal of money to join the lodge; but a man can join the church, that ain't got a cent." Now, that man honestly believed that for the men who were in the lodge, the lodge was better than the church. There are in this city about

A THOUSAND LODGES.

About 750 of those lodges are composed exclusively of men. If they average only a hundred men in each—and some of them rise to several hundred—there are seventy-five thousand men, all of them over 21 years of age. Seventy-five thousand men in secret societies in Chicago alone, 21 years of age! Now, you take our churches, we have some three hundred. What is the membership of the churches? In the neighborhood of 40,000. What is the proportion of men in that membership? Why, something like one-third, though it will frequently go down to one-fourth, and occasionally you rise to one-half, though that is seldom the case. The membership of the lodges is very likely a hundred thousand men instead of seventy-five thousand, and if every one of the hundred thousand men represent four persons in his home, you there have a population of half a million. And the papers tell us that there are 600,000 people in Chicago who don't go to church at all. What is the reason? Don't these people know what it is to long for safety beyond the grave? Every man and woman of them does. Don't these people feel sad when death comes into the house and robs the cradle or the arm-chair? Every man and woman of them will weep. Don't these people wish to know how a man can be just with God? All of them do. Now, what is the reason that churches are empty when lodges are full? The reason is simply this, that these lodges have made, and are making, men believe that if they are faithful to lodge membership it is all that any man requires. Now, I want to know whether there is any possibility of reaching these men

UNTIL THAT CONFIDENCE IS BROKEN?

Is there any possibility of reaching those men until that confidence is broken? If I am on the deck of the Oregon and you come alongside with your row boat, tossing like an egg-shell on the waters, and say to me: "Hello, there, come over and come down here," and I look over the side, and I say: "What should I come down there for?" You say to me: "The Oregon is going down, there is water in the hold already, the pumps cannot keep it down, it will be only six hours before her deck is under water. Come over here and we will take you over to this pilot ship and take you into port." Now if I believe that the Oregon is not going down, if I believe that the keel of the Oregon is whole, if I believe that I can ride into port on the Oregon, am I going to be such a fool as to climb down the side and go down that rope ladder and into that little boat tossing on the waves? You go to one of these men riding on these stately society ships that has its uniforms and its days of parade, and that gathers in the political offices for its membership, and you hail them and say: "Hello, there, sir!" "Well, what is the matter?" "Come down." "What for?" "This is the church of Jesus Christ." "The church of Jesus Christ is not near as big as our ship." "We want you to come down in our boat." "I am an Odd-fellow, what do I want to leave them for? We are half a million of men, able to help one another, able to vote for one another, able to relieve one another; what do I want to come down for?" "Why, we are the church of Jesus Christ, and if a man does not belong to the church of Jesus Christ, he is a dead man spiritually. Come down here." "Why, we know a great deal better than that; we have got the Bible in our lodge. Didn't you ever read about David and Jonathan and all those fellows? We don't want anything to do with your little bit of a church. It is well enough for women, but we men don't have to come down there at all."

Now, you may talk until you are dumb, but you cannot touch those men unless you can break up the confidence they have in those organizations.

THE LODGE THE WAY TO DEATH AND HELL.

But some one said to me one time, "Well, what harm is there in that? Let the men be saved in the lodge and the old men and the girls and the women be saved in the church; if they all go to one place, isn't that all right?" Well, that would be all right if this big ship could save the men at all. But the trouble with that ship is that there is a hole in her hull and that the sea is coming into the ship, and that every soul on that ship by and by will go down. That ship does not confess the name of Jesus Christ. That Masonic ship takes pains to put the name of Jesus Christ out of the New Testament, and if you know, any of you, of an organization that ever did that in the world except the Masonic, I would like you to name it. I never knew of another organization that took the New Testament and struck the name of Jesus Christ out of it. Generally, Masons satisfy themselves by choosing passages that don't name him. But one time—I don't know what devil was at the elbow of that gentleman—they took a passage of Scripture for the ritual of the seventh degree that contained the name of Jesus Christ, occurring twice, and they struck it out both times. Now, Jesus Christ said if a man wants to go to the Father, he must come by him. He said; "If a man does not enter in by me, but seeks to climb in some other way, he is a thief and a robber." If one denies the Son, he has not the Father, and we who are Christians here believe that he spoke the truth. We don't want our Saviour who has purchased us with his blood charged with falsehood, and if he is charged with falsehood we prefer to stand by the truth which he has uttered and to maintain it in the face of the whole world, if we have to stand as Jesus Christ did, before the bar of Pilate all alone, all alone.

What, then, is the purpose for which we are working? Not for the sake of getting a little yellow metal or green paper which by and by the breath of death is to blow away; not for the sake of getting some little preferment among men for ourselves or for the organization to which we happen to belong; not because we have in our hearts hatred or enmity of any kind against any one of the creatures that God has made to live upon the earth; but because we know that there are eight hundred millions of people in this world who are called pagans, and who hope for salvation

BY SOMETHING BESIDES JESUS CHRIST.

And we know that even in Christian lands, even in our own land, there are millions of people worshipping at these altars where Jesus Christ cannot be named, and we know that these men are satisfied with what these organizations give them. We do not find them in our churches. We do not see them in our prayer rooms. If we ask them to come to the Lamb of God that takes away the sin of the world, they say they have all the religion they want. And these men are our neighbors. The smoke from their chimneys mingles with the smoke from our chimneys and goes up toward God. They walk the same earth that you and I do. Five thousand of them the next Lord's Day will be driving and collecting the fares on these railways in this city. A million of them will be on the steam cars of the United States on the next Lord's Day morning. Thousands, tens of thousands; in the aggregate, millions, of these fellow men of ours, without hope, without God, yet lulled into security by these religious systems which deny Jesus Christ and say to them plainly, "We will not have this man to reign over us."

I once took the ritual of the Royal Arch degree and showed it to a minister of the Gospel whom I knew to be a Royal Arch Mason, and I said to him as we were sitting side by side on the train, "My brother, you are a minister of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, and you profess to believe that the man who does not believe in Jesus Christ as his Saviour from sin, is a dead man. You profess to believe that. Now, look right here, there is an extract. You recognize that passage from the New Testament, and see that the name of the Lord Jesus is taken out? What do you do with that, and how can you be a Mason and know a thing like that?" And he looked up to me and said: "Well, you are a queer fellow." "Well," I said to him, "please tell me, sir, what you do with that Scripture." "Well, there is a good reason for omitting the name of Christ, just there, because there are a great many conscientious men in our organization who would be offended if his name was uttered."

Now, we are not permitted by loyalty to that One who took us out of the horrible pit and miry clay of sin,—we are not permitted to join hands with an organization like that. We are not permitted to be silent in the presence of an organization that can do that; but we are compelled as Christian men and women to bear testimony so long as God shall give us the breath, to Jesus Christ as the only Saviour of men, and we pray that every one of these organizations, little and large, new and old, every one of them which will not know him, which separates men from him, shall be utterly destroyed.

—The annual report of the American Bible Society at the annual meeting Thursday, showed that the cash receipts for general purposes for the year had been $597,693. Also $45,316 had been received for permanent investment. The disbursements were $529,955.

—Dr. C. R. Blackall, well known in Chicago and the West, and who for some years back has been office editor in Philadelphia of the various periodicals of the Baptist Publication Society, was ordained at the First Baptist church, Philadelphia, April 20. Dr. Blackall's life, thus far, mostly in connection with Sunday-school work and literature, has been one of signal usefulness.

—Bishop William Taylor arrived in New York by the steamship Alaska, April 21. He says he is in good health, and has not come to America to rest, but "to work for God and Africa." He visited Chicago last week and addressed a large audience in the First M. E. church.

—Mr. Moody will this season introduce an entirely new feature into his summer meetings at Northfield, Mass. He has secured a number of the best-known preachers in this country and England, who will speak every day that the season lasts. Among those who are expected to be present is Rev. Dr. John McNeill, the celebrated Presbyterian divine of London. The latter was, until a short time since, an obscure preacher in Edinburgh, but by his forceful eloquence he has made a name for himself second only to that of Spurgeon.

—The First Baptist church of Trenton, N. J., have enjoyed a gracious revival, and the pastor, Rev. E. Lucas, has baptized fifty-nine people.

—The national conventions of the young people's societies of the United Presbyterian church held at Monmouth a week's session. Prominent divines from all parts of the country were present, together with about four hundred delegates. The opening exercises were conducted by President J. B. McMichael, of Monmouth College. Addresses were made by J. MacClelland, of Chicago, and Rev. J. M. Fulton, of Allegheny, Pa.

—The venerable Charles Butler, of New York, has endowed the Union Theological Seminary and the University of New York in the sum of $100,000 each.

—Rev. H. C. Leland, late of Rock Island, has accepted the urgent call of the Baptist church in Mendota. He will pursue a course of special study at Morgan Park Seminary. Bro. Leland was active against the secret fraternities when a student in Chicago University.

—Returns from 193 presbyteries show that 127 have voted for revision of the Presbyterian confession, 61 against, and five have taken no action on the question. Twenty presbyteries are yet to be heard from.

—Mr. Moody closed his labors in New York city April 30, and the next day left for Chicago, where he preached on the Sabbath. Among the New York churches favored with his labors were the Mount Morris and Mariners' Temple. Rev. J. F. Avery was greatly encouraged at the Temple by the services held there. He is soon to be supplemented by five missionaries who are to come this month from Dr. Guinness's school in London, and who will give their whole time, at his expense, to the work on this difficult and yet important field.

—The British and Foreign Bible society has during the eighty-one years of its beneficent existence issued from its London house alone 26,000,000 complete Bibles, nearly 32,000,000 New Testaments and 12,845,000 portions of the Bible—altogether 72,500,000 books.

—In consequence of the murder of a Turk at Selino, in Crete, forty-two Christians have been arrested, with the view of compelling them to reveal the name of the murderer. In a conflict at Kansano between Turks and Christians many were killed on both sides.

—Senior Emilio Castelar, the distinguished Spanish orator, will make an extended journey through the Orient in search of material for a life of Christ.

—For seventy years the Moravians have labored among lepers, and not one of the twenty-five who have consecrated themselves to the work has taken the disease.

—Rev. Sam. Jones will be in Richmond, Va., some time early in June. The committee having charge of building the tabernacle are perfecting their plans, and all will be ready at the appointed time. This tabernacle will seat 11,000 people, and will be merely built for the benefit of Sam. Jones, and after he has finished his series of meetings it will be pulled down.

—The colored Baptists of Missouri have started a denominational school with temporary location at Independence. About 180,000 colored people are in Missouri, with 300 Baptist churches.

—Bodies of Turkish troops have pillaged Christian churches and insulted Christians in the province of Candia. At the request of foreign consuls Chakir Pasha,

HOME AND HEALTH.

THE INCONVENIENT SPRING.

Oh, the bobolink is merry,
And the robin full of glee,
And a bluebird's nest is building
In the gnarled old apple tree,
And the air is full of music; yet I find on looking back
That the sounds which herald spring-time
To my dull, prosaic ear,
Are the cheerful carpet-beaters,
As they whack both far and near,
And the sharp, staccato movement of a hammer on a tack.

Oh, the woods are full of wild flowers,
Though the house be full of dust,
And I'd rather far go pick them
Than to fight with "moth and rust,"
For the world is young and fragrant, and the air is soft and clear,
But I really am "too busy,"
'Tis the tiresome old refrain,
And I wish it were convenient,
(Though the wish may be profane),
For the spring to come at any other season of the year.

A WASTE OF HEALTH.

Yes, we all value health, and yet how we waste it! There is no way in which we do not disregard the rules that compass it. We read, for example, in the dark, and in bed, and in the cars, instead of waiting for light and quiet; we sit all day at work, when we should vary the day with exercise; we eat in a hurry, as if we feared each morsel was to be snatched from us, when we should eat slowly and invoke the powers of digestion; we steal from sleep the hours that belong to that benign restorer of tired nature; we delight our gustatory nerves over banquets which millstones could not grind to digestion, and draughts which inflame the stomach, and set the brain on fire, and bring the body to naught. And when all is done we go about complaining that there is no health in us, and we blame fate and the divine laws when we have ourselves to blame and our ancestors.—Harper's Weekly.

A SANITARY HOUSE.

It will stand facing the sun, on a dry soil, in a wide, clean, amply-sewered, substantially-paved street, over a deep,
thoroughly ventilated and lighted cellar.
The floor of the cellar will be cemented, the walls and ceiling plastered and thickly white-washed with lime every year, that the house may not act as a chimney to draw up into its chambers micro-organisms from the earth. Doors and windows, some of which extend from floor to ceiling, will be as abundant as circumstances permit, and will be adjusted to secure, as much as may be, thorough currents of air. The outside walls, if of wood or brick, will be kept thickly painted, not to shut out penetrating air, but for the sake of dryness. All inside walls will be plastered smooth, painted, and, however unesthetic, varnished.
Mantels will be of marble, slate, iron, or, if of wood, plain, and whether natural, painted or stained, varnished. Interior woodwork, including floors, will all show plain surfaces and be likewise treated. Movable rugs, which can be shaken daily in the open air—not at doors or out of windows, where dust is blown back into rooms—will cover the floors. White linen shades, which will soon show the necessity of washing, will protect the windows. All furniture will be plain, with cane seats, perhaps, but without upholstery. Mattresses will be covered with oiled silk, blankets, sheets and spreads, no comforts or quilts, will constitute the bedding. Of plumbing, there shall be as little as necessary, and all there is shall be exposed, as is the practice now. The inhabited rooms shall be heated only with open fires, the cellar and halls by radiated heat, or, better, by hot-air furnace, which shall take its fresh air from above the top of the house and not from the cellar itself or the surface of the earth, where micro-organisms most abound. There will be "housecleaning" twice a year. Put into this house industrious, intelligent and informed men and women—absolute essential conditions—and as much as will be done at present may be done to pre-

Headache, and Constipation—find a safe and certain relief in Ayer's Pills. In all cases where a cathartic is needed, these Pills are recommended by leading physicians.

Dr. J. E. Hastings, of Baltimore, says:
"Ayer's Pills are the best cathartic and aperient within the reach of my profession."

Dr. John W. Brown, of Oceana, W.
Va., writes: "I have prescribed Ayer's Pills in my practice, and find them excellent. I urge their general use in families."

"For a number of years I was afflicted with biliousness which almost destroyed my health. I tried various remedies, but nothing afforded me any relief until
I began to take Ayer's Pills."—G. S.
Wanderlich, Scranton, Pa.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for the past thirty years, and am satisfied I should not be alive to-day if it had not been for them. They cured me of dyspepsia when all other remedies failed, and their occasional use has kept me in a healthy condition ever since."—T. P. Brown, Chester, Pa.

"Having been subject, for years, to constipation, without being able to find much relief, I at last tried Ayer's Pills, and deem it both a duty and a pleasure to testify that I have derived great benefit from their use. For over two years past I have taken one of these Pills every night before retiring. I would not willingly be without them."—G. W.
Bowman, 26 East Main st., Carlisle, Pa.

"Ayer's Pills have been used in my family upwards of twenty years, and have completely verified all that is claimed for them. In attacks of piles, from which I suffered many years, they afforded me greater relief than any medicine I ever tried."—Thomas F. Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

FARM NOTES.

THE CARE OF FRUIT TREES.

Protect the Roots.—In transplanting or handling trees, recollect that every minute of exposure to the air injures them. If a tree cannot be planted at once, make a hole and bury the roots. Those who go to a near nursery and take home their own trees, should puddle them. Make a hole in the ground a foot deep and as large as needed. Have a plentiful supply of water. Pour water into the hole and stir up the soil until a thin mud is formed. Draw the roots of the trees through this, until they, even the smallest, are completely covered with mud; then sprinkle dry soil over them to dry them off. This "puddling," or "grouting" of the roots, as the English call it, is useful not only for trees, but for plants of all kinds.

Pasturing the Orchard.—It is a singular fact the orchard is the only field that farmers, as a general thing, expect to yield more than one crop. There is so much apparently unoccupied ground between the trees, that there is a desire to utilize it with some crop. When the trees are in bearing they need all the soil. While the trees are young, a manured crop may be grown between the rows. The best treatment of an established orchard is to sow it to clover and pasture young pigs upon it. By this the fruit, soil and pigs will be benefited.

Staking Newly Planted Trees.—In exposed localities trees are apt to get a "list" in the direction of the prevailing winds. If the trees are small and properly pruned at planting, there will be less trouble than with large trees, which must be staked. The safest way is to drive two stakes at a little distance, upon each side of the tree, and secure the trunk to both stakes by means of a straw band, or soft rope, so as not to chafe.

Injured Trees.—Nursery trees, when sent a long distance, may be injured by drying, and when received the bark will be shrivelled, and the tree apparently dead. Such trees may usually be saved. Open a trench large enough to receive them, and lay in the trees, root and branch, and sprinkle in the soil among the branches, laying the trees one upon another, taking care to have the soil come in contact with even the smallest branches. The bark will gradually absorb moisture from the soil, and in a few days become plump and apparently as bright and as fresh as ever.

Started Trees.—If trees are transported in warm weather, especially if packed moist, the buds will push, and when unpacked will be found to have white, weak shoots, several inches long. The only way to save such trees is to cut back every branch to a good bud that is still dormant.—American Agriculturist for May.

Do your shortening back among your young trees before the buds begin to start.

Give your fruit trees a good soil. They cannot feed and thrive on nothing.

Big and showy pears are most commonly borne on young and thrifty trees, not on old ones.

"Chickens for Use and Beauty," is the title of a profusely illustrated article by H. S. Babcock, in the forthcoming May Century.

Grafting is an old art not sufficiently appreciated. By it any old fruit tree that is healthy, but unproductive, can be soon changed in its character. Thousands of farmers do not know how to graft, though it is easily learned.

A fruit tree should never be propped up to keep the limbs from breaking down with their load. Instead, pick off the poorest specimens, and don't show greed by allowing the tree to over bear. Thousands of trees are ruined in this way.

Jersey Island, the place from which we obtain the favorite Jersey cow, is a small spot of land. If squared, it is 6½ miles each way. Yet this little island has a population of 60,000 human beings, has over 12,000 cattle, and has had that number for the last twenty years, for the census of 1861 gives 12,037. And yet they export on an average, annually, 2,000 head. Roughly speaking, on the island they manage to support one head of kine to every two acres, while in England there is only one head to every ten acres.

Wash the poultry roosts occasionally with kerosene or crude oil. This prevents the accumulation of lice in the poultry houses, and the fumes of this pungent oil penetrate into every crack, and permeate the feathers of the fowls at night, thus protecting them, to a great extent, from the ravages of their insect enemies.

Milk set in pans in a pantry at a temperature of sixty to sixty-five degrees will raise more cream and butter than milk set in cooler pails at a temperature of fifty-six degrees, says J. N. Muncey. Milk to which fifty per cent of water has been added, will raise more cream when set at fifty-five degrees, than the same to which no water has been added.

We are glad to know that at least one man is hopeful for the farmer. Mr. C. Wood Davis, of Kansas, who had an article in the last number of the Forum to explain why the farmer is not prosperous, follows it with another article to show the increase of farming areas, and that consequently at no distant day the agricultural products of the United States will be more than the people of the United States will require for their own consumption.

J. H. Andre says: "Barbed wire for fences will, I believe, within a few years be looked upon as a relic of barbarism. The damage done by it in five years, if added to first cost, would build a first-class woven wire fence, which would be more easily seen by stock, more durable, and less liable to be broken. Or, if single wire is used, use larger wire without barbs. This would save royalty and injury, and probably six large ones could be used as cheaply as four barbed ones."

The low price of beef and dairy products is causing more attention to be paid to sheep, which in consequence are growing scarcer. There is another reason in the great amount of labor a herd of cows make, whether their milk is sold direct, or made into butter and cheese. The old English rule was that the keep of eight sheep equaled that of one cow. Sheep are, however, more delicate feeders, and will not thrive on coarse stalks as well as cattle. They are also close feeders in summer, and on old pastures live where a herd of cattle would starve. On the other hand, sheep in winter will not eat the butts of cornstalks as closely as cattle.

$10,000 FOUND IN AN ASH BARREL.

A New York rag-picker is reported to have found $10,000 in greenbacks in an ash barrel. This was a rare piece of good luck, but how much more fortunate is the sufferer from consumption who learns that, although the doctors may have pronounced his case hopeless, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will cure him. Consumption is a scrofulous disease of the lungs. The "Discovery," which is the most potent blood-purifier of the age, strikes right at the root of the evil and there is no resisting it, if taken in time and given a fair trial. In the cure of all scrofulous and other blood taints, no matter from what cause arising, scalp diseases, old sores and swellings, it absolutely has no equal.

Thoroughly cleanse and enrich the blood, by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits and bodily vigor and health will be established.

For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Bronchitis, Asthma, Severe Coughs, and kindred affections, it is an efficient remedy.

"Golden Medical Discovery" is the only blood and lung remedy, sold by druggists, and guaranteed by its manufacturers, to do all that it is claimed to accomplish, or money paid for it will be promptly refunded.

WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Manufacturers, No. 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

$500 OFFERED for an incurable case of Catarrh in the Head by the proprietors of DR. SAGE'S CATARRH REMEDY.

SYMPTOMS OF CATARRH.—Headache, obstruction of nose, discharges falling into throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; eyes weak, ringing in ears, deafness, difficulty of clearing throat, expectoration of offensive matter; breath offensive; smell and taste impaired, and general debility. Only a few of these symptoms likely to be present at once. Thousands of cases result in consumption, and end in the grave.

By its mild, soothing, antiseptic, cleansing, and healing properties, Dr. Sage's Remedy cures the worst cases. This infallible remedy does not, like the poisonous irritating snuffs, "creams" and strong caustic solutions with which the public have long been humbugged, simply palliate for a short time, or drive the disease to the lungs, as there is danger of doing in the use of such nostrums, but it produces perfect and permanent cures of the worst cases of Chronic Catarrh, as thousands can testify. "Cold in the Head" is cured with a few applications. Catarrhal Headache is relieved and cured as if by magic. It removes offensive breath, loss or impairment of the sense of taste, smell or hearing, watering or weak eyes, and impaired memory, when caused by the violence of Catarrh, as they all frequently are. By druggists, 50 cents.

Ex-Governor Andrew Shuman, of the Evening Journal, one of the best known of Illinois' statesmen editors, died shortly before midnight, Monday, at Wheeler's Hotel, No. 18 Quincy street.

At the LaGrande Hotel a farmer and his wife, the latter supposed to be insane, were overcome by escaping gas. The husband died, and the wife is not expected to recover.

STORMS.

Several violent storms in the form of tornadoes occurred in different parts of north Missouri Friday and Saturday, and a large amount of property was destroyed and several persons killed. In Harrison county a number of houses and barns were demolished, and a large amount of farm property destroyed.

A terrible cyclone passed over the southern part of Venango county, Pa., Saturday evening at about 5 o'clock. Two people—Noah Jackson and his wife—were killed outright, and a large number of persons dangerously injured. The storm was general throughout the county, but the deadly cyclone was only about 300 feet wide and extended about twenty-five miles.

Oil Spring, Pa., was visited by a cloud burst and cyclone about 11 p. m. Saturday. Houses, barns, bridges, oil-well rigs and gas lines are in ruins. At East Sandy, about eight miles away, the residence of Wm. Nunnemaker was blown down, burying the entire family in the ruins. Mr. and Mrs. Nunnemaker are seriously injured, and their children will die of their injuries. The tornado struck Akron, O., sweeping through the town. Seventy-five buildings were damaged by the wind, and not one in the line of the tornado escaped. Uprooted trees are counted by the score. Many that are blown down are from one to two feet in diameter. Of the eighteen persons injured all will probably recover.

COUNTRY.

During a circus performance at Lima, O., Friday night, several cow-boys rode in on horseback with lassos which they threw about a colored man. It was intended to let go the rope as soon as the lasso fell over his body, but the rope became entangled, and the horse, frightened, dashed around the ring, dragging the man around several times before the animal could be stopped. The victim will probably die, his skull being badly fractured.

A freight train on the Milwaukee railroad dashed into a herd of horses near Andover, N. D., killing eight of them, wrecking the train, and fatally scalding Engineer Joe Dixon.

A destructive cyclone passed two miles north of Blythedale, Mo., Friday, completely demolishing at least a dozen residences and as many barns and outbuildings. The family of Henry Young were all injured. Mrs. Young will probably die.

The bill to abolish capital punishment in New York was killed Tuesday, the Senate Judiciary Committee voting that it be indefinitely postponed.

As a freight train on the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe railroad was crossing a bridge a few miles east of Wellington, Kas., Wednesday evening, the locomotive boiler exploded. John Mack, the engineer, was crushed and scalded to death. The fireman, name unknown, was scalded and mangled, and his recovery is doubtful. The force of the explosion destroyed the bridge, and sixteen cars of cattle were precipitated into the creek, fifteen feet below.

The Iowa Supreme Court, in a recent decision, expressed the opinion that girls who habitually gad about the streets late at night have no valid claim on the courts for redress if they are ruined.

The school committee of Providence, R. I., Friday night adopted a revision of its by-laws which banished the Bible and devotional exercises from the city schools and restricts the application of corporal punishment to cases in which the parents' consent is obtained.

J. S. Harriman is trying to walk across the continent from Wabash, Ind., to San Francisco, in sixty-five days. He makes about seventy miles a day.

Five bodies of the Johnstown flood victims were found Tuesday by workmen in the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Wards. Two of them were mother and child, clasped in each others' arms. The force searching for the dead will be increased.

United States Commissioner Fitzgerald decided at Buffalo, Wednesday, that three Chinamen, arrested for smuggling, and having come to the United States in violation of the law, must go back to Canada, whence they came.

Wednesday night, at Preston, N. Y., the Chenango county poor-house and insane asylum was destroyed by fire. Many insane and idiot women perished in the flames, the number being variously stated at between thirteen and thirty. It was reported that six bodies could be seen slowly burning.

FOREIGN.

The Pope is said to feel deeply chagrined over the failure to establish regular diplomatic relations with England.

Ten thousand families of German birth or extraction have emigrated from Russia during the last two years. Many of these emigrants have been officially aided to leave, so strong is the desire to rid the country of Germans.

Grave peculations have been discovered in the customs department in Buenos Ayres. The revenue lost by the government by embezzlements is estimated to have reached the enormous sum of $10,000,000 annually.

The report of the occupation of Kilwa, East Africa, by the Germans says that Major Wissmann made an attack from the south, and that two blacks were killed before the Germans entered the place. On the march to Kilwa the expedition had a number of engagements with Arabs and repeatedly defeated them. Major Wissmann is making preparations to commence pursuit of the Arabs who fled from Kilwa.

Fifty-two anarchists have been arrested at Barcelona, Spain. Documents seized at their residences reveal plans for destroying railways with dynamite and for setting fire to factories.

The Peether Lloyd says it has learned that the labor revolt was the work of a new international union founded during the congress at Paris, which passed secret resolutions on this matter. The leaders of the union, it says, are unknown, but

PAGAN COUNTERFEITS IN THE Christian Church. A pamphlet of 52 pages, by Chas. A. S. Temple.

The following from Rev. H. H. Hinman shows his estimate of its contents:

"I have read with great interest 'Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church' by Chas. A. S. Temple. I regard the subject discussed as important, and its presentation both able and timely. There is a most manifest drift in all our Protestant denominations towards unauthorized ritualism and the substitution of human inventions in place of the simplicity of the Gospel, as given by Christ and his apostles. In calling attention to this tidal wave of formalism, the author has conferred a lasting benefit on the church as of Protestantism."

Stanley, the explorer, is being feasted and entertained so extravagantly in England that his life is said to be in greater danger than from the fevers, hardships and savages of central Africa. It is said that the last expedition, with its three years of banishment in swamps and jungles with wild beasts and wilder men, has greatly changed his whole appearance and habit. He seems to be indifferent to all else but the heart of Africa. Nothing else interests him. He never laughs and the elasticity of his nature has gone, though he is not in ill health. He is, in fact, a man of one idea. Africa is his hobby.

The Grand Army lodges of this city have for years been hoping to secure one-half of a large public building projected for Dearborn Park near the lake in this city. The building was first intended for the public library, when the demand of the order seemed likely to divert it from its original purpose. The proposition is now before the city council, and the committee has stricken out the clause providing for lodge rooms which would soon fall into the hands of the Sons of Veterans order. The law, it appears, is explicit that no building shall be placed on the ground, and legal right to occupy it even for a public library will be contested and perhaps defeated.

The speech of the Hon. Ben Butterworth on the McKinley tariff bill, in which he pleaded for reciprocal free trade with Canada, and quoted Abraham Lincoln and U. S. Grant as advocates of the principle, may not make him popular with the Republican party, but it showed an independence of thought and a true moral courage that should commend him to the good opinion of all citizens whose patriotism rises above party dictation. We have taken the first important step towards securing international arbitration between all the governments of the Americas. The next step in the progress of Christian civilization should be reciprocal free-trade for the continent. Neither Canada nor South America produce anything against which we need protection. The free interchange of commodities would be a mutual advantage. It would greatly enlarge our commerce and open an important market for our surplus products, both of the factory and of the farm.

Mr. Gladstone has been understood as in favor of a restricted sale of intoxicating liquor in England, but in the House of Commons last Thursday he sustained Sir Wilfrid Lawson in his opposition to the licensing question. Sir Wilfrid said: "The country had hitherto pensioned men for killing enemies of the nation. The bill under discussion would pension those who were daily active in killing their fellow countrymen." Mr. Gladstone gave the government advocate credit for sincerity in desiring to lessen the evils of the liquor trade; but the means proposed were utterly futile and extremely dangerous. Public opinion was fast rising against the liquor traffic, and the liquor party should remember the power of that opinion to overthrow them.

Hon. Richard Vaux, the Democratic candidate to succeed Samuel J. Randall as Representative from Pennsylvania, has, according to the Cincinnati Enquirer, as his chief recommendations, that he is seventy-four years old, once danced with the youthful Victoria, since Queen of England and Empress of India, and is a Freemason of high degree. His age, if he retains his mental vigor, is not an insuperable objection. Gladstone is older. But what dancing with an English-German girl has to do with fitness for national legislation it would be hard to tell. It would be still more difficult to show that familiarity with the horse-play and the blasphemies of the lodge will fit a man for guardianship of our public interests. Mr. Colden, once Mayor of New York, and himself a seceder from Masonry, wrote, "I know of some Masons who became distinguished men, but I never knew a great man that ever became a Mason."

Elijah P. Lovejoy, the martyred Abolitionist of 1834, was buried in Alton. He, as well as his more illustrious brother Owen, were well known by men now living to have been confirmed opposers of the secret lodge. But in the city of St. Louis there is a lodge of Sons of Veterans named after the martyr in mockery of his convictions. On the Sabbath day, May 11, this secret lodge took the train for Alton, had a public dinner, formed a procession, marched to the cemetery, and had a speech from an old colored man over the grave of a faithful Christian minister, who in life would have severely denounced such a desecration of the Lord's day. The grave was decorated with flowers; and the procession broke up well-pleased with the performance, and satisfied that in this manner they were honoring the man who freely gave his life for his convictions. How shall men be made to see that instead of honoring such a name they mock and insult it by such ceremonies; and instead of perpetuating the principles of Lovejoy, they are most surely obliterating them?

It seems that there is at least one representative Scandinavian newspaper in America that is not antagonistic to the Bennett School Law. The North, printed at Minneapolis in the interests of Americans of Scandinavian birth or descent, and printed in the language of the United States, is this paper. Its editor recently sent letters of inquiry to all the Scandinavian clergymen in the State of Wisconsin and in the city of Minneapolis, and also to a number of others holding prominent positions in colleges and theological seminaries, established and maintained by Americans of Scandinavian birth or descent, in other localities, asking their opinion of the Bennett Law. Contrary to what might have been expected by those accepting the misrepresentations of some of the German papers, the replies were such as any loyal American would make, as appears in the following paragraph from the issue of The North in which the various replies are printed: "Our public counsels are divided enough already; we are hampered by questions of nationality, creed and color to such an extent that it seems little less than criminal to introduce a national element into a movement based on a moral principle of universal application. Scandinavian-Americans cannot engage in politics even of a high moral character, as Scandinavians merely. If true to this country, they must merge their national individuality into the homogeneity of American citizenship, and act as and with Americans."

THE PATRONS OF INDUSTRY.

BY REV. JOEL MARTIN.

The above is the name of a secret society operating mostly among farmers, and gaining considerable strength in Michigan. Whether or not it has commenced operations to any considerable extent in other States I do not know. I think it had its origin in Michigan.

Its pretenses are that its members can purchase goods much cheaper than others. I think it does not undertake to operate stores of its own to any considerable extent, but makes arrangements with certain dealers to furnish goods to those presenting a certificate of membership in the institution at reduced rates from the regular prices to other customers. In most cities and villages some dealers can be found to enter into such an agreement.

But other, and regular customers, seeing the injustice of this, protest against it, and in some instances withdraw their patronage from such dealers. Thus agitation, division and hard feelings are engendered. Some of the best and most honorable dealers have, after entering into such a contract, felt impelled to cancel it. Much excitement is produced by the operations of this society. In some instances wholesale dealers refuse sales to the retail trade which grants special favors to this secret order.

Many seem to think its ultimate object is of a political nature. Certain it is, it has some political phases. In some places where it has considerable strength it put up tickets of its own at the spring elections, and in a few instances was successful in electing its candidates to office.

I have no doubt it will soon spread to other States. I have, of course, only outlined its plan of working. As a business enterprise, I think it will, in the end, be found to be a deception. Many excellent men and families are at first drawn into it. Some within the circle of my acquaintance have already, after joining and belonging a short time, withdrawn from it.

No one disputes the right or expediency of the farming community organizing for mutual helpfulness in an honorable and legitimate way, but why tack on this secrecy? There must be a design somewhere. To join such an institution is virtually to consent to all forms of secret societies, so far as the secrecy part is concerned. It is the almost unanimous decision of communities, when deciding deliberately, that secret societies are, to say the least, a useless burden to society. Then why encourage their formation and perpetuity by joining even one of them, however mild may be its form of secrecy?

SOME SOCIAL PROBLEMS.

BY REV. A. B. CURTIS.

There can be no doubt that it is an advance toward civilization when a barbarous tribe abandons the habits of a merely herbivorous animal and becomes a tribe of warriors and hunters. Of course this could not yield all its advantages until after the discovery of fire. When fire was first discovered we know not, but we find that the very low tribes all make use of it, both to cook their food and warm themselves in winter. But even with these tribes of people, such as our Teutonic ancestors, previous to their adopting the civilization of the Greeks and Romans, there was as yet no wealth. They did not pretend to keep a store of food ahead for future use. There was as yet no medium of exchange. They have possession of the land. But they own it as a hunting-ground, not as a soil out of which they must wrestle their living. When an animal is slain, it is dragged to camp and at once becomes, as it were, the property of the tribe. All things are in common. The strong eat their fill, and the remainder is left for the young and the weak. When one tribe encroaches upon the territory of another there is no law to go to for redress. It is a question that must be settled by war. The strongest tribe always chooses the best hunting-grounds. And they are slow to heed the advice in the line of Hiawatha—

"Why, then, will you hunt each other?"

I suppose it was over-population and the scarcity of wild animals that at last drove the barbarous tribes of Europe and Asia to domesticate certain animals with a view to the easier production of the necessities of life.

There is in this early stage of society an equality of possessions that is amazing. Abraham is rich, but his servants are poor, very poor. They are given a fair living while they live, but all the increase of the flocks and herds goes into the coffers of the patriarch. Slavery of the oriental type is simply our state of affairs carried to extreme. Now the poor man is the tool of the rich; then he was the slave. Then the poor man was enslaved for debt, and placed where neither he nor his sons could gain their independence. Now the poor man, because he has no influence, must consent to work for his daily bread, earning just enough for the barest necessities, while his employer makes all the profits. But in those days it was useless to attempt to horde wealth. The rich man could best use his wealth to increase his flock on the one hand, and to feed well his slaves and servants on the other. For thus they would come to love him as their master, and would fight to protect his property when it was endangered. No doubt many patriarchs were prone to allow too little to their servants for their support. But from the Bible history the very fact that the slaves never revolted as did those of Greece and Rome, would lead us to infer that, on the whole, the condition of the Hebrew slave was far superior to that of the enslaved of other peoples.

At length the population increases to such an extent that once more there is famine. Then it is the people are forced to give up their flocks and turn their attention to the tilling of the soil. In Hebrew history again we have a hint of the change. There was a famine among the herdsmen of Canaan. They went to Egypt for food. Not mutton and beef, but corn was brought back. Then follows the long period of bondage. And when the children of Israel return to the land of Canaan the soil is divided among them. They went away shepherds; they came back farmers. As shepherds the people had to wander about with their flocks in search of pasture. They had no fixed abiding place. Their "house of worship" was a movable tabernacle. But now they are going to be tied, each family, to a certain piece of the soil. There will be permanence in the social relations. There will be a husband and a wife; there will be a home where children are nourished. Here we can begin to see something like civilization.

AGITATION BY MAIL.

BY "RAY RAND."

In a government of civil freedom and equal rights every citizen may do some good and wield an influence for the improvement of society. No man liveth to himself in a community like the United States. The ancient prophet declared that they who turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars. Right influences go on and on. No proper effort for human liberty is ever lost. A single seed of truth produces ten, ten a hundred, a hundred a million. He then who endeavors to help his fellow men to higher, nobler, grander lives, is both a patriot and a philanthropist.

You, kind reader, may not wield the pen of a ready writer, neither be a fluent speaker, nor yet be able to leave your business or calling and go out for active work and face evil elements in the field, but you can do grand service for God and your country. Others have spent years of active contact with and study of the movements now agitating the public and that are so momentous and far-reaching for the weal or woe of our nation. Through the heat of discussion, the flames of fierce opposition, the hot fire of criticism, and oftentimes bitter persecution they have been schooled for the work in hand. The experience of daily encounter, a thorough and exhaustive knowledge of their subject, versed in all the tactics of the enemy, and with their souls eager for the fray, is it any wonder their pens are sharp pointed and their words cut like swords (Rev. 1: 16) as they arraign derelict churches and time-serving parties. For them the cringing apostate, cowardly professor and political demagogue have little love indeed. Sophistry, subterfuge and error dissolve at the approach of those battle-scarred reformers—veterans of a thousand mental, moral and political encounters. Skillful in debate, watchful of every move of the enemy, cool, self-reliant and courageous, they are a terror to evil doers and a praise to them that do well. The greater the cause the grander the workers that push it successfully forward. Small minds and weak moral natures cannot carry forward stupendous issues. It requires discernment, iron will and fixed purpose.

God measures a soul by its aspirations, ambitions and efforts for good. The mechanic may be a greater American than the President; the humble washerwoman a nobler daughter of the Republic than the mistress of the White House. These humbler citizens may serve their day and generation more acceptably than many of position, prestige and wealth. In this day of fast mails and cheap literature, he who cannot write or speak for the public, can, by judicious distribution of patriotic papers and able tracts through the postoffice, indoctrinate a neighborhood, change the sentiment of a county or defeat the election of a candidate. He may reach the pastors, editors and influential families at their fireside.

Especially is this a reading age for the young men and women, the boys and the girls. The public school teachers and the youth, they are the hope of the Republic. Select the brightest, the best and the most convincing literature and order it to them direct by mail. Watch the effects, keep your own counsel and adroitly mould the character of your future neighbors, voters and law-makers. We want more patriotism and less partyism; more statesmen and fewer demagogues and politicians; more intelligence and less ignorance. Reader, are you ready to join in disseminating the truth? How much can you, how much will you give monthly or quarterly to spread the principles of righteousness and good government?

THE TRUTH IS ETERNAL.

BY VICTORIA ALEXANDRA BUCK.

"For the word of the Lord is right; and all his works are done in truth." Psa. 33: 4.

The truth will triumph. Infidels may sneer,
And atheists scoff, yet wherefore should we care?
He bore the scorn of multitudes when here;
What He endured can we not do and dare!
Aye, though we bow beneath the chastening rod,
'Twill triumph, oh! my God!

The truth will triumph. Like a blazing star,
We grasp it, hold it (how the spirit thrills!)
Our feet upon the Rock, our eyes afar,
Upon the splendor of the heavenly hills.
By those strong heights on which our fathers trod,
'Twill triumph, oh! my God!

The truth will triumph. Aye, it is like gold.
The more 'tis rubbed the brighter it will shine.
Down the eternal ages 'tis enrolled
In germs of light, enduring and divine.
The fountains flash, green is the springing sod,—
'Twill triumph, oh! my God!

The truth will triumph. Aye, it will! the blue
Of yon bright heaven never changes, so
The truth must be eternal. Then anew
Unfurl thy banners while the bugles blow.
Hark to the thrilling drum-beat! from the sod
We triumph, oh! my God!

The truth will triumph. Aye, and soon we'll hear
The last reveille sounding; morning breaks
Upon our raptured vision—far and near
The sun's red lances rout the mists, while wakes
The sleeping camp of soldiers. From the sod
We triumph, oh! my God!

NO ROOM FOR JESUITISM IN AMERICA.

LETTER OF REV. JOHN LEE, PASTOR M. E. CHURCH, LOCKPORT, ILL.

Though I preached yesterday, yet I am quite sick to-day. The doctor says I have an attack of influenza. To be prevented from attending the conference* is a great disappointment to me. The result of my reading is that I am thoroughly convinced that Jesuitism is a secret, oath-bound, political organization, which every government, for its own protection, ought to suppress. Jesuitism, or the Roman Catholic church as it now exists, teaches that "the authority of the state must be braved, human affections must be disregarded, life must be sacrificed." My authority for this assertion is not Bishop Vincent, who, for his recent patriotic utterances, has been denounced in anything but elegant language by Cardinal Gibbons's paper, the Catholic Mirror; nor is it Bishop Coxe, who declares "the rising generation must meet this (Jesuit invasion) as the burning issue of their day;" but it is the New York Catholic World.

Recent movements in Wisconsin show the hand of the Jesuit. Romanism, ultramontane Romanism, is making rapid encroachments in our Republic. Emile De Laveleye said, two years ago, in a communication to me, "I think Rome's encroachments in the United States ought to be carefully watched and resisted." With this opinion of the distinguished Belgian publicist, every American, who is a thoughtful observer of the times, will agree. The Jesuits, a secret, political-religious society, who have been expelled from almost every country in Europe, who were suppressed by Pope Clement XIV., who were charged by Cardinal De Bernis, and also by the Bishop of Pistoria, a nephew and heir of the general of the Jesuit body, with poisoning that pontiff, and who had been restored to all their former rights and privileges by the present Pope, are, as Mr. Gladstone designated them when he was in the zenith of his intellectual powers, "the deadliest foe that mental and moral liberty has ever known." Spain, Roman Catholic Spain, banished the sons of Loyola. Shall the land which Bancroft pronounces "most thoroughly a Protestant country" continue to give a home to "the deadliest foes that mental and moral liberty have ever known?" Ought she not to banish them?

Americans love facts. For that reason I will give them. Lord Robert Montague, to whom Mr. Gladstone, in his work entitled, "Speeches of Pope Pius IX.," applies the language, "champion of the Papal Church," returned to the Angelican

* Rev. Mr. Lee was to address the conference on, "Jesuitism as a Secret Oath-Bound Organization."

Church in 1882, assigning as his reason, "the shock which I experienced at the discovery of the gross immoralities of the Romish priests, and then the knowledge that the prelates of Rome taught the doctrines of rebellion, excused dishonesty and murder, * * * and were always carrying on political intrigues." For several years Lord Robert was on terms of very close intimacy with many distinguished Jesuits, a highly esteemed friend of Cardinal Manning, and also of the Pope himself. This intimacy gives considerable significance and weight to statements found in a letter I received from him, dated London, July 7, 1887.

In this communication Lord Robert says: "I know from personal experience, in 1863, that your great war, by which you lost thousands of brave citizens and immense capital, was planned and promoted by the Jesuits. Rome cannot endure a strong Protestant power. Therefore, she tried to split your great and powerful country in half, and if she had succeeded she would have been continually irritating the North against the South." The fact can no longer be conceded from the American people that the "great war, by which they lost thousands of brave citizens and immense capital, was planned and promoted by Jesuits," and that Pope Pius IX. encouraged Jefferson Davis in his rebellion, and did his very utmost to deal a death-blow to that Republic, to establish which our Revolutionary fathers fought and bled, and to preserve which tens of thousands left their homes, a quarter of a century ago, to die on Southern battle fields.

In the presence of these awful and startling facts concerning the Jesuits and the Pope, let Americans, standing beneath the folds of the dear old flag, answer the question, ought not the Jesuits to be banished from our Republic?

UNITY OF THE ANCIENT MYSTERIES AND FREEMASONRY.

ADDRESS OF PROF. DAVID M'DILL, D. D., OF THE UNITED PRESBYTERIAN THEOLOGICAL SEMINARY, XENIA, OHIO.

I shall not maintain the oneness of Freemasonry with the ancient mysteries, on the ground of a historical connection between them. I believe that Freemasonry, as an association, is of modern origin. Great antiquity is indeed claimed for it. Webb, in his Freemason's Monitor, affirms that "Masonry is the most ancient institution that ever subsisted" (p. 18). Pierson, Past Grand Master, Past Grand High Priest, Grand Captain General, etc., in his "Traditions of Masonry," quotes from a German work, that "the Mosaic religion was an initiation into mysteries, the principal form and regulations of which were borrowed by Moses from the secrets of the old Egyptians." Pierson also makes the usual claim that John the Baptist and John the Apostle were Freemasons, and that King Solomon was the first "Most Excellent Grand Master." He identifies the city and temple of Jerusalem with a Freemason's lodge, and the fig-leaf aprons, which our first parents put on after the fall, with the Masonic badge (pp. 18, 46, 76). Dr. John A. Weisse, in his work, entitled, "The Obelisk and Freemasonry," claims not only that Solomon, but Rameses the great (the Pharaoh who oppressed the Israelites), and Tubal Cain were Grand Masters. This author, like Past Grand Master Pierson, apparently will have it that Adam and Eve were Freemasons, as he too claims that the fig-leaf apron was a Masonic badge, and "that Freemasonry commenced from the creation and was established in the family of Seth" (pp. 39, 60, 88, 89, 112).

Such claims to antiquity I cannot admit. To say that they are based on conjecture and assumption is to put the case very mildly. There is no word of classical English that fully expresses my view of these extravagant and boastful claims. I trust you will pardon me for the use of an inelegant word, when in regard to this claim of boasted antiquity I say

BOSH!

For it is the only word that in my judgment will do justice to the case. The only semblance of proof offered to show even that Rameses II. was a Master Mason, and that Freemasonry flourished among the ancient Egyptians, is the fact that the trowel, level and square, and other Masonic symbols, are found sculptured on the monuments. But as the ancient Egyptians represented in sculpture nearly everything in use among them, from a plow to a toothpick, the fact that the trowel, level, square and other implements are found sculptured on obelisks and other monuments, does not prove that they were used as symbols of Masonry.

I think the more judicious Masons admit the futility of these claims to antiquity. Past Master Steinbrenner, in his "Origin and Early History of Masonry," declares that even Sir Christopher Wren could not have been Grand Master, for the reason that "there was no office of Grand Master until after the year 1717" (p. 127). In regard to the boasted antiquity of Masonry, he says: "To assert this may make the vulgar stare, but will rather excite the contempt than the admiration of the wise. Let Freemasons, then, give up their vain boastings, which ignorance has foisted into the order, and relinquish a fabulous antiquity, rather than sacrifice common sense" (p. 29). He denies that there is any proof whatever that there is any historical connection between Freemasonry and the Indian, Egyptian or Eleusinian mysteries (p. 27). This Master Mason still further candidly declares that "the institution of Masonry, as an organized society or association, is of a comparatively modern date, while on the other hand, the spirit of Masonry is as ancient as the world." In regard to the ancient mysteries, whether Indian, Egyptian or Eleusinian, he makes the declaration that "there is no proof whatever of any connection between Freemasonry and these institutions" (pp. 25, 27). But, notwithstanding, I believe that Freemasonry as an organization is of modern origin, and that it has no historical connection with any of the institutions of antiquity, I yet affirm the essential oneness with the ancient mysteries. There is an antecedent probability that there would be an identity between Freemasonry and these ancient mysteries, in spirit and aim, means and methods.

(1) First, as Steinbrenner remarks, "All secret societies are similar to one another in many respects" (p. 27).

(2) Human nature, its passions, instincts and propensities, its selfishness and weakness, its ambitions and its clannishness, are the same now as in ancient times.

(3) Conscious and intended imitation also, has had something to do in assimilating Freemasonry to the ancient mysteries. Doubtless the Masons have intentionally copied some things that were practiced by the secret and affiliated orders of ancient times. These causes are sufficient to account for the unity of Freemasonry with the ancient mysteries. This unity, or oneness, we affirm as a matter of fact, and shall endeavor to prove.

Our proposition is that Freemasonry, in spirit and aim, principles and measures, means and methods, is

ONE WITH THE ANCIENT MYSTERIES.

I take the Eleusinian mysteries as a fair example of the ancient mysteries in general. They were observed every fifth year at Eleusis, a town of Attica. According to Herodotus (2: 132, 171) these and other mysteries were introduced into Greece from Egypt. They were introduced among the Romans in the time of the Emperor Hadrian (117, 138), and were abolished by the Christian emperor, Theodosius the Great (379, 395).

We now proceed to present proofs and illustrations of the essential sameness of these ancient mysteries with modern Freemasonry.

1. And first, the professed design was the same. It was claimed for the Eleusinian mysteries that they exerted a purifying and elevating influence, and that the initiated constituted a favored and superior class. The poet Euripides, in his tragedy of the Bacchae, says, "Blessed is he who, favored with the knowledge of the mysteries of the gods, keeps his life pure." Socrates is represented by Plato in the Phaedo as saying that those who instituted the mysteries taught that "whoever shall arrive in Hades unexpiated and uninitiated shall be in mud, but he that arrives there purified and initiated shall dwell with the gods" (37). Potter, in his "Grecian Antiquities," says: "All persons initiated were thought to live in a state of greater happiness and security than other men, being under the more immediate care and protection of the goddess; nor did the benefit of it extend only to this life; but after death they enjoyed (as was believed) greater degrees of felicity than others, and were honored with the first place in the elysian shades; whereas others (the uninitiated) were forced to wallow in perpetual dirt, stink and nastiness" (p. 344).

Freemasonry makes the same boastful pretensions. Webb, in his Monitor, declares "Masonry to be the most moral institution that ever subsisted" (p. 39). Daniel Sickels affirms that Freemasonry teaches "the most sublime truths," and "points out to its disciples a correct knowledge of the great architect of the universe and the moral laws which he has ordained for their government" (Freemason's Monitor, pp. 7, 8). Pierson declares that Freemasonry "embodies all that is valuable in the institutions of the past, embraces within its circle all that is good and true of the present, and thus becomes a conservator as well as depository of religion, science and art" (Traditions of Freemasonry, p. 14). Steinbrenner claims "that Masonry is not only a perfect code of morality, but that she enforces a system of intellectual culture" (Origin and Early History of Masonry, p. 15). It is thus shown that Freemasonry in its boastful professions and claims is precisely like the ancient mysteries. If the patrons and devotees of these mysteries were right in their boastful claims and laudations, far more moral and theological truth and enlightenment were to be obtained from the Hierophant and the Basileus in the mysteries than from Socrates, Plato, Aristotle and all the philosophers; more to be learned by initiation at Eleusis than in the lyceum, the academy, the portico, and all the schools of Greece. And if the boastful claims of Freemasonry be well founded, we ought to abandon our colleges, universities, churches, and theological seminaries, and rely upon the lodge-room to disseminate science, morality, theology and religion.

Though it was claimed in behalf of these mysteries that they were moralizing and refining in their influence, facts show the contrary. Socrates refused to be initiated, and this was one of the grounds of his condemnation. Cicero declares that Diagoras at Thebes was compelled even in the middle of Greece to suppress the mysteries by a perpetual prohibition (De Leg., 2:15). Bishop Warburton, the defender of the ancient mysteries, is compelled to admit that in a short time they became very impure and demoralizing. His own words are that "in Greece itself the mysteries became abominably abused," and that "in Cicero's time, the terms mysteries and abominations were almost synonymous" (Warburton's Divine Legation, vol. 1, p. 243). But the truth is that from the very first, and Warburton makes the admission, were practiced in the celebration of the mysteries. Even in the processions there were exhibitions too shameful to be mentioned. If I would now even allude to them, I would feel constrained to do so in Greek or Latin words. The language of the Apostle Paul is in place here: "It is a shame even to speak of those things that are done of them in secret" (Eph. 5:12). The Christian fathers, who had good opportunities of observing the effects of the mysteries, regarded them with abhorrence. Clement of Alexandria, speaking of their inventors, says: "These I would instance as the prime authors of evil, the parents of impious fables and of deadly superstition, who sowed in human life that seed of evil and ruin, the mysteries." Again he exclaims: "Oh, unblushing shamelessness! Once on a time night was silent, a veil for the pleasure of temperate men; but now for the initiated, the holy night is the tell-tale of the rites of licentiousness, and the glare of torches reveals vicious indulgences" (Exhortation to the Greeks, chap. 2). Augustine speaks of "the devil hurrying away to destruction, deluded souls, though promising them purification, through those things which are called teheras, mysteries or initiations" (De Trinitate, 4:10).

Such were the ancient mysteries,—indecent, shameful and demoralizing, though claiming to purify and elevate the initiated. I do not say that Freemasonry is as indecent and shameful as its ancient prototype. Doubtless Christian civilization has rendered the reproduction of the most offensive indecencies and abominations of the ancient mysteries in our time impossible; yet similar to them in aim, spirit and character, its influence must be similarly demoralizing and pernicious.

2. In the second place, the ancient mysteries and Freemasonry are one in this respect—that religion, or rather religiosity, is a large element in the latter as it was in the former.

THE MYSTERIES WERE A RELIGIOUS INSTITUTION.

They were performed as religious worship. The Eleusinian mysteries were observed in honor especially of the goddess Ceres and her daughter, Proserpine. The chief performer, called Hierophantes, the revealer of holy things, represented the creating deity. In these observances the Athenians showed themselves to be what Paul told them they were, "too superstitious" or too religious. Not that they had too much real religion; they had too much religiosity or religiousness. This religiousness was the chief element in the Eleusinian mysteries. The same is true of Freemasonry. Religiousness is its chief characteristic; it is a sort of religious sect—a kind of sham church. It has a religious creed. It has a religious test for the admission of members. It has a religious ritual. It has its prayers and hymns and religious readings and exhortations. The lodge is opened in the name of the Almighty. In the prayer prescribed for the opening of the lodge, occurs these words: "In thy name we have assembled, and in thy name we desire to proceed in all our doings" (Sickels' Monitor, p. 16). Pierson says that "in the early period Freemasonry may be identified with religion," and it still is "a conservator and depository of religion," as well as of science and art. He mentions religion first (Tradition of Freemasonry, p. 14).

Not only is Masonry very religious in its way, like the ancient mysteries; but its religion, like that of the ancient mysteries, is Christless. Its religion, whatever it is, is not Christian. Its religious creed is bold and bare deism,—Christless. Its prayers are Christless. Its hymns are Christless. Its religious readings are Christless. It mutilates the Bible in order to throw out the name of Christ. The name of Christ is stricken out of the Scripture passages in which it occurs, as prescribed in the Masonic manuals, to be read in the lodges (Webb, p. 92, 1. Pet. 2:5; Webb, 156, 2 Thess., 3:6, 12).

The religion of Masonry has just as little of Christ and Christianity in it as had the religion of the ancient mysteries; i. e., nothing at all. But in one respect Freemasonry is more profane and sacrilegious than its ancient prototype; for the actors in the ancient mysteries did not mutilate the Word of God, in order to cast out the name of Him who died for sinners, and has on his vesture and thigh a name written "King of kings, and Lord of lords." This procedure is certainly more un-Christian, daring and wicked than any of the indecencies contained in the old pagan mysteries.

3. Freemasonry is like the ancient mysteries in the matter of secrecy.

This statement needs neither proof nor illustration. But it may be remarked that the design of secrecy in both cases was the same; namely, to excite curiosity and to impart a fictitious value to what would otherwise have been regarded with indifference. Webb, in his Monitor, in justifying secrecy, speaks of what he calls "a weakness in human nature," and of "captivating the imagination." These ideas were understood and acted on by the inventors of the ancient mysteries.

PROMISES, OATHS AND THREATS.

4. The means adopted to ensure secrecy in the mysteries were the same as those adopted by Freemasonry—promises, oaths and threatening of condign and disgraceful punishments.

If any initiated person revealed any part of the ancient rites, he was put to an ignominious death. If any uninitiated person was present at the mysterious rites, even through mistake or ignorance, he also was put to an ignominious death. The poet Æschylus, who was understood to allude, in one of his tragedies, to something contained in the mysteries, came near being torn to pieces on the stage by the populace; and escaped only by appealing to the Areopagites, who acquitted him on the ground that he had never been initiated. He who divulged the mysteries, or any part of them, was deemed an infamous person, and was subject to a capital and infamous punishment.

Masonry endeavors to preserve its secrets by the same means. I am compelled to believe that the Mason in his initiation in the very first degree swears "forever to conceal and never reveal" the secrets of the order, "under no less penalty than to have his throat cut across, his tongue torn out by the roots, and his body buried in the rough sands of the sea at low-water mark, where the tide ebbs and flows twice in twenty-four hours." I am compelled to believe candidates for initiation in other degrees are required to take oaths equally outlandish and savage. That eminent scholar, patriot and statesman, ex-President John Quincy Adams, in speaking of these oaths, made the emphatic declaration that, "It is an oath of which a cannibal should be ashamed." He further said: "No butcher would mutilate the carcass of a bullock or a swine as the Masonic candidate swears consent to the mutilation of his own, for the breach of an absurd and senseless secret." (Letters on the Nature of Masonic Oaths, Obligations and Penalties, p. 45.)

Past Master Steinbrenner, in proof of the fact that formerly in Masonry there was but one degree, gives an extract from a Masonic document of the date of 1724, which he declares to be the "Examination upon Entrance into a Lodge" used at that time. In reply to the question, "Which is the point of your entry?" the entering Mason says, "I hear and conceal, under the penalty of having my throat cut, or my tongue pulled out of my head." (Origin and Early History of Masonry, p. 143.) It thus appears that this throat-cutting business, the idea of preserving secrecy by the invocation of bloody and brutal penalties, is one of the so-called "ancient landmarks" of Masonry. It seems strange that enlightened men, in an enlightened age and country, should take such terrible oaths, or require them of others. But the phenomenon can be accounted for by the prevalence of the tyrannical and fanatical spirit which prompted the ancient Athenians to tear their favorite poet to pieces, and which leads now, as in ancient times, to the determination to preserve unimportant secrets at every cost and by any means. In all this we see the unity of Masonry with the ancient mysteries.

5. Freemasonry is like the ancient mysteries in its exclusiveness and selfishness.

FREEMASONRY BOASTS OF ITS ADVANTAGES.

It claims to be a moralizer and purifier. It professes to teach science, art, morality and religion. "Masonry includes within its circle almost every branch of polite learning," says Webb (p. 53). "It is a beautiful system of morality," says Gen. Sickels (p. 7). "It embraces all that is valuable in the institutions of the past; embraces within its circle all that is good of the present, and thus becomes a conservator as well as a depository of religion, science and art," says Pierson (p. 14).

Surely so good and useful and excellent an institution should be open to all of every age, sex and condition. It is mean and wicked and cruel to turn away any who wish to enjoy its advantages. But what are the facts? I read from the "Ancient Charges of Masonry," by Cornelius Moore, as follows: "The persons admitted members of a lodge must be good and true men, free-born, and of mature and discreet age, no bondman, no woman, no immoral or scandalous men, but of good report" (p. 131). Observe the classification: "No bondman, no woman, no immoral or scandalous men." Moore further says that "a candidate for Masonry must be physically perfect," and that it is illegal to admit a man "who is blind or has lost an arm, leg or foot" (p. 156). Sickels says that the candidate "must believe in the existence of a Supreme Being; be capable of earning an honest livelihood; be of sound mind and body, capable of reading and writing, not disformed or dismembered, but whole and sound in his physical conformation, having his right limbs as a man ought to have" (Monitor, p. 13). Chase, in his "Digest of Masonic Law," says, "Candidates for Masonry must be free-born. A slave cannot be made a Mason. It is established as a general rule in the United States that persons of Negro blood should not be made Masons, even though they may have been free-born. Within the United States there are no regular lodges of Negroes, and but few regular Masons among that class, though there are many irregular lodges and irregular Masons among them" (p. 211).

We see, then, that Masonry excludes the following classes:

1. Atheists are excluded.
2. Immoral and scandalous men.
3. All women are excluded.
4. Men who cannot read and write.
5. All slaves are excluded.
6. All persons born in slavery, though now free.
7. All Negroes, and persons of Negro blood, though born free.
8. All men not sound in body.
9. All men not capable of earning a livelihood.
10. All men who are deformed, diseased or crippled.
11. All blind men.
12. All men who have lost an arm, a leg, a foot or an eye.

Such is the exclusiveness of Masonry. It classes atheists, scandalous men, bondmen, women, Negroes, the diseased, deformed, crippled, the blind, and illiterate together, and excludes them all from its boasted advantages and blessings. In woman it excludes one-half of mankind. It excludes another large class in those not free-born. It excludes another large class on account of color and blood. It excludes another large class in the blind, diseased, deformed and crippled. It excludes the brave, intelligent and patriotic soldier who lost an arm or leg in battle, but admits the coward who saved his limbs by running, or who fled to Canada to escape the draft. Masonry is the MOST EXCLUSIVE, SELFISH AND NARROW ASSOCIATION of which I have any knowledge.

About the same degree of exclusiveness characterized the ancient mysteries. Their exclusiveness, however, ran in the channel of race and nationality. For a long time only Athenian citizens were allowed to be initiated. When Hercules, Castor and Pollux desired to be initiated, it was necessary that they should be made citizens of Athens before being initiated. The fact that initiation was restricted to citizens constituted the mysteries a monopoly. For, though Athens was a republic or democracy, the so-called citizens constituted an oligarchy. They numbered about 20,000, while slaves and foreigners numbered about 400,000. Admission to the mysterious rites was restricted to this oligarchy. It did not help the matter much that women could be initiated, for even including the women, the Athenian citizens constituted a comparatively small part of the population. It is true, indeed, that in process of time the right of initiation was extended to all who spoke the Greek language. But this was not done until the power of Athens was weakened, and the spirit of its citizens was broken.

The exclusiveness of Freemasonry is worse even than that of the Greek mysteries. The Greeks excluded foreigners, whom they regarded as barbarians, and as rude and uncultivated. But Freemasonry excludes brave, intelligent and virtuous American citizens, who are blind, maimed or crippled. The grounds of exclusion in ancient times were two,—barbarism and disgraceful criminality. But Freemasonry excludes on account of sex, color and blood, bad health, poverty and corporeal defects, even though the persons excluded may be eminent for their intelligence, virtue and patriotism.

In exclusiveness, clannishness and selfishness, Freemasonry and the ancient mysteries are much alike.

—An Iowa correspondent of the Catholic Review writes that paper of the pain caused him by the "misleading statements circulated in this Western country" regarding the attitude of Roman Catholicism toward the lodge. Members of that church are many of them in the lodge, and the authority for their presence there is said to be the high dignitaries of the church. He urges that the Catholic press take up the topic and ventilate it. "Everywhere," he says, "we meet Catholics claiming to have received permission from their bishops to join the I. O. O. F." This dangerous liberality he fears may work great damage to the authority of the priesthood.

—At the Congregationalist annual union in London, May 12, the committee recommended that an international council be held in London in July, 1891. The committee proposes that the council shall consist of 100 delegates from England, 100 from America and 100 from the rest of the world. Rev. Dr. Storrs of Brooklyn is to be asked to preach the inaugural sermon.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Worcester druggists refused a license.—Lodge matters.—Cheering indications that the anti-secret question is coming to the front.—The "Get There" society at Newburyport.—Romanists hold an indignation meeting because they cannot get licenses.—A curious high license experiment at Dracut, Mass.

Worcester's board of aldermen do not mean that the no-license law shall be a sham and a farce. They have accordingly refused all applications for druggists' licenses, which means absolute prohibition so far as the law can go. Last year "Thrice Potent Grand Master" Geo. F. Hewitt was refused a license in Worcester, but one was granted to John Hannigan. The latter agreed to surrender his place to the former for a good sum, but Hewitt not only failed in getting his license but of paying the money, which resulted in an attachment on his property for $6,000. He compounded for $700, which settled the matter. It strikes one a little queerly, not to say ludicrously, to think of a "thrice potent grand master," who has been taken up to "the third heaven" in Masonry, being subjected to these small subjunary annoyances just like an ordinary publican who has never enjoyed any such celestial experiences. The license he failed to get in Worcester, however, was easily obtained in Boston, and through the express companies he managed to carry on quite a lively trade with his former customers; but this year the Boston authorities have refused to license him again, and the question that is now interesting Worcester people is, "What will he do about it?"

They are going to build a Masonic Temple in Hartford, Conn.; and $27,000 have already been subscribed towards it. Apropos to the late revelations of the Herald regarding Chinese Masons in Boston, let not the Mason at the Hub exult over his brother at the antipodes. It is said that the Masonic temples of China are very imposing structures, and that those in Hong Kong and Shanghai will compare favorably with the Masonic Hall on Tremont street.

Among other signs that the lodge question is forcing its way to the front is the fact that a popular minister like Rev. Louis A. Banks, of the Broadway M. E. Church, feels called upon to give it a place in the series of discourses which he is now preaching on social topics. It is true that he treated the subject in a very superficial manner, showing that his knowledge of it was based more on what others had told him than on his own observation and personal study. Still, the unusually large audience, including a number of prominent Odd-fellows, which the announcement of his theme drew together, was an unmistakable proof that it is one in which the popular mind is beginning to take a strong interest. While he gave the lodges due credit, and perhaps a little more, for all the seeming benefits that might be derived from joining them, he read a number of extracts from letters of representative business and professional men to whom he had written inquiring their views on the subject, all agreeing that some will join so many lodges and be so taken up with them as to be in danger of becoming lodge cranks. Anti-secret cranks we all know about, and indeed to most of us the name has grown stale through much repetition; so it is not a little refreshing to learn that a man can be a crank on the opposite line. And now we come to think of it, it is rather curious that while prohibition cranks are plenty as blackberries, we never hear of high-license cranks. Ditto of religious cranks; but though Robert Ingersoll is really a crank of the first water, whoever heard him called such? The philosophy underlying all this is really too much for the average understanding. If somebody would only kindly explain why it is only in the direction of religion and reform and never in the opposite one that it is possible to be a first-class crank, and thus relieve our perplexity on this point! Besides the neglect of home, which a strict attention to lodge duties entails, Mr. Banks mentioned the danger that the lodge would be accepted as a substitute for religion; and that herding together in societies would cause their members "to lose that keen sense of personal accountability to God and definite personal duty to their brother man," which lies at the foundation of all truly righteous living. But he did not tell his audience that the perilous times that are now on us,—the defaulting, the wild speculation and reckless dishonesty —are the fruits to a large extent of imbibing the lodge idea, which does away with personal, individual responsibility. Nor did he denounce secretism as a principle, or show that, whatever lodgemen may affirm or deny, these societies are so many Christless religions, teaching men that by living up to their lodge obligations they can be their own saviour. Altogether his presentation of the subject left much to be desired, but it did good if it only stirred up a few of his hearers to think for themselves and perhaps go a little farther than their reverend guide seems at present to have the courage or the will to go.

The Americans of Newburyport, Mass., have organized themselves into a secret society of anti-Romanist design, called by the euphonious name of the "Get There American Benefit Association." This city at the last election voted for license, and as a result of the efforts of this order none but Protestants were allowed to receive one. This naturally caused much indignation among Romanists, and a public meeting was held at which Father Teeling denounced bitterly the injustice of such discrimination, and gave an expose of the oaths and obligations. Parochial Hall was crowded as never before by both Protestant and Catholic, who packed even the ante-rooms and passage-ways. After answering numerous questions whether he will stand to and abide by the Protestant religion, and never vote for any Catholic for office, the candidate takes the following oath:

W. Ex-president, "I, ———, in the presence of these witnesses, do solemnly promise on my sacred word of honor, without mental reservation, not to divulge or betray any of the proceedings of this association that have reference to any initiation, or any of the secret workings of the association that I am about to behold, by sign, word or deed to any person not a member in good standing in the association. I further promise and swear that I will obey the constitution and the by-laws of the association, and all legal orders of my superiors." [W. President seats the members.] "I further promise and swear that I will not apply to any Roman Catholic priest for local and general influence, nor to any person or persons who may be governed by the priest or Roman Catholic church, for aid in behalf of myself or friends, under any circumstances whatever."

"I further promise and swear that I will observe and strictly obey the rules and regulations of the association, and ever keep this fact foremost in my mind that 'mum' is the word."

There are certain things which cannot fail to be suggested to a thoughtful mind on reading the above account. One is that a Protestant minister would look very strange conducting an indignation meeting, called on the ground that Protestants were unjustly discriminated against in the matter of rum-selling. If Rome was really a friend to temperance she would put every rum-seller in her communion under ban, and be rejoiced rather than otherwise when they could not get a license. Another is, that both sides are organizing into hostile secret orders which may mean, before another decade has passed, civil strife and bloodshed. Furthermore, he cannot help seeing, however much he may hate Romanism, that Father Teeling had the right on his side when he said that "the injustice done in the license matter can be done at any time by oath-bound legislators." It is a dangerous weapon—a two-edged sword that will cut both ways. The women of Boston delivered that city from the rule of Romanism without organizing themselves into a secret association with a slang title. They did this with all the odds against them, and it is certainly strange that the patriotic male citizens of Newburyport who have what they did not have—the ballot—cannot do as much. The very name of this new order is suggestive of selfishness rather than patriotism. I remember when I was a very little child hearing my elders talk about the Know Nothings, which were at that time enjoying their brief notoriety. It sounded very mysterious to me. I could not imagine what they could be, but accepted the title with extreme literalness, and concluded that the prime qualification for joining was not to know, or to seem not to know anything whatever. It was a great marvel to my childish mind that anybody could be found willing to join and thus confess himself such a complete ignoramus. Certainly these so-called "patriotic" orders do not have a happy faculty at naming themselves.

In the quiet town of Malden and adjoining villages, a strip of red flannel tacked to a tree, and rather suggestive of the anarchists or the small pox, is only a sign that the gipsy moth has begun its deadly work thereon. The Legislature will have to vote a good many 25,000 dollars to fight this foreign invader unless the commission is given to parties with some scientific knowledge as well as conscience, to do their work promptly and thoroughly. Malden and Medford people are naturally rather indignant at the leisurely way in which the work goes on, and call it a farce and a humbug; but it is wonderfully like the methods pursued by our law-makers in reference to another evil before which the gipsy moth plague is as nothing.

The little town of Dracut, Mass., is trying high license with a vengeance. She has given to one man the exclusive right to sell all the liquor he wants to for a fee of $8,000. At last accounts her citizens are very sick of their bargain, for it has caused the rum element from all the adjoining prohibition towns to pour into her, making her streets a perfect pandemonium. Experience certainly keeps a dear school, and if "fools will learn in no other," I fear that Carlyle's caustic comment on his own countrymen, 39,000,000—mostly fools, may be equally true of the American people.

REFORM NEWS.

MASSACHUSETTS BAPTISTS HEAR AND APPROVE.

WEST BOYLSTON, Mass., May 13th, 1890.

Editor Christian Cynosure,

MY DEAR BRO:—If you will not object to publishing items coming to your office from out of the ordinary channels, I will venture to send a brief one concerning the General Agent, Rev. J. P. Stoddard.

He is quite a subject of remark, I find, and I would that there were more like him in being outspoken against the works of the devil. He is doing a grand work here in New England, although he has been here but a few months. Already the power of the enemy feels his presence and telling words against all wrong doing.

Yesterday, by invitation, he attended the quarterly meeting of the Worcester Baptist Ministerial Conference, which includes the Baptist pastors of Worcester and the outlying townships, and in the afternoon the entire time was given him in which to present to the Conference the nature of the work in which he was engaged. For fully one hour and a half he held the closest attention of the Conference, as he dwelt upon the principle of secrecy as antagonistic to the Word of God, and secret societies as hindering the coming of Christ's kingdom in its fullness and power. During his address he explained the nature of some of the "Masonic" work, especially the initiation of candidates taking the first and third degrees, and he did not fail to mention the nature of the penalties attached to the violation of such obligations. It was a very helpful address to the pastors, and was highly appreciated by them, as evidenced by the following resolution, viz:

Resolved, That the sincere thanks of this Conference be tendered our brother for the able and instructive address which he has given us, and to which we have listened with profound interest.

Literature was then distributed among the members of the Conference, during which time the desire was expressed that some steps be taken for furnishing the public in general with similar information concerning the evil tendencies of the great lodge system which is antagonizing the system of divine truth.

May the Lord bless you in your good work, and "an exceeding great army" of Christian people be raised up to defend the Gospel of the blessed Son of God. The need of our time is Christian men and women full of the Holy Spirit, who shall insist that "the Word of God shall not be bound,"—persons who will not be dictated to by all the lodges of earth, but who will speak the message God gives them, and speak it in love, meanwhile not shunning to declare unto a world-wide audience that the religion of the lodge, and the religion of the church, are not the same. Yours in His name,

L. W. FRANK.

EFFECTIVE MEETINGS NEAR CHICAGO.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—On Monday night, May 5, I lectured at Melrose. It had been announced that, after the lecture, the meeting would be open for five minute speeches for or against the secret lodge system; and a special invitation had been given to lodge men to be present and speak. At the conclusion of the lecture, the after meeting was opened by the asking of questions for information on some points not brought out in the lecture.

Then the Odd-fellows who were present spoke one after another. All of them save one defended the lodge system. Others who were not lodge men joined in the discussion, in which I also participated.

At first the Odd-fellows defended Freemasonry as well as Odd-fellowship. But when they were pressed with the fact that Freemasonry, in its religious philosophy, supplants Christ and subverts the Gospel, and in its obligations obstructs the administration of justice by binding to the concealment of criminal secrets, they concluded to abandon Masonry to its fate and confine their efforts to the defense of their own order.

At first they claimed that a man could climb up to heaven on the ladder of Odd-fellowship. But when they were confronted with the fact that all have sinned, and that nowhere is redemption from sin and from the curse of violated law to be found, but in our Lord Jesus Christ; that through him, and through him only, can we be saved, they gave up this position also, and admitted that the cisterns of Odd-fellowship were broken and would not hold the water of life.

As a final stand, they admitted that hopes of heaven built upon Odd-fellowship are vain; that Christ only can save from sin and deliver from coming wrath; and that men must be Christians if they would shun hell and gain heaven. But they contended that it was not necessary to renounce Odd-fellowship to become a Christian.

At this point they were confronted by one who had been an Odd-fellow and who claimed that Odd-fellowship and Christianity were so incompatible that he had to give up Odd-fellowship to receive Christ.

While this contest was being waged between those who were, or had been, Odd-fellows, I called attention to the fact that the ritual of Odd-fellowship, established by the authority of the ruling bodies of the order, utterly ignores Christ as the Redeemer and Saviour of men. And as there is no access to God but through Jesus Christ, Odd-fellowship in common with other secret orders is guilty of setting up a false worship; and hence those who take the yoke of Christ upon them, will, when they become acquainted with the deistical character of Odd-fellowship, renounce it as they would any other thing which Christ hates.

This point was pressed until the defenders of Odd-fellowship were silenced, and then we adjourned. We had striven to exalt Christ as our Lord and Saviour; how successfully, may be judged by a concluding remark from one of the Odd-fellows: "This," said he, "is the best religious meeting I ever attended. If you hold another like it I shall come."

The next night I lectured at Prospect Park. The following day I went to Naperville and arranged for Pres. C. A. Blanchard to give a lecture in the College Chapel on "The Relation of the Secret Lodge System to the Christian Religion." I circulated 500 hand bills in the city. A fine audience greeted the President and a telling lecture was delivered. More than nine-tenths of the audience expressed by a rising vote their purpose to take the side of Christ against the lodge. The President of Northwestern College had prepared the way for the lecture by a few well chosen words when he announced it at chapel exercises.

The following night I was to have spoken at Aurora, but it was so rainy that it was thought best to postpone the meeting. I am now on my way to Marshall county, where I expect to stop for work. Yours for the truth as it is in Jesus,
C. F. HAWLEY.

—The one hundred and seventy-fifth anniversary of the founding of the great Valley Church, the second Presbyterian church established in Pennsylvania, was celebrated Thursday at Cedar Hollow, Chester county, Pa. A new edifice, built on the site of the meeting-house, was also dedicated.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CHURCH UNION NOT "NON-PARTISAN."

DENISON, Kans.

DEAR EDITOR:—Our good friend Gault, in a recent number of the Cynosure, makes a plausible plea against some movements now in progress for church union by comparing it with the non-partisan W. C. T. U. and Republicans; and while he does seem "to make the worse appear the better reason," yet the better reason is in our judgment against his view. His skillful illustration is also sought to be backed by the statement that the old line National Reformers are not of the union party in the old Covenanter church. Does he not know that Dr. McAllister, who as a National Reformer stands high if not at the head of the list, was not only put by Synod on the first union committee, but was the mover and a very active member of the last conference and the broadest union man in the conference. And what shall I say of Dr. H. H. George, whose thunder tones are heard on all reforms, who was first chairman in the late conference; and of J. M. Foster, whose pen so fluent and so free has been used to good effect on behalf of the recent movement. But I do not intend to judge of men's motives and conduct by either this or that of other relations; I wish only to embrace this opportunity of stating the real attitude of the old Covenanter body to the question of church union.

This church holds itself bound by a covenant of her leading members in Scotland, England and Ireland, called "The Solemn League and Covenant," to the principle of ecclesiastical unity as one essential to the church's being, and well-being. Her members are pledged to the use of every suitable effort to this end. She therefore approved of the Westminster assembly, called for the purpose of preparing a basis of church union, and formally accepted that basis. In this basis, consisting of the confession of faith and the catechisms, larger and shorter, the doctrine of the catholic unity of the Christian church is over and over asserted and the entitlement of every subject of the grace of faith in Christ to be in and of the church and enjoy its communion, using this strong language, "Which communion, as God offereth opportunity, is to be extended to all those in every place who call on the name of the Lord Jesus."

This Covenanter church, whose very name involves an oath-bound obligation to seek the ecclesiastical unity of all the friends of Christ, in its transplanting into the soil of this new world—in her historical testimony—deplored the "almost universal violation of the principles of ecclesiastical unity," and declared an organic union both practical and dutiful. In her doctrinal testimony she says that to establish distinctions destructive to the unity of the church, is both a sin and a loss.

Then in her covenant of 1871 she says, "Schism and sectarianism are sinful in themselves and inimical to the cause of true religion;" and she pledges her members to pray and labor for the restoration of the lost unity of the church.

Thus I have, without going into a detailed quotation of precise language, stated the (I had thought) universally known view of the Reformed Presbyterian church on this important subject.

Now, how does it come that a church with such a constitution, and that has always held herself open to conference with all the evangelical bodies, and that recently, year after year, has been by committees in conference with Christian and sister churches on this subject, is supposed or represented by any one to be opposed to the unity of the whole body of Christ and the fulfilment of his dying prayer for the union of his followers?

To answer this problem I only need to say that there are some that think partisanship and sectarianism involve one and the same principle, than which there could be no graver mistake. Partisanship, in its inoffensive and proper sense, is to act with those of like view in the same nation to the attainment of some desirable end. But sectarianism is the dividing of the church of Christ and rending of it in sunder; and in most, if not all instances, it proposes to shut out or cut off from fellowship in the church those who cannot or will not pronounce our shibboleth. In other words, it is a seceding minority proposing to unchurch and exercise discipline upon the majority of the visible church. Could anything be more preposterous from either a republican or Presbyterian standpoint?

I may conclude this imperfect defense of my interest in and relation to union effort by saying that, if the W. C. T. U. of the national type were secessionists and proposed to disrupt the nation, I judge not a handful merely but every loyal woman would have followed Mrs. Foster. But only proposing to give sanction and support to that party in the nation and of the nation who sought its best interests by prohibition, they who remain loyal to the national W. C. T. U. are truly praiseworthy. So also I say, let us not dividet he church, but let us have a party in her and of her that will be true to all reforms.

J. S. T. MILLIGAN.

PITH AND POINT.

THE CHURCHES MUST BE TRUE.

I still believe that secretism is the devil's masked battery, behind which every unclean beast of prey lurks to pounce upon the unwary, unsuspecting church which shelters the lodge and thus destroy its life. The existence of those branches of the church which exclude secretists from Christian fellowship or communion, depends on their being true to these heaven-revealed principles. Therefore I continue to rake secretism from capstone to foundation in all my ministry, and it has cost me two pastorates in as many years; and yet three times within that period the Lord revived his work and sinners were saved and believers sanctified, and I have just closed the fourth successful revival meeting of this kind.—G. T. DISSETTE, Willis, Kan.

BRO. ARNOLD'S MISSION.

I. R. B. Arnold's "Stories of the Gods" I have examined thoroughly. I find in it a world of knowledge in a condensed form. The book will have an open sea in this country, and I pray God to speed it on its way to every home. Bro. Arnold is doing a grand business along the Ohio River with his Sun pictures. Such views were never shown in this country before; and never such a family floated on the river as Bro. Arnold's. We can recommend them very highly for their godly ways and words. Bro. Arnold handles his work like a man that understands his business. The Sardis people fell in love with many of their hymns sung by the family.—J. S. BARNES, Sardis, O.

GOOD WORK AMONG THE COLORED CHURCHES OF KENTUCKY.

I have been working all the while since you sent me something to work with, and I have, with the aid of those blessed tracts of light, succeeded in disbanding the Odd-fellow lodge, which had been at work about two years. Rev. R. Durrett, the preacher, has joined in with me to help in this good fight. The people never knew that there was so much sin in secret orders until now. A great many of them join me and say they don't see how a Christian can belong to a secret order. My next move is on the Knights of Tabor in another church. Please send me a few more tracts. The people are poor, but they are carried away with the secret societies. The most of them think they are good.—W. S. DISMUKES, Woodville, Ky.

LITERATURE.

Lake Mohonk and its vicinity is very pleasantly described and illustrated in the American Garden for May. In this attractive and romantic region the annual conference of the friends of the Indians is held. Prof. Bailey of Cornell University writes the opening paper on "A New Science." He pleads with much reason and learning for a scientific study of horticulture, that the science which delights in the natural forms of the field and forest should not be shut out by the garden fence. The whole number is good.

A pamphlet of eighty pages, printed clearly on good paper, and giving a discussion of both sides of the school question, is offered by the Arnold Publishing Company, Boston, Mass., for the sum of 10 cents. It is well worth twice that amount to one who desires to be posted on the matter treated, and it goes without saying that every man, woman and child should know something about the school question. The addresses of Cardinal Gibbons and Bishop Keane on the one hand, and of Edwin D. Mead and Hon. John Jay on the other, with several interesting documents appended, makes a very pleasant hour's reading and a longer study.

We desire to commend to those who are vexed with infidel doubts and objections, the lectures on infidelity by H. L. Hastings, 47 Cornhill, Boston. The first is the noted lecture on "The Inspiration of the Bible," which has already had a circulation of more than a million copies. Then there are "Remarks on the Mistakes of Moses;" "Who Made the New Testament?" "Is the Bible a True Book?" "How to Reach the Masses," and "Friendly Hints for Candid Skeptics," and a score of others, published at from 5 cents each and upward. An assorted package is sent for 25 cents, and whoever orders them will be sure to get their money's worth.

THE CHRISTIAN CONFERENCE.

REMARKS OF REV. J. S. T. MILLIGAN ON COLLEGE SECRET SOCIETIES.

I believe we are reaching the foundation of this great evil, when we reach it and discover it in the matter of secret societies in colleges. Knowledge is power; and those who are trained in the school of secrecy to exercise the power of the greatest part of knowledge, have a power that is almost irresistible through the length and breadth of the land.

I must condense. In the first place, I object to secret societies in colleges because it is an organized rebellion, first against the authority of parents who have sent their children to college to be under the authority, management, supervision and control of the faculty, while the purpose is patent in the organization of these societies that those who are members thereof shall not be under their control. Then again, in the second place, it is a usurpation of the authority that vests in the faculty the control of the college and the members of the college, and it is well understood that all the skill and ingenuity of those usually exceedingly shrewd and designing young men who organize these societies, who control indeed societies, is employed for the purpose of circumventing and hindering and ultimately defying the authorities in these institutions. Then again, it is the assumption of a false and unfair attitude toward their fellows in the college; false, because it is an act of presumption, giving them credit, all the credit that they ask. The idea that they are able to contribute to each other's intellectual advancement more than they would be by being under the control and management of the faculty proper! Why, the wisdom and skill of the ages have contributed to the development of the organization of the college faculties and collegiate education, and this is a proud, ambitious attempt to get rid of that and substitute in place of it their own wisdom, at any rate, to accomplish thereby their own designs. It is false in them to suppose that they are able to control in their own development better than they would by being under the control of the faculty. In this regard, the true principle is that every one who would excel must recognize in the first place that he must depend largely upon himself, upon his own undivided effort, to the attainment of that excellence that will make him useful in society and make him a benefit to the world at large; and it is false to the institution itself and to themselves, and to those who have the management of the institution, to suppose that their influence upon their fellow members would be better than the public, open influence of the institution upon the students in the college.

Then again, it is unfair, because I think—I must emphasize this—that it is their design to have excellence and preferment and honor without regard to merit. I believe in ninety-nine one-hundredths of the instances it is an organization determined to control the award of honors and position and preferment in the institution.

They go out in the first place in the family, and this cultured, skilled husband in rascally practices, this rascal in the domestic relation, in his house, at home and abroad, practices his rascality; and divorces are sought and are issued. They are a monument like Alp upon Alp arising, showing us that the very foundations of society are being destroyed as the result of these lessons of intrigue and mischief and wrong in which men become skilled, because they are trained in college societies. Then it is carried into the church, and I can say from experience of 35 years in connection with the church, that I have seen in covering up criminality by the ministers of the Gospel in the church, a cloaking that can only be accounted for by the fact that these were influential members of secret societies, of which a large portion of the ministers of the church, to which these criminals belonged, were members. And in that way, they have received countenance and encouragement and support mainly from those who are part and parcel of them in these old secret organizations, and thus obtain even in the churches that are recognized as the strongest anti-secrecy churches. We feel it. I know it is felt in our own church; that disposition, that information is carried through. All this channel of intercourse will always and everywhere express itself unless there is a thorough, radical reformation.

I am not much experienced in matters of civil affairs, but I have no doubt that the fact that has been stated, that so many have escaped unwhipped of justice, so many of those who ought to be in durance vile are in high, leading controlling positions in the political parties, and in the very nation itself, until we don't know what we are standing upon. Some of us feel that we are upon the throes of a volcano. There is that feeling prevailing throughout the country at large, in the United States, in the city of Chicago, and in the city of New York and other cities. That is the spirit and the disposition. If the political organizations with all their corruptions that exist in these cities prevailed as extensively throughout the country, our republican institutions would not last an hour. Our doom would be sealed, and our day of doom would have come.

I believe, if we can bring the power of this convention to bear upon the colleges of the land, upon the professors in the colleges, in the theological seminar the ax would be laid at the root of this tree of secrecy. It is only by cutting it down that it will no more encumber the ground, and that we will be saved from that influence that is so viciously potent in society.

THE N. C. A. FUNDS.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of — dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be sufficient discharge.

THE N. C. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

The Annual Meeting of the National Christian Association occurs on the 19th of June next. Members of the Association and all friends will please take notice and be prompt in attendance on Thursday, June 19th, at 10:30 o'clock A. M., at 221 West Madison St., for the election of officers and the transaction of other important business.

J. L. BARLOW, President.

W. I. PHILLIPS, Rec. Sec'y.

The Proceedings of the late Christian Conference, containing the addresses of Joseph Cook, Drs. Goodwin, Wallace, McDill, Col. Clarke and others, is now ready in a handsome pamphlet of 130 pages. It is one of the very best documents ever issued on the lodge question. The price was advertised at 15 cents, but the actual cost of publication being 20 cents, and of mailing 5 cents, the publisher requests that all who order will kindly make up if possible the full cost to the N. C. A. of 25 cents for each mailed copy.

PROF. LEWIS DAVIS, D. D.

The venerable and beloved Dr. Lewis Davis was buried at Dayton, Ohio, March 25th, 1890. He entered the ministry in the United Brethren church in his twenty-fourth year and continued in it fifty-one years. He founded Otterbein University and was its president eighteen years. He left the presidency to act as bishop of the church for some three or four years; then returned to the presidency of Otterbein, which he again resigned 1871, to take the head professorship of the Theological Seminary, with which he was connected till he died. He was an anti-slavery man in Virginia, and a praying, voting Abolitionist till slavery fell.

Justice has been given to Dr. Davis's memory by Bishop Milton Wright, in his funeral discourse; and we shall limit our remarks to a vindication of this great and holy man from the assault on the greatest and holiest act of his life. The Religious Telescope (Feb. 5th) charges the disruption of the United Brethren church on Dr. Davis. The Telescope's words are:

"It is a sad thing to see an aged man, once so distinguished in the church, leading off in a feeble secession, based on a mere quibbling about words. It is all the more sad when we reflect that this man had it in his power to prevent that secession, and thus spare the church this rupture and useless waste of money."

Now, if this charge is true, it is a grievous truth. If false, it is an infamous falsehood; and until it is corrected the Telescope should forfeit the confidence of Christian people, unless it shall appear to have been a blunder or mistake.

But, unfortunately for the Telescope, in this very article it bears witness against itself, acquits Dr. Davis and charges the secession to "the great majority of our people," thus:

"For years many of our congregations, especially in the cities, would not enforce the law, and the preachers and bishops were powerless to remedy the matter. Many of our members and preachers saw the gross inconsistency of refusing to receive into our church men whom we recognized as being of those whom Christ had received. The great majority of our people who gave the matter any thought, saw the absurdity of making the door into our church narrower than the door into heaven—of listening to men preach, and of receiving the communion from their hands whom, because they belonged to secret societies, we would not receive into our church. To meet this emergency, as well as various progressive demands, the commission was appointed and did its work."

The plain English of this paragraph, in the same article which accuses Dr. Davis of basing the secession on a quibble about words, is this: The rule against excluding Freemasons, which had been enforced during a glorious century of the history of the church, was now set at naught, nullified, "especially in the cities." Slavery, which rent the other great churches, was powerless to rend this, though its founder lived in a slave State. While the Cynosure editor was a mobbed Abolitionist in Pennsylvania, all members who became slave-holders were promptly expelled from the "Church of the United Brethren in Christ;" and for one hundred years Freemasons were treated in the same summary way. At camp-meetings, in inviting ministers to the stand, the speaker said: "Except they belong to Freemasons" (History U. B. Church, Vol. 2: 107). But in February last, the Telescope finds that "preachers and bishops were powerless" to enforce a discipline which had stood the brunt of slavery and excluded Freemasonry for a hundred years!

What then? "Many of our members and preachers" saw the "gross inconsistency" of refusing to receive Masons. These called a nullification convention at Dayton; rent the church, and now lay the rending on the sacred head of Dr. Lewis Davis, one of the holiest, loveliest and ablest men their church ever had. And because Dr. Davis preferred "the phrase, resurrection of the body" to "resurrection of the dead" (because the dead are alive when risen), on such trivial grounds they charge this sainted man with splitting the church on a quibble of words; ignoring the fact that, hardly ten lines before, they had given the true cause of the rending Christ's church in the nullifying of one hundred years of discipline which preachers and bishops had enforced and had power to enforce. God grant these men grace "To cry, blot out my sin confessed, deplored, Against thine image in thy saint, O Lord!"

When Dr. Davis was dying, and had lain some time unconscious and speechless, the Saviour seems to have fulfilled his promise:—"I will come again and receive you to myself." The holy man regained at once his utterance and strength. He raised himself up, clapped his hands and exclaimed, "The Lord is my Shepherd; my Shepherd! EVERLASTINGLY my Shepherd." "Let me die the death of the righteous and let my last end be like his." Surely his was "death swallowed up in victory."

Is it not amazing that men can trample on the example of Christ, who taught nothing in secret, and forbade secrecy; can trample on the discipline of their church consistently enforced for one hundred years; and without answering an argument or refuting an objection, rail on such men as Dr. Davis. But let us remember and repeat the prayers of Stephen and of Christ: "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge;" "For they know not what they do."

CLEANSE THE TEMPLE.

Churches and denominations numbering at least a million and a half Christian people in America have declared that membership in secret societies is inconsistent with the Christian profession, a sin to be purged out, of the Christian body and separated from the table of our Lord. There are many thousand other Christians who hold the lodge to be an evil, but one to be endured rather than put away by any summary process. Early in the present movement it was a question with many excellent brethren whether the former view was the correct one; whether the stringency of the rules adopted by some of the Methodist, Presbyterian and Lutheran bodies, and some of the Baptist and Congregational churches, was according to the Word of God and the example of Jesus Christ. As the discussion has proceeded and the real nature of the secret lodge system as a whole has become more clear, the convictions of good men have also been becoming more radical, and the churches that stand for separation have been encouraged to persevere in maintaining their church discipline.

It was an especial aid to this position when the large and influential council of Congregationalists which met at Wheaton last year approved of the College Church with its rule against secret societies; and declared it to be consistent with a Christian church, both to adopt and enforce the principle of separation from the lodge.

The late Conference in this city has given to the world a yet more emphatic subscription to this great principle. Mr. Cook, the world lecturer, and a most eminent member of the Congregational denomination, declared, in his masterly address, for the Vermont law against secret oaths and favored its universal application in our civil affairs. The stenographic report, however, which appeared in the Cynosure did not complete Mr. Cook's idea. In the published report of the Conference, however, the full statement appears in the following summing up of his whole argument:

Of all I wish to say of secret societies, this is the sum: Secret oaths—

1. Can be shown historically to have often led to crime.
2. Are natural sources of jealousy and just alarm to society at large.
3. Are especially unfavorable to harmony and mutual confidence among men living together under popular institutions.

4. Are dangerous to the general cause of civil liberty and just government.

5. Are condemned by the severe denunciations of many of the wisest statesmen, preachers, and reformers.

6. Are opposed to Christian principles, especially to those implied in these three texts:

"In secret I have said nothing."

"Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers."

"Give no offence in anything that the ministry be not blamed."

7. Are forbidden in some portions of our Republic by the civil law, and ought to be in all portions.

8. Are forbidden to church members by some Christian denominations and ought to be by all.

Mr. Cook never made a more momentous declaration than that contained in this summary. It covers the ground for which our brethren of the reform have so long contended, that the secret lodge system is hostile to both church and state, and should be banished from both. Yet he has based these principles upon so sure a ground of logic and rock of truth that they cannot be shaken. Men may rage at them; they cannot disprove them. They will stand; and they must prevail.

—Miss Flagg writes in a private letter that from her outlook the tide of public opinion is surely rising in New England against the secret lodge.

—The Brethren Evangelist of Waterloo, Iowa, has reprinted the whole of Joseph Cook's Conference speech in two numbers. The Conservator of Dayton also printed the great argument in a single issue.

—Is the Odd-fellow society Christian or anti-Christian, is the subject of an address by Secretary Stoddard, announced for the evening of the 20th inst., in the chapel of the Church of Christ, Centennial avenue, near Crescent Beach, Revere. The admission is by ticket, but all honest people are cordially invited.

—Bro. I. R. B. Arnold writes from Sistersville, West Virginia, of the energetic work for prohibition made by a gentleman of Wheeling, who employs Mr. Sawyer, the New York evangelist, and has raised a fund to start a prohibition paper. An editor of the right kind is wanted for this promising enterprise.

—Pres. C. A. Blanchard has had good success in raising funds for Wheaton College during the past week among friends in Chicago. Pray that his further efforts may be doubly blest in securing the means to pay necessary expenses, and also in winning all good men to an active sympathy with all questions of practical righteousness for which the College now stands.

—A correction, which should have been made long since but for an oversight, is due Bro. Geo. Warrington, editor of the Psalm Singer. He writes that he never endorsed Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, for he does not know enough about her or her work to either endorse or condemn. While he regrets the division of the W. C. T. U., he decidedly objects to the use of his name as endorsing either party.

—It now leaks out that the success of Joseph Cook's lecture against Jesuitism, in this city, was not due to the Masons who claim to be such "bitter opponents" of Roman Catholicism. Several members of this order who took tickets to sell for the ladies, under whose auspices the lecture was given, returned them as soon as it was known that Mr. Cook would speak at the Anti-secrecy Conference, telling them to sell them if they could.

—At a late meeting of a presbytery of the United Presbyterians the question was asked if membership in the order of Knights of Pythias was a violation of the church law in relation to secret societies. The presbytery replied in the affirmative. The question and the reply has led Rev. J. P. Lytle, D.D., to make an investigation of the order, and in an able article in the United Presbyterian of May 15, he shows it to be non-Christian and anti-Christian, an imitation of Masonry.

—The Boston Daily Globe has a more hopeful report of the sermon of Rev. L. A. Banks in St. John's M. E. Church, South Boston, which was criticised in these columns last week. The Globe puts a strong title to its report, "Lodge Members in Danger." We are glad to make this amendment, but hope this earnest pastor will find a better way of knowing the real character of secret societies than taking for granted the representations of men who are filled with the spirit of the lodge.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Prof. W. G. Moorehead is delivering a course of Friday night lectures to the young people of Dr. Goodwin's church, the First Congregational of this city.

—Mr. W. S. Hunt, one of the originators of the Student's Bureau of Correspondence, has entered upon the permanent pastorate of the Congregational church at Columbus, Neb.

—Prof. D. McDill, D.D., went on to Omaha after addressing the Conference of April 23. From Omaha he went to Lincoln to attend the Inter-state College contest. He expects to preach during the month of May to the congregation of Summerville, Kansas.

—Bro. H. H. Hinman is at Dayton arranging for the Christian Union convention to be held in that city this week. He is not yet recovered from illness, but is able to attend to much of the work planned. He writes cordially of the friendly interest of the Dayton people.

—Rev. S. F. Porter stopped at Bloomington, Ill., over the first Sabbath of his present trip. He visited Rev. Mr. Howland of the Congregational church, and assisted in the communion service. He also met Rev. Dr. S. D. Cochran, who took part in our Chicago Conference. His journey from that point took him to Lincoln and Galesburg.

—Judge Thomas Drummond, so long and favorably known for his eminent services in the United States District court of this city, died at his home in Wheaton, Ill., Friday last, aged 81 years. He retired from the bench a few years ago. He was widely and justly esteemed as a jurist of strict integrity, and but for his age would probably have been given a seat on the Supreme Bench.

—Rev. Dr. R. Stewart, of the India United Presbyterian Mission at Sialkot, has asked and obtained a furlough for himself and family to return for a time to this country next year. He will then have above ten years in uninterrupted hard mission work, and will be recuperated by the rest and the change. Dr. Stewart was one of the secretaries of our memorable Boston Music Hall convention of 1880.

—Bro. Enos W. Shaw, special N. C. A. agent, has returned to Michigan to resume his interesting work dropped for a time because of the Conference. His address prepared for the Conference, but which his sudden illness did not allow him to present, was an excellent argument on the principles of perpetual secrecy in organizations of men. We hoped to give it to the Cynosure readers, but Bro. Shaw prefers to make some other use of it first.

—The body of Rev. William Johnston, D.D., of College Springs, Ia., was laid to rest on Friday, the 25th, at 3:30 p. m. All business in the college and town was closed during the afternoon of the funeral, while nearly one thousand people attended the exercises at the church. Revs. Dodds, Wilson, Lafferty, Pringle, Lorimer, Thomson, Forsythe and Kennedy were present. Dr. Johnston's last sermon was from the words: "In my Father's house are many mansions."

—The musical and philanthropic world learned lately with regret of the death of Jacob Estey, founder of the Estey Organ Company and its senior member. He died at the age of 76, but with the activity of many of the young men about him. He began the organ manufacture fifty years ago in a little shop where he worked alone. The eight great Estey factories now turn out about seventy organs daily and employ over 500 men; and as for the quality of their work we speak from a personal experience of years, that there is none better. "It was the principle of Jacob Estey," says an exchange, "to build his organs upon honor and sell them solely upon their merit. He has been for nearly half a century one of the staunchest pillars of the Baptist denomination in this country. Wise in council, liberal in contribution, foremost in every missionary work of the church, active in the various conventions, constantly giving his support to feeble churches, the influence of his guiding hand has strengthened and perpetuated many a worthy and struggling cause. He was closely connected with the management of various public and private institutions, such as the Academy at Saxton's River and Mr. Moody's schools at Northfield." The editor of the Cynosure visited Mr. Estey and wrote of his interesting conversation in the issue of Aug. 30, 1888. He joined the Masons when a young man, but had not been near them for forty years, and endeavored to prevent his son from joining.

AN APPEAL TO THE WOMEN OF THE N. C. A.

The first number of the Home Guard is already out. Many of you have seen it, and if those who have not will send to the publisher, Mrs. Anna E. Stoddard, 309 Tremont street, Boston, Mass., they will receive a sample copy.

It is scarcely necessary for me to say that this tiny sheet is not intended to take the place of the Cynosure. Nor is it proposed that any funds should be diverted from the N. C. A. treasury in order to support it; but, on the contrary, as it is edited and published by women for women, is it not reasonable to hope that they will come forward and generously sustain this, their first independent venture in the anti-secret reform?

In issuing this little paper we have several ends in view. We want fresh matter every month to distribute at conventions, and this the Home Guard will give us in a cheap and convenient form. We want to bring the W. C. T. U. and the great body of women who are interested in evangelical and reform work into intelligent understanding and sympathy with us. They comprise the most thoughtful and intelligent women of our country; they are our natural allies, and will be with us, heart and soul, as soon as they see that the lodge is the bulwark of the saloon, and the enemy of the church of Christ. We want to show to the world that the women have a practical interest in this question, and are pushing it; for when our sex take hold in vigorous earnest to oppose any evil, history shows that it is for that evil the beginning of the end. But above all, our object is instruction to mothers, so that they in turn may instruct their children, and save them from being decoyed into the lodge when they reach mature years. We want to deprive Masonry of its chief support—"the good men" who are in it, and who, it is safe to say, would never be there had they been properly instructed on the subject when children. Woman is said to be governed by her instincts rather than her reason. This has been especially the case in relation to secret societies. The majority of right-minded women are not friendly to the lodge, yet their objections have usually small weight with their brothers, husbands and sons, because they are too ignorant regarding this subject to discuss it intelligently. They are, therefore, obliged to accept as truth whatever is told them by their Masonic friends, or keep silent. Nothing but thorough information will break the degrading spell of fear which holds "multitudes of noble women in America in pain and bondage on the lodge question." To quote again from Rev. W. J. Gladwin's letter, suggesting the publication of a paper by the N. C. A. ladies: "They do not know of your great anti-lodge agitation, or if they do they are powerless to co-operate." The Home Guard, by keeping them informed on both these points, will soon change this negative force into a very positive one, which will do grand work for the truth, and make anti-secret a power that shall be felt in all the homes of the nation.

While both editor and publisher freely give their services, the heaviest and most onerous part of the labor, as well as the financial responsibility, falls on the publisher. That the paper has been started at all has been largely due to her enthusiasm and untiring zeal. Mrs. M. E. A. Gleason, with generous liberality, contributed enough to cover the expenses of the first issue. This, with what has been received from other friends, gives us a start, but what we want, and must have to ensure the success of our paper, is a large list of monthly pledges. Surely there are few women who cannot afford to give at least 20 cents a month; and there are hundreds who can give many times that sum. Let us hear from all—the mite-givers and those who cast in from their abundance. The monthly issue of the Home Guard should never be less than ten thousand copies. We want to send it to ministers' wives, to the W. C. T. U., and especially to lodgemen's wives all over the country. We want to sow it broadcast at every temperance convention and gathering of Christian workers, and what are the two thousand copies—which is all our limited means allow us to issue—among so many?

We do not want the husbands, brothers and sons who now contribute to the anti-secret cause to do less for that noble work, but we want their wives, sisters and mothers to do more. We want them to feel that it is quite as much the woman's cause as the man's cause; and that they are equally responsible, so far as they have the means to help it on, for its final success. And now, dear women of the N. C. A., what will you do about it? What sacrifice, what act of self-denial are you prepared to make in order to help rescue our beloved country from the grip of Baal worship,—to destroy this anti-Christian power which with great swelling words boasts itself against the church, and is making more infidels of our young men than could Robert Ingersoll if his power for evil were increased a thousand fold? Think this matter over on bended knees, and I do not fear for the result.

EDUCATIONAL NOTES.

—The Record of Christian Work for April has a column and a half editorial on Wheaton College. The many advantages of the schools are set forth together with some of its present needs.

—In the annual competition for the Boylston prizes for Harvard students in declamation, held May 9, in Cambridge, the first prizes were won by W. E. B. Dubois, '90, and M. E. Burton, '90. Mr. Dubois is a Negro.

—An appeal, signed by Revs. Phillips Brooks, Brooke Herford and other Boston gentlemen, is made for Atlanta University, the institution which lost the support of the State of Georgia because students of all colors were admitted.

—At the annual convention of McGill University, at Montreal, Sir William Dawson, the principal, will announce that the University has received gifts amounting to $1,000,000. One-quarter of this large sum has been given by Sir Donald Smith to establish a woman's branch, for which a handsome building will be erected. William C. McDonald, a rich tobacco merchant, gives nearly half a million to found a school of architecture and science. Other wise and liberal men, and women, perhaps, have made up the remaining $300,000 or about that sum.

—Amherst College gives interesting facts as to the Christian standing of its students. The number of students in the college the present year is 343, of whom 66 are Seniors, 86 Juniors, 88 Sophomores, 103 Freshmen. Of these, 233, just four in excess of two-thirds, are professing Christians. These divide themselves as follows: Seniors 42, two less than two-thirds of the class; Juniors 61, four in excess of two-thirds; Sophomores 60, one in excess of two-thirds; Freshmen 70, also one in excess of two-thirds. About twenty per cent of the graduates become ministers.

—The Russian government has deliberately spurned the offer of Baron de Hirsch to appropriate from his ample fortune, for the cause of education in Russia to which the Jews should have access, a sum of money, reaching high into the millions, before which all previous private munificence pales. The Baron, however, intends to reach the objects of his bounty, if indirectly, by sending to this country the generous sum of $120,000 annually for the education of Russian Jews who are driven from their country. This money, in monthly installments, is put into the hands of a committee consisting of some of the ablest Jewish merchants and bankers in America. Careful provision is made, while assisting these Jewish immigrants, for their instruction in English, in some trade or occupation, particularly in farming, providing them with tools, and in general to make them intelligent, self-sustaining American citizens.

—Carleton College is situated at Northfield, Minn., a pleasant and healthful location, with good railroad facilities, and well adapted to the purposes of an educational institution. It is Christian, but not sectarian, and is open to both ladies and gentlemen. Its collegiate department offers three courses, adapted to the various needs and tastes of its students. It has also a preparatory department, to fit students for college; an English academy department for those who wish a shorter course; a musical department, with regular courses of study in vocal and instrumental music, and provision for competent instruction in drawing, painting, stenography, typewriting, and military drill. Its total enrollment for the year is about 300. The increased attendance in the collegiate department is especially gratifying. Among the current signs of progress may be noted considerable additions to the library, the increase in the number of elective studies, arrangements for additional teaching, and the completion of the equipment of the observatory, including the purchase of a fine fifteen-thousand-dollar telescope. The president, Rev. James W. Strong, D.D., has been relieved of his class-room duties, that he may devote himself exclusively to the general interests of the college.

THE HOME.

HE CARETH.

What can it mean? Is it aught to him
That the nights are long and the days are dim?
Can he be touched by the griefs I bear,
Which sadden the heart and whiten the hair?
About his throne are eternal calms,
And strong, glad music of happy psalms,
And bliss, unruffled by any strife—
How can he care for my little life?

And yet I want him to care for me
While I live in the world where the sorrows be,
When the lights die down from the path I take,
When strength is feeble, and friends forsake,
When love and music that once did bless
Have left me to silence and loneliness,
And my life song changes to sobbing prayers,
Then my heart cries out for a God who cares!

When shadows hang over the whole day long,
And my spirit is bowed with shame and wrong,
When I am not good, and the deeper shade
Of conscious sin makes my heart afraid,
And the busy world has too much to do
To stay in its courses to help me through,
And I long for a Saviour—can it be
That the God of the universe cares for me?

Oh, wonderful story of deathless love!
Each child is dear to that heart above:
He fights for me when I cannot fight,
He comforts me in the gloom of night,
He lifts the burden, for he is strong,
He stills the sigh and awakes the song;
The sorrow that bows me down he bears,
And loves and pardons because he cares!

Let all who are sad take heart again.
We are not alone in our hours of pain;
Our Father stoops from his throne above
To soothe and quiet us with his love;
He leaves us not when the storm is high,
And we have safety, for he is nigh;
Can it be trouble which he doth share?
Oh, rest in peace, for the Lord will care!

TRUE MANLINESS.

BY VICTORIA ALEXANDRA BUCK.

What is true manliness? Is it wealth, pride, ambition or mental culture? No, not these constitute the qualities which make the man. The poor man who toils early and late for his daily bread is really as deserving of the title as the man possessed of millions, provided he lives at peace with man and honors the God who made him.

The best qualities which go to make the man, are not wealth, wisdom, pride or ambition. No; true wealth makes the man. And how is this to be attained? By giving heed to the Golden Rule and to the best impulses of our nature. This has been well expressed in the language of the poet:

"Though hearts brood o'er the past, our eyes
With smiling future glisten;
For lo! our dawn bursts up the skies,
Lean out your souls and listen!
The world rolls freedom's radiant way,
And ripens with her sorrow,
And hearts that bear the cross to-day,
Shall wear the crown to-morrow.

"A LIFT."

"Can you come and give us a lift next Thursday night?" said the superintendent of H—street mission, Chicago, to me as he ended a friendly call at my home. Dr. Goodwin was to speak, and I wondered what I could do to speed the car that night. Would there be a chance to put my shoulder to the wheel?

As I entered the mission I saw sitting in an obscure corner a man of about 35 years of age. His clothes were little more than a bundle of rags, and his face was not clean. He held his hat in his hand as if on the point of slipping out of the hall.

I went to him, hailed him cordially, and asked him to have a better place in the audience.

"Look here," he replied, "I am dirty, and have been drinking, and am not fit to go into decent society. I will remain here, thank you."

Being assured that he was welcome, and that I should be pleased to have him move nearer to the front, he complied with my request and thanked me. Throughout Dr. Goodwin's address he was attentive, and I knew his soul would feel the power of the truth so earnestly presented. At the close of the meeting I went to him and tried to emphasize the truth that he could do very little for himself, but that he must seek help in Christ.

He said, "There is no hope for me. I was on the way to commit suicide to-night when a boy handed me this card telling me of Dr. Goodwin's address. I have heard of him, and wondered if he would say something to help me. I am hopelessly wrecked. My mother's heart is broken, and I am parted from my wife."

I said to him, "You have heard to-night of the love and power of a risen Christ. Are you willing to cast yourself into his hands for forgiveness and power to meet temptation?"

"There is no use," said he in a subdued voice.

"Why not?" I replied in a hopeful tone.

He looked up with a peculiar expression and said, "I don't see why I cannot be a man again, either."

"Well, will you?" I said.

He replied, "Yes, sir, I will."

We went into a little side room and bowed before the God of mercy and prayed together. His prayer was simple and direct: "O God, I don't think I can tell you so you can understand how I feel. I am not eloquent. I want help. It has been long since I prayed, dear Father, help me. That is all I can say. Amen." We arose. My "lift" had lifted me also. My soul set to music the words, "Let him know, that he which converted the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins."

ONLY ONE RELIGION THAT LIFTS.

The following, told by Bishop Whipple, should appeal to every American heart, in behalf of a wronged race. He said: "I can tell you the story of Indian missions by relating one incident. Some years ago, the Rev. Lord Charles Harvey went with me to the Indian country. We had delightful services. After the holy communion we were sitting on the greensward near a house. The head chief said, 'Your friend came from across the great water; does he know the Indian's history?' I said, 'No.' He said, 'I will tell him. Before the white man came, the forests and prairies were full of game, the rivers and lakes were full of fish, the wild rice was Manitou's gift to the red man. Would you like to see one of these Indians?' Then stepped out on the porch an Indian man and woman dressed in furs, ornamented with porcupine quills. 'There,' said the chief, 'my people were like those before the white man came. Shall I tell you what the white man did for us? He came and told us we had no fire horses, no fire canoes, no houses. He said if we would sell him our land, he would make us like white men. Shall I tell you what he did? No, you had better see it.' The door opened and out stepped a poor, degraded-looking Indian, his face besmeared with mud, his blanket in rags; no leggings, and by his side a poor, wretched-looking woman in a torn calico dress. The chief raised his hands and said, 'Manido, Manido, is this an Indian?' The man bowed his head. 'How came this?' The Indian held up a black bottle and said, 'This was the white man's gift.' Some of us bowed our heads in shame. Said the chief, 'If this were all, I would not have told you. Long years ago a pale-faced man came to our country. He spoke kindly, and seemed to want to help us, but our hearts were hard. We hated the white man, and would not listen. Every summer when the sun was high, he came. We always looked to see his tall form coming through the forest. One year I said to my fellows, 'What does this man come for? He does not trade with us; he never asks anything of us. Perhaps the Great Spirit sent him.' We stopped to listen. Some of us have that story in our hearts. Shall I tell you what it has done for us?' The door opened and out stepped a young man—a clergyman—in a black frock coat, and by his side a woman neatly dressed in a black alapaca dress. Said the chief, 'There is only one religion in the world which can lift a man out of the mire, and tell him to call God Father, and that is the religion of Jesus Christ.'

Every saint is God's temple, and he who carries his temple about him may go to prayer when he pleases.—Austin.

LEARNING IN YOUTH.

Daniel Webster once told a good story in a speech, and was asked where he got it. "I had it laid up in my head for fourteen years, and never had a chance to use it until to-day," he said.

My little friend wants to know what good it will do to learn the "rule of three," or to commit a verse of the Bible. The answer is this: "Some time you will need that very thing. Perhaps it may be twenty years before you can make it fit in just the right place; but it will be just in place some time. Then if you don't have it, you will be like the hunter who had no ball in his rifle when the bear met him."

"Twenty-five years ago my teacher made me study surveying," said a man who lately lost his property, "and now I am glad of it. It is just in place. I can get a good situation and high salary." The Bible is better than that. It will be in place as long as we live.—Sel.

THE MESSAGE FOR PAPA.

One Sabbath evening a father called his children around him and asked them what they had learned at the school that day. He was not a Christian man himself, but he had a pious wife, and the children always went to Sabbath-school. In their own simple way the little ones began to tell what the teacher had been saying of the beautiful home in heaven that Jesus had left because of his love for sinners. Nellie, the youngest, had crept upon her father's knee, and looking full in his face, said: "Jesus must have loved us very much to do that; don't you love him for it, father?" Then they went on to describe the Saviour, how he was betrayed by Judas, and led before the high priest and Pilate; how the wicked soldiers crowned him with thorns and mocked and scourged and buffeted him; and again the little one looked up and said: "Don't you love him for that, father?" At last the children came to tell the dreadful death of Jesus on the cross; and once more little Nellie looked up in her father's face and said the third time: "Now, don't you love him, father?" The father could not bear any more; he put his little girl down and went away to hide his tears, for the words had gone home to his heart. Soon after he became a true Christian, and he said that little Nellie's questions had had more effect upon him than the most powerful preaching he had ever heard in his life.—Ex.

THE SUNBEAM.

"Now, what shall I send to the Earth to-day?"

Said the great round golden Sun.

"Oh! let us go down there to work and play,"

Said the Sunbeams, every one.

So down to the Earth in a shining crowd,

Went the merry, busy crew;

They painted with splendor each floating cloud

And the sky as they passed through.

"Shine on, little stars, if you like," they cried,

"We will weave a golden screen

That soon all your twinkling and light shall hide,

Though the Moon may peep between."

The Sunbeams then in through the windows crept

To the children in their beds—

They poked at the eyelids of those who slept,

Gilded all the little heads.

"Wake up, little children!" they cried in glee,

"And from Dreamland come away!

We've brought you a present, wake up and see!

We've brought a sunny day!"

A HINT FOR BIBLE STUDY.

"Mamma, I get muddled over the Bible as often as I study. The deeper I go the worse it gets,—I mean, the more puzzled I get."

The speaker was Harry Marston, a bright youth of 14, who never passed over anything without understanding it. Mamma paused from her sewing as Harry went on with characteristic dash:

"Matthew and Mark do seem to contradict each other, and I am not quite certain that Luke and John are in perfect accord. Set things in order for me, will you not, mother dearest?" and Harry's flushed but earnest face gazed eagerly into Mrs. Marston's.

"Certainly, my son, to the best of my ability—at another time. Your mind is tired from over-work. Ned is calling to you now, and I saw Frank and Tom Rosser entering the gate a moment ago." Harry was off like a flash of lightning. In a few moments he returned with Ned and the visitors at his heels.

"Mamma, please, may we go to Folly Dam bridge, and fish all the morning? We"—

"Please!" "Please!" "Please!" broke in three voices.

"On one condition only," answered Mrs. Marston, "and this condition has four strings to it. Four boys must be at home to a 3 o'clock dinner, after which each one must write me a description of the morning's frolic from the time of setting out until the return."

The boys' faces clouded a little as though they did not enjoy the conditions, until Mrs. Marston added:

"I do not want a dull 'composition,' but a natural, happy recital of what I hope will be a very happy time."

Off they went, joyous because innocent, glad because free. Three o'clock found the quartet at home, and a little later they were doing justice to the finny demonstration that the morning's work had not been in vain.

After dinner, Mrs. Marston brought out four pencil tablets, and after enjoining perfect silence, the work began. In due time the four youthful scribes made creditable returns.

Frank Rosser was a born painter, so naturally he drew a vivid picture of scenic surroundings. Harry dashed along, describing accurately, but in rapid succession, the morning's doings. Tom was careful and precise, telling many little things omitted by the others. Ned was meditative, and while he related facts he drew moral lessons as he passed along.

"All together," said Mrs. Marston, approvingly, "they make a charming, and, I doubt not, perfect narration. The facts are the same, but how different is each sketch! You, Harry, say that as you were crossing the bridge Tom fell down, while Tom avers that he and Ned fell across the bridge. Which is correct? One must be wrong!"

"Oh, no, mamma! Both are right. We were crossing, and the boys fell on the last plank. I didn't see Ned fall."

"And," pursued Mrs. Marston, "Frank says you were all standing at Farmer Grey's gate, while Ned distinctly affirms that you were sitting under a tree in his yard. How about this grave error? One must be entirely wrong."

"Not a bit of it, mother mine!" replied Harry. "Both are very facts. The tree is exactly at the gate."

"That being so," continued Mrs. Marston, "then I will draw a helpful lesson for you from to-day's pleasure. I think the supposed discrepancies in the Gospel narratives may be disposed of in much the same way to oftentimes weary puzzlers."

The appearance of Bridget called Mrs. Marston's attention to domestic matters, and the boys went to batting balls. That night, as the brothers clung to mamma for the good-night kisses, Harry asked:

"Little mother, didn't you make us write those pen-sketches in order to illustrate the real harmony of the Gospels?"

"Yes, my son. Don't you think it was a good way?"

"A very, very good way; and I know I shall never forget it."

"Nor I," put in Ned. "Tom and Frank said it made things seem new to them, and they are going to tell it at home to-night."

"I hope they will," said Harry; "for old Mr. Rosser is always harping on the contradictions of the Bible."

"Well," said mamma, "if our simple illustration, pleasingly learned, will be the means of helping one soul from darkness nearer the light, then truly the day's frolic will not have been in vain. Good-night, my sons, and remember always that light comes to earnest seekers. God himself is the source and essence of true harmony. There can be no discord in his words or dealings. We often miss a note because our lives are not attuned to his."

"Oh! let my life-harp be sweetly attuned to Thee, Then shall I find true rest in making others blest."

TEMPERANCE.

WILL SELL WHISKY IN KANSAS.

A dispatch from Topeka Kan., May 12, says: "It is stated that two 'original-package' liquor houses will be opened here to-morrow, and that more will follow. Shipments will be made in all quantities, from a pint of whisky and a bottle of beer, to a barrel or case. Public sentiment here is against the business, but the local authorities see no way to stop it. A car-load of beer was shipped to St. Mary's Saturday in bottles, each bottle being an 'original package.' Several breweries are preparing to establish agencies at various points in Kansas."

A DISGRACEFUL ORGIE.

Lowell, Mass., is a no-license town. Adjoining is Dracut, whose officials gave one license only, with the following effect, as the dispatches from Lowell, dated the 12th and 13th inst., relate:

"The little town of Dracut is disgusted at the results of its solitary $8,000 liquor license, the holder of which had his second day's business to-day. The crowd was not so great to-day as that attending the opening Saturday, but the scenes have developed into a carnival of debauchery. The mayor and chief of police of Lowell have refused to send officers there for duty, but twice has the patrol wagon been called there, and returned loaded. There were numberless small fights, and a man named Farrell was unmercifully pounded and kicked. The Lowell officers were stationed at the line and arrested and handcuffed the intoxicated persons as fast as they came over. In the vicinity of the saloon scores of hoodlums lay out in the fields, trampled over planted land, drank and danced in high carnival. At 7 o'clock to-night the holder of the license was forced to shut down business for his own peace, and it is believed that a general uprising of citizens will cause a change in affairs."

"LOWELL, Mass., May 13.—The Dracut liquor trouble is ended. For two days thousands of thirsty inhabitants of this no-license city have been overrunning the adjoining town of Dracut, whose selectmen had granted their one license to John Lennon. Lennon had bought a big barn and turned it into one great bar-room. For these two days the scenes around the saloon have been disgraceful, and almost riotous. The building at times was packed, and around the doors were hundreds of men struggling to get in. The local police force was entirely insufficient to preserve order. This forenoon Mr. Lennon had a conference with the selectmen of Dracut. They offered to refund the $8,000 which he had paid for his license, and he accepted the offer and agreed to close his place. There is an offer before the selectmen by citizens to pay $1,000 for the license, and place it in the safe of the town treasurer. The annual town expenses are but $12,000, and now that the license money is refunded the citizens will have to pay taxes at the usual rate."

PROHIBITION IN MAINE.

How poor and miserable the people were in those old days! How poor and miserable, also, was the State—the poorest State in the Union. The houses' shingles off the roof; the clapboards on the walls loose and rattling in the wind, old rags and old hats in the windows instead of glass; miserable hide-bound horses and cattle in the cold winters, shivering in the wind under the lee of the dilapidated barns. In the summer everything about the farms and farm houses slovenly to the last degree; the pigs in the garden, the cattle in the corn; the farmer and his boys at the country grocery. That's how it was in Maine in the old rum-time. Everybody and everything went for rum. But a better time was coming; it was near at hand. On the 2d of June, 1851, the wires carried the glorious news through the State and all over the country that at nine o'clock on that morning, Monday, Governor Hubbard had signed the Maine law, which had been enacted on the Saturday by the legislature to take immediate effect. Instantly the fires of the distilleries were extinguished; not one remains—nor a brewery. Country groceries and taverns were purged of their rum, and remain so to this day. In far more than three-fourths of the State, containing far more than three-fourths of our people—that is to say, in all our rural districts and in our smaller towns and villages—the liquor traffic is practically unknown. An entire generation has grown up there, never having seen a grog shop or the results of liquor drinking. Our people now save, directly and indirectly, more than twenty-four million dollars annually, which but for the Maine law would be spent and wasted for drink, as in the old rum time. The mortgages are lifted from the houses and farms; no more leaky roofs, rattling clapboards, old hats and rags in the windows. No more dilapidated barns and shabbiness and slovenliness everywhere. Maine, from being the poorest State in the Union, is now one of the most prosperous, having snatched from the grog shops more than twenty-four million dollars annually. Its houses and farms, and barns and school-houses, and town-houses and public buildings and churches are no longer shabby and dilapidated as they were formerly, but are in excellent condition and good style of architecture. Everything in and about the State testifies to ease and comfort, and better ways of living among the people, indicating industry, enterprise and thrift among them.—The Better Day.

SIoux CITY'S MAYOR.

The determination of the Mayor of Sioux City, after neglecting to enforce the prohibitory law, hoping it would be repealed, to "fine the liquor sellers $50 per month so as to get some money from them," shows the shameless way in which such officers violate their oaths. If the liquor dealers of Sioux City can be arrested and fined $50 per month their business can be suppressed, and to do this is the only duty of the public officers. The law forbids the sale of intoxicating liquors and they are sworn to see it duly executed.

The re-submission movement is growing rapidly in Kansas, and is much stronger in the southern part of the State. There are few of the local papers that have not been bought up in the interests of high license and re-submission. The enemies of prohibition have no lack of funds, and are working immigration schemes in order to bring anti-prohibition voters into the State. The amendment campaign years ago was only a skirmish compared with this on-coming conflict. Republican speakers and papers demand that the Republican party throw off this yoke of crankism and fanaticism, and that unless this demand of the people is heeded, sixty counties would send up Democratic representatives next winter. They declare that Republican Prohibitionists should go into St. John's party, as that was the only Prohibition party. They deny the right of the "red-nosed, cadaverous-jawed, long-haired and spindle-shanked Prohibitionists" to read them out of the party, for they are born Republicans, and prohibition is foreign to the spirit and trend of that party. At a recent re-submission meeting at Topeka, which crowded the senate chamber, they passed the following resolution: "As Republicans we acknowledge our fealty to the principles enunciated in the platforms of the national Republican party, and we declare that prohibition is in conflict with the traditions, doctrines and teachings of that party, and should be eliminated from the policy and platform of the Republican party of Kansas, as has been done by the Republican party in thirty-five States in the Union."—M. A. Gault, in the Christian Nation.

The taking effect of prohibition was celebrated by friends of temperance in a jubilee meeting at Huron, South Dakota, May 1. Saloonkeepers of the city submitted gracefully and expressed a desire to see the law vigorously enforced. Four of the eight saloonkeepers went elsewhere to engage in the same business. President Fielden, of the State Enforcement League, has received word from various parts of the State saying that saloons are closed and a general desire is shown to have the law enforced.

The Piutes had a big pow-wow near Wadsworth Nev., that lasted all last week. The burden of the speeches made by the old men was in favor of total abstinence from liquors, and the rising generation were urged to go to school at Carson.

How easy it is to please and be pleased, if one will take the fragrance of the rose instead of the thorns, and hold the knife by the handle, and not by the edge,

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 14, 1890.

It was Wednesday, the day set aside for bearing arguments in liquor cases. People dropping into the District building thought that a convention of some sort was going on, for the halls were crowded with turned-down liquor sellers and their attorneys who were about to make a final effort to secure licenses. When the city Commissioners arrived, they found their offices overflowing with these men, and the arguments presented were as strong as they could possibly be made. Quite a number of well-known citizens called on the authorities that day to urge the granting of licenses to persons in whom they were interested. Even women appeared among the advocates.

Then, later in the day there was a flank movement of the temperance people, and a large committee from the W. C. T. U. called upon the Commissioners and had a long interview with them in board session, relative to granting liquor licenses, urging them to stand firm and grant no more. The liquor question for the District of Columbia is about settled for the present, so far as the District Commissioners are concerned. There are but a few more cases to be acted upon, and these are for the most part those that have been rejected, but come up again for reconsideration.

The recent decision of the United States Supreme Court, declaring unconstitutional that part of the prohibition law in Iowa, which, in effect, tends to restrict commerce between the States in interfering with importations, has been freely discussed by members of Congress. Those who bear toward prohibition as well as those who are hostile to it, regard the decision as a most important one, and it is conceded that it will effect temperance legislation throughout the country generally. Lack of space will prevent me from giving the opinions on this subject of even some of the more prominent Congressmen. I will just mention, however, that many of them consider the action of the Supreme Court an interference with the States' rights to regulate their internal affairs, that others say this decision will have the effect of forcing national legislation on prohibition, and that the zealous advocates of prohibition say it will cause them to work harder than ever before for the cause.

There has been a great waste of eloquence over the tariff debate which has been in progress for the past week. It has been spent upon empty seats and deserted galleries, being too uninteresting to hold the audience, notwithstanding the fact that the question is fraught with such important results, one way or another, either for good or harm, to the people of the whole nation. During this debate the proceedings of the Senate, usually considered dull and tedious, have become lively in comparison, and visitors have frequented its galleries. While talking tariff, on Monday, the House was thrown into commotion, however, by Representative Grosvenor declaring that two years ago the leader of the greatest and most extortionate trust in the country came to the Capitol, marched into the dark chamber of the Ways and Means Committee, and figuratively took the majority of that committee by the head and shook free sugar out of it. Congressman McMillan had provoked this assault by saying a moment before, that nothing could be done against trusts as long as the Republican party was in the majority in the House.

Mr. Grosvenor's remarks brought Mr. Mills to his feet with a bound. He said: "I want to say to the gentleman from Ohio that his statement is false, every word of it is false." Mr. Grosvenor retorted: "We hear the old plantation slogan again." "Yes," replied the gentleman from Texas, "you will always hear it when you deserve it." This interchange of civilities continued for ten minutes or more, Mr. Grosvenor saying something finally about his dislike of being interrupted by the shot-gun policy. At last Mr. Mills said he was sorry anything of a personal character had been brought in, but he did not believe any member of the majority of the Ways and Means Committee of the last Congress had been approached improperly. Mr. McKinley made the same disclaimer and then everybody was reconciled, and the tariff debate resumed the even tenor of its way.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The great question. Vs. 25-27. There is one great question on the answer to which all true success in life hinges. A bud blasted in the calyx is a failure. It has not fulfilled its purpose of blossom and fruitage. This mortal life is but the calyx enclosing the embryo of the larger and higher life above; and the question of questions is: how shall we so live as to keep this embryo spiritual life from being blighted, and thus failing of that perfected existence with him for which God designed it. But we must remember that there are a good many different ways of asking the question, from the Phillippian jailer's agony of earnestness, and the young ruler who in his eagerness came running to Jesus, to this cold and curious Pharisee with whom it seems to have been merely a theological test by which to try the claims of the strange teacher. So there are many at the present day who delight in theological hair-splitting instead of sincerely inquiring the way of life.

2. The answer to the question found only in the Bible. Vs. 28, 29. Jesus, instead of directly answering, points him at once to the Scriptures, which it was his business as a lawyer to know thoroughly, and of which his reply shows that he had no superficial knowledge. Love to God and our neighbor is the fulfilling of the law, for no one can love perfectly without a heart right in the sight of the Lord, and "out of the heart are the issues of life." "This do and thou shalt live." The lawyer was evidently conscious that his own life had failed to come up to this standard, or he would not have asked, "Who is my neighbor?" When we are confronted by our own shortcomings we are very apt to show this self-justifying spirit. We do not like to think that the sinful woman and the rum-selling publican is as much our neighbor as the most virtuous and law-abiding. But true love knows no distinction. It is "without partiality and without hypocrisy."

3. The Good Samaritan. Vs. 30-37. The man who fell among thieves may typify any class of humanity which have become a prey to their own evil habits or the oppression of others. The drunkard has fallen among thieves to whose cruelty and rapacity a highway robber bears no comparison. Can a Christian vote to license the men who have robbed him of his money, his reputation, his health—of all he has to enjoy in this life or hope for beyond—and left him worse than dead to himself, his family and society? This is a pass beyond even the priest and Levite. They only showed a cold and cruel indifference, but they never thought of extending legal protection to the robbers in return for so much of their ill-gotten gains paid into the national treasury. The Chinese, the Indian, the Negro are our neighbors. Shall we be indifferent to their wrongs? especially when our own nation is the oppressor? The Jericho road is very much traveled. Daily we may have opportunity to minister to the wants of some poor down-trodden victim of Satan, the great robber chief who robbed the first human pair of Eden. Christ is the good Samaritan who binds up the wounds of fallen lost humanity; and those who have his spirit will "go and do likewise." They do not wait for the lodge grip before they help their fallen neighbor. Though this parable is acted out in every Odd-fellow initiation, it is in itself the strongest condemnation of the whole system, because by the very picture of true charity which it gives us is shown the features of the counterfeit.

HELPFUL THOUGHTS FROM PELOUBET'S QUARTERLY.

ETERNAL LIFE.—(1) Eternal life is the true spiritual life of the soul—that which is natural to it in its highest state. (2) It is the divine life which is implanted in us when we are born of the Spirit and become children of God. It begins in this life; but (3) being divine and natural, it endures forever. (4) It is the life which inspires all heavenly beings and makes heaven what it is. (5) It is the condition of all the highest blessings. (6) Eternal life, from its very nature, produces a perfect morality.

—A general missionary conference was to be held in Shanghai, China, May 7, and continue ten days. It is thirteen years since a similar conference was held.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—At Friday's session of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church South a resolution recognizing the American Bible Society was formally adopted.

—The Sabbath Association, of Philadelphia, celebrated its semi-centennial, April 27 and 28. Among the speakers were Dr. Hall, of New York; Postmaster Field, of Philadelphia, and Postmaster General Wanamaker.

—The annual meeting of the Chicago Baptist Mission Society was held May 13, at the Second Baptist church. Addresses were delivered by Rev. Drs. Henson and Lawrence. The reports of the treasurer and secretary show that the work of this society has been varied and blessed of God. Many new localities have had the Gospel supplied to them, and a new missionary impulse has been awakened in the churches.

—The Presbyterian general assemblies, North and South, began their sessions Thursday, respectively, at Saratoga, N. Y., and Asheville, N. C. Kentucky Methodists celebrated at Lexington the organization of the Methodist church in the State; and the principal event of the session of the Methodist Church South, at St. Louis, was the delivery of the fraternal message from the Northern church by Rev. Dr. Frank M. Bristol, of Chicago.

—In Moody's recent meetings in New York and Brooklyn he carried out his principles as to observing the Sabbath. The Independent says: "Mr. Moody is a strict Sabbatarian, and although he preached four times on Sunday, he would not ride in a street car, elevated train, or carriage; but walked from his hotel to all the meetings, more than six miles in all."

—Burglars entered the house of Rev. Mr. Large, missionary of the Canadian Methodist church, at Tokyo, Japan, on Good Friday night, and assassinated him. Mrs. Large in the struggle lost two fingers and received a deep gash in the cheek, but will recover.

—The Woman's General Missionary society of the United Presbyterian church, embracing the whole United States, closed a very successful and interesting annual meeting at Washington, Iowa, Thursday. Over two hundred delegates were in attendance. Mrs. Cowan of Indianapolis was elected president and Mrs. Dr. Barr of Philadelphia vice-president for the ensuing year.

—Isaac Sharp of the Friends church in England is in his 84th year. Yet in response to a call of the Spirit he has started on a missionary journey round the world, to Constantinople, Syria, India, Japan and America. The Darlington monthly meeting has commended him for this work.

—There are eleven missionary agencies at work in the Congo Free State. Of these three are Roman Catholic, French and Belgian. The others are the American Baptists, the English Baptists, the Swedish Missionary Society, the London Missionary Society, Mr. Arnot's Mission, the Balolo Mission, the Missionary Evangelical Alliance, Bishop Taylor's Mission (Methodist).

—At a meeting of Methodist Episcopal preachers at Baltimore, Tuesday, it was reported that in the past twenty-five years the Methodists have "built 6,000 more churches than the Presbyterians own in the whole country, 7,000 more than the Congregationalists, and 5,000 more than the Roman Catholics."

—The one hundred and second General Assembly of the Presbyterian church in the United States of America, is meeting in the First Presbyterian church, Saratoga Springs, N. Y., Thursday, May 15, and was opened with a sermon by the retiring moderator, Rev. William Roberts, D.D., LL.D.

—The Council of the missions constituting the United Church of Christ in Japan made its thirteenth annual report in January. Printed copies were received in this country by a recent mail. The Council records, "with no small gratitude to God," that at this meeting the mission of the Cumberland Presbyterian church had been received into the fellowship of the United Church. That mission is twelve years old, has gathered nine churches, consisting of 604 members, has also one girls' boarding school, two day schools, one kindergarten, with, in all, 149 pupils. The United Church is now composed of the missions and churches of the Reformed (Dutch) church in America, the Presbyterian church (North) in the U. S. A., the United Presbyterian church of Scotland, the Reformed (German) church in the U. S. A., the Presbyterian church (South) in the U. S. A., the Cumberland Presbyterian church, and the Woman's Union Missionary Society of America. The whole number of missionaries included in this union, including wives, is 151, more than 27 per cent of the entire number of denominations in Japan, that total being 552. Of the year 1889 the Council says: "The additions to the church by baptism are only about two-thirds of the number reported a year ago. The adult members number 8,954. The increase during the year is 1,504. The number of churches is 86, an increase of 10. Three new churches have been organized, 9 were received with the mission of the Cumberland Presbyterian church, and two have been dismissed from our connection. The ordained native ministers number 39, a gain of three. The licentiates number 47, a gain of six. The contributions for all purposes were Yen 18,071.05 (the equivalent of about $14,100 U. S. gold), a decrease of Yen 2,244.78 in comparison with the contributions of the year before."

IN BRIEF.

London has no Sunday mail. At 10 o'clock Saturday night the postoffice is closed and no letters are received or delivered.

Last month Gladstone was invited to be present at a festival given in behalf of a charitable enterprise. He sent his declination upon a postal card. At the festival the postal card was put up at auction sale and brought the goodly sum of $80.

The Official Messenger says that the students at the various public institutions of learning in Russia who took part in the recent agitation had no grounds for dissatisfaction. Friendly advice proved unavailing to stop their demonstrations, and the authorities were compelled to adopt stern measures to subdue their insubordination.

Mme. Tschibrikova, who was reported to have been exiled for her letter to the Czar, is now at Penza, in the Caucasus, under a strict police watch. She was conveyed thither hurriedly in a carriage without windows. No halt was made except in the open air. Her food was abominable. She was constantly guarded by gendarmes and not allowed to speak to any one.

There is a firm in Cincinnati which each year beats 21,000 gold dollars into gold leaf, and as each dollar can be beat into a sheet that will carpet two rooms 16½ feet square, some idea may be formed of its tenuity. It requires 1,400 of gold leaf to equal in thickness a sheet of writing paper, and takes 280,000 of them, piled one upon the other, to equal an inch in thickness.

When the break in the Hudson River tunnel occurred last week the divers were unable to find the leak through which came the air pressure that paralyzed the pumps and threatened disaster to one end of the big tunnel. In this exigency a novel expedient was used for solving the difficulty. The engineer secured a number of water rats, tied long pieces of oakum to their tails, caught in the middle by a piece of wire. The rats were then forced into the caisson through the air pumps. The rats, following the current of the air, found the leaks, and, passing through the crevasses, left the oakum behind. This stopped the ingress of air sufficiently to enable the pumping to proceed with success.

The third National Industrial Exposition of Japan will be held in Tokio, from April 1 to July 31, 1890, inclusive. The purpose is to make an exhibit of home products and show the improvement in Japanese art, science, agriculture and industries. No foreign exhibit will be allowed, other than a collection of samples made by the government to be shown for the purpose of educating the people by comparison. It is claimed that this exposition will afford foreign visitors an opportunity never before enjoyed of studying the people, products and customs of Japan. At least 150,000 varieties of products will be shown. Tokio is eighteen miles from Yokohama, where strangers land, and where passports will be furnished, enabling them to visit any part of the country.

PAPER PILLOWS.—The latest fad in England is paper pillows. The paper is torn into very small pieces, not bigger than the finger nail, and then put into a pillow sack of drilling or light ticking. They are very cool for hot climates, and much superior to feather pillows. The newspapers are printing appeals for them for hospitals. Newspapers are not nice to use, as they have a disagreeable odor of printer's ink; but brown or white paper and old letters and envelopes are the best. The finer the paper is cut or torn, the lighter it wakes the pillow.

The portraits and colors of the new postage stamp are as follows:

- One cent—Franklin; ultramarine blue.
- Two cent—Washington; carmine.
- Three cent—Jackson; purple.
- Four cent—Lincoln; chocolate.
- Five cent—Grant; light brown.
- Six cent—Garfield; not decided.
- Ten cent—Webster; milori green.

Fifteen cent—Henry Clay; deep blue. Thirty cent—Jefferson; black. Ninety cent—Commodore Perry; orange.

The number of stamps ordered before ready for issue aggregated nearly 44,000,000, representing $784,323.

PERILS OF WINTER RAILROADING AMONG THE MOUNTAINS.—A great snow-slide recently occurred near Wheeler, Col., at what is known as Wall Cut, on the High Line Division of the South Park Railroad, in which two passenger trains came near being swept away. The train going west was running in sections. The first section got stuck in the snow at Wall Cut, and the second section came up with two powerful engines to pull out the first section. Roadmaster Dobbins was standing in front of the head engine, superintending the work, when in an instant an avalanche of snow came down, taking him away. He was completely covered with the flying mass of snow, and carried a distance of several thousand feet, entirely across the river and on the Rio Grande tracks, where he managed to extricate himself with great difficulty. He was severely injured. The tremendous volume of snow was piled entirely over the four engines, putting out the fires, and completely buried the mail cars, in which was the mail agent, George Roberts, and Baggage-master Mason, of Denver. It took some time to extricate the men, but neither was injured. Fireman Culbertson was badly scalded.

Does it hurt
the Clothes?

We hear that some woman said of Pearline—"it's the greatest thing I ever saw for easy washing and cleaning, in fact it does so much I'm afraid of it." She recalls the old saying, "too good to be true."

How absurd to suppose that the universal popularity of Pearline is due to anything but wonderful merit.

How absurd to suppose that millions of women would use PEARLINE year after year if it hurt the hands or clothing.

How absurd to suppose that any sane man would risk a fortune in advertising an article which would not stand the most severe (and women are critical) tests.

That's just what PEARLINE will stand—test it for easy work—quality of work—for saving time and labor—wear and tear—economy—test it any way you will—but test it. You'll find PEARLINE irresistible.

Beware

Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers are offering imitations which they claim to be Pearline, or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—they are not, and besides are dangerous. 166 Manufactured only by JAMES PYLE, New York.

PAGAN COUNTERFEITS

IN THE

Christian Church.

A pamphlet of 52 pages, by Chas. A. S. Temple.

The following from Rev. H. H. Hinman shows his estimate of its contents:

"I have read with great interest 'Pagan Counterfeits in the Christian Church' by Chas. A. S. Temple. I regard the subject discussed as important, and its presentation both able and timely. There is a most manifest drift in all our Protestant denominations towards unauthorized ritualism and the substitution of human inventions in place of the simplicity of the Gospel, as given by Christ and his apostles. In calling attention to this tidal wave of formalism, the author has conferred a lasting benefit on the church as of Protestantism."

HOME AND HEALTH.

PUTTING AWAY WINTER CLOTHING.

If one has no cedar chest to store woollens in, a very good substitute is a trunk or flour barrel. The barrel should be well washed, dried and lined with newspapers. These are pasted in, using thick flour paste with a large spoonful of alum added to a quart of paste. Cover every place on the inside of the barrel. Clean the cover together and paste paper on the inside. The woollens should be thoroughly brushed and sunned, carefully folded and laid in. When the barrel is full, the cover should be pressed down, a stout manilla paper put over the top, coming down well around the barrel, tied down with twine and pasted so as to fit close. Woollens may be kept securely in this way. The great thing is to sun and thoroughly brush the garments, so that if moths are already there, to get them out, and then pack securely. Hang out furs when the sun shines hot; let them hang several hours, combing them with a coarse dressing comb. Put into its box the muff and a strip of paper pasted around where the cover joins the box. The fur cape the same. I never add camphor or anything, and have kept these furs twenty-three years, and never a sign of moth. The long fur or plush garment may be put into a calico bag the length of the garment, a patent garment-holder put in at the neck, the bag slipped on from the bottom part, drawn closely at the top and tied, then sewed around the wire loop of the holder. Have a row of hooks put up in the closet very near the ceiling, so that the garments hang full length, and come out in the fall with never a wrinkle. This leaves room below them for another row of hooks for shorter garments.—Good Housekeeping.

REMEDY FOR CORNS.

"You are troubled with corns, are you?" said a Pittsburgher to one of his friends who walked with a peculiar limping gait, says the Dispatch, of the Smoky City. "Well, everybody has a remedy for them, but the trouble with most of the remedies is that they are no good without faith, and the man afflicted with corns generally considers his case hopeless. But I can tell you of a cure that is simple and effectual. Soak the afflicted portion of your feet for a considerable time every night—the longer the better—in crude petroleum; then saturate a cloth with the same stuff, wrap it around your toe, put your stocking on, and then go to bed. A few nights of this treatment will cause the corn to disappear. I first heard of this remedy when living in the oil region, and of course I laughed at it. But a little inquiry among the men who worked about the tanks and wells convinced me that they believed in it. They said they were never troubled with corns, and assured me that the frequent wetting of their shoes in the oil—a thing they cannot avoid in their occupation—had the effect of driving all these troublesome excrescences away. Try it and it will cure you."

Said Sarah to Mary:

"Pray, tell me, dear cousin, what can be the matter? Sure, a few months ago you were fairer and fatter. Now your cheeks, once so rosy, are sunken and hollow. Your thin, trembling hands are as hueless as tallow; Your nerves are unstrung, your temper is shaken, And you act and appear like a woman forsaken."

Said Mary to Sarah:

"Your comments seem rough, but the facts are still rougher. For nobody knows how acutely I suffer. I am sick unto death and well nigh desperation, With female disorders and nervous prostration, I've doctored and dosed till my stomach is seething And life hardly seems worth the trouble of breathing."

Said Sarah to Mary:

"Forgive me, my dear, if my comments seem crusty. And, pray, try a cure that is certain and trusty. 'Tis needless to suffer, to murmur and languish, And pass half your days in such pitiful anguish, For 'female disorders' of every description Are certainly cured by Pierce's Favorite Prescription."

Mary heeded this good advice, bought a supply of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and it wrought a perfect cure. The history of her marvelous restoration to health is similar to that of thousands.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the world-famed remedy for all those chronic weaknesses and distressing derangements so common to American women. It is a most potent, invigorating, restorative tonic, or strength giver, imparting tone and vigor sist on your dressmaker facing your gowns with velvet or velveteen instead of braid, you will lessen your shoemaker's bills and be saved from the purple blemish on the instep caused by the movements of the skirts in walking. When buttons come off don't hunt up old shoes and use the shabby buttons, but invest five cents in a card of shining black beauties, and have them ready for emergencies. One old button spoils the style of a shoe. Gaiters are charitable things and cover a multitude of defects. Half-worn boots will last a long time under their kindly protection. Now is a good time to buy them, and in most shops you can get a pair for one dollar and sixty-five cents. To save your evening shoes and slippers invest in a pair of white fleece-lined artic boots, which will cost two dollars, but save ten times that amount in carriage hire and medicine, not to mention the shoes themselves. After removing your shoes put them in correct position by pulling up the uppers and lapping the flap over and fastening one or two buttons. Then pinch the instep down to the toe, bringing the fullness up instead of allowing it to sag down into the slovenly breadth of half-worn foot gear. A boot that is kicked off and left to lie where it falls, or is thrown into the closet, will soon lose shape and gloss. —Helen Jay, in Ladies' Home Journal.

FARM NOTES.

THE START FOR ASPARAGUS.

Every farmer's family uses potatoes; the time, labor and fertility required for their production are not considered, for potatoes must be had. But they are more expensive to raise than asparagus, and their cultivation calls out more skill. The labor needed to grow half an acre of potatoes each year would in three years plant, transplant and establish for fifty years a large bed of asparagus, which with a little care annually through this half century, would load the home table and the nearest market (at handsome figures) with a delicious luxury. Asparagus is most easily gathered and prepared, highly nutritious and healthful in its tendencies, and acceptable to nearly everybody. Procure, or raise, thrifty one-year-old plants and set them at intervals of three feet in rows four feet apart, using the richest land of almost any kind, although loam is best. (Keep it always full of plant-food, which can be put on at any season and never too abundantly.) Open the drills deep enough to allow several inches of soil above crowns of the plants when they are set. Keep the ground clean and, the third year, cut every sprout as fast as ready. Stop cutting when early peas come.—Experience.

A CHIEF CAUSE OF FRUIT FAILURES.

If those who have orchard or fruit trees that refuse to bear, or bear a trifling amount of small, scabby and knotty fruit (and they are in the majority) desire to learn the chief cause of these failures, they can do so in most cases by opening the earth under the trees, in the fall months, three feet and more down and exposing the roots. In four cases out of five, especially on clay soils, the earth will be found to be in a state so dry that not even hydraulic pressure could extract moisture from it, and in some subsoils the clay will be found to be in a crystalline form and fall readily apart. Now, since the buds for next year's fruit crop are started and developed the previous autumn, and the food the roots absorb to enable the tree organs to do their work, must be in a liquid or gaseous form, it is easy to see how essential moisture in the soil is in the fall season, and how its presence or absence is respectively the cause of fruitfulness in the one case and barrenness in the other.—Home and Farm.

SOWING FLOWER SEEDS.

Starting seeds in boxes in the house is not always a success, but I find there is a method of doing so that will meet the approbation of those troubled with seeds long in germinating and of damping off. I heat soap stones quite hot twice a day and place under the boxes. Bricks or flat stones will do. The seeds, under this treatment, spring up quite as quickly as in a hot bed and seem to do as finely. The seeds that I sowed, covering only with sand, never allowing it to dry, came up sooner than where sod was used. It is admirable for Pansy seed, as it takes the place of moss as a shade. I never succeeded before in starting them earlier than ten days, and often fifteen, after sowing. A shallow box about two inches deep and one foot long, six inches wide, is useful for starting all kinds of seeds and easily handled, and can be placed upon the reservoir at night, which is better than a stone, as it will retain heat until nearly morning. Turning a box over it on a cold night is an improvement.—Vick's Magazine for May.

MANURE FOR GARDEN VEGETABLES.

It is entirely fallacious to suppose that garden crops, whether flowers, fruit, or vegetables, gain a large amount of nitrogenous plant-food from atmospheric sources by means of this extended leaf-surface. The quantity of combined nitrogen brought to the soil and growing plants by rain-water and the atmosphere is so inconsiderable an amount, when compared with the whole weight required by the crop, that we may fairly say no plants are more dependent on nitrogen in an available condition within the soil than are garden vegetables. No matter how good the normal condition of the soil may be, it will not long produce paying crops of vegetables, or even fruits,

What You Need Spring and Fall

WHEN you feel "all run down" is Ayer's Sarsaparilla. For restoring strength after sickness, or toning up the system at any time, this is the medicine of all others. Don't waste time and money on worthless compounds, whatever their pretensions; but remember that Ayer's has been the standard Sarsaparilla for nearly half a century and has no equal.

"Sometime ago I found my system entirely run down. I had a feeling of constant fatigue and languor and very little ambition for any kind of effort. A friend advised me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I did with the best results. It has done me more good than all other medicines I have ever used."—Frank Mellows, Chelsea, Mass.

"I was all run down before I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and now I am gaining in strength every day."—Mrs. Alice West, Jefferson, W. Va.

"I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla for several years. When I feel weary and worn out, it always helps me."—A. Grommet, Kingsville, Johnson Co., Mo.

"I was long troubled with nervous debility and severe headaches. By the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla I have been restored to health."—Anthony Louis, 55 Tremont st., Charlestown, Mass.

"As a safe and reliable spring and family medicine, I think are always trying seasons to most constitutions, and unless the blood is purified and enriched, one becomes exposed to a variety of maladies. To make good blood, nothing is so effectual as Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the most celebrated tonic alterative in existence. Try it.

"I have found great relief from general debility in the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. It tones and invigorates the system, regulates the action of the digestive and assimilative organs, and vitalizes the blood."—H. D. Johnson, Jr., 383 Atlantic ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla has a well-deserved reputation in this locality for restoring to healthy, vigorous action the vital organs when they have become weakened or exhausted. I have used it in my family for this purpose, especially after the system has become depleted from malarial attacks. I have advised its use among my neighbors in similar cases, and it has always proved invaluable."—C. C. Hamilton, Emberson, Tex.

"As a blood-purifier and general builder-up of the system, I have never found anything to equal Ayer's Sar-

CHICAGO.

Proposals for a World's Fair site, containing at least 250 acres, were asked for Thursday by the executive committee.

General Ben Butler has written to Attorney Moses Salomon, of counsel for the anarchists, stating that he is of the opinion that Fielden, Schwab and Neebe, who are now in the Joliet Penitentiary, can be released on writs of habeas corpus, because the forms of law were not complied with in their cases.

COUNTRY.

In an "original package" whisky case at Bangor, Maine, Thursday, the defendant was fined $100 and costs, or ninety days in jail, the Judge holding that he was amenable to the State prohibition law. An appeal was taken.

The Prohibitionists of Kentucky began their State convention Thursday at Lexington. Their platform favors woman suffrage, and Mrs. Josephine K. Henry, of Versailles, was nominated for clerk of the Court of Appeals.

Fire started in a saloon by the explosion of a lamp at Spokane Falls, Wash., Thursday, and destroyed half a block of frame buildings and burned two persons to death. Several others were seriously injured.

Wednesday night at Worcester, Mass., the wife and daughter of President G. Stanley Hall, of Clark University, were suffocated by escaping gas.

The east-bound train on the Montana Union road was derailed near Butte, Montana, May 15. The sleeper, containing a theatrical company, left the track and rolled down a high embankment, three members of the company being killed.

In the Hartford mine of the Lehigh and Wilkes-Barre Coal company at Ashley, three miles from Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Thursday morning, an extensive cave-in occurred in No. 6 colliery, covering an area of more than ten acres. Twenty-seven men were imprisoned. Wreck and ruin was wrought on the surface. Nearly a score of houses were shattered and the families compelled to flee for their lives. Twelve men were afterward taken out badly hurt and six fatally injured. Nine still remain imprisoned in the mine.

It is understood at Boston that the grand jury has found a bill against the Old Colony railroad for not complying with the law requiring the weekly payment of its employees.

The Lottery Company has offered the Louisiana State government $1,000,000 a year for renewal of its charter.

A movement has been inaugurated to secure one million signatures to a memorial to be sent to the czar of Russia, asking that he look into and seek to ameliorate the condition of the exiles in Siberia. Responses are coming in at the rate of 1,500 a day. The petition is couched in very moderate language, reciting the friendly relations of the two nations. It asks that the czar take notice of the widespread interest of our people in the Siberian exile system. The expression of the petition is that in the punishment of some of her subjects Russia is not in harmony with the humanizing sentiments of the age.

Cedar Rapids' City Council on Friday directed the drawing up by the City Attorney of a resolution granting license to "original package" saloons.

Alaska's big volcano, Bogoslov, was reported Friday to be in eruption, filling the surrounding country with ashes.

The Texas Prohibition Convention met at Fort Worth Tuesday and nominated a full ticket. The convention opposed woman suffrage.

An almost total suspension of business was reported at Warren, Ind., Tuesday, on account of the boycott brought against the merchants of that place by the Farmers' Alliance.

FOREIGN.

The majority of the iron works at Bilbao, Spain, have stopped operations. Rioting has broken out. Several miners have been killed while resisting gendarmes. Troops are hurrying to the scene.

A rising of the people against the government of Brazil took place on Tuesday at Porto Alegre, in the province of Rio Grand Do Sul. A part of the troops fraternized with the people. The outbreak was suppressed by the police and the troops remained loyal. During the fighting a number of persons were wounded. The primary cause of the disorder is alleged to have been popular discontent over the new banking laws instituted by Dr. Barboza, the minister of finance.

The Socialists of Germany have introduced a bill in the Reichstag, demanding a working day of ten hours. They have elected delegates on all the committees. The Government labor bill empowers the Bundesrath by an imperial order to extend the prohibition of Sunday labor, also to make exceptions to the general provisions of the bill. One month after the bill has passed all employers must placard their factories with the new regulations.

Premier Crispi of Italy, in a confidential note to King Umberto on the May Day demonstration, states that sixty foreign agitators were expelled from Italy; that 600 Italians, distributing revolutionary pamphlets, were arrested; that 8,000 suspects were punished or warned; that 300 soldiers possessing manifestoes were punished; that no dynamite or arms were seized, and that on the whole Italy was less troubled than other countries.

A London news agency learns that a marriage has been arranged between Henry M. Stanley and Miss Dorothy Tennant, daughter of the late Charles Tennant, has become well known through her clever pictures in the Academy and other galleries. The marriage will probably take place early in June.

The whole structure was blown to pieces and twenty-two persons were killed. In addition to the killed, over one hundred persons are injured. The explosion caused the wildest excitement throughout the city.

Ingersoll at last has confessed. He has a god. The League Protective Association of Cigar Manufacturers of New York city recently gave a dinner where the celebrated infidel responded to the toast "Tobacco." "Think," said he, "of waiting for a train, without tobacco. Think of lying in a rifle-pit waiting for the charge, without tobacco. It is awful even to dwell upon such thoughts. Tobacco is divine." We have read of "Bob" being in a hog-pen during the war, and know something of his lying, even when not in a pit, so that we are not surprised to hear him calling tobacco divine. In what, we would ask, does its divinity consist? In the taste? In the smell? In the smoke? It is a fit divinity for such a character as Ingersoll.

Four men eminent in the history of Chicago and the interior States have just been buried: Judge Drummond, Hon. Wirt Dexter, Hon. Andrew Shuman, late Lieutenant Governor of Illinois, and Rev. Dr. Joseph Cummings, president of Northwestern University. Mr. Dexter was a grandson of the great Massachusetts lawyer Samuel Dexter, who was twice member of the Cabinet of the United States. He inherited the ability and public spirit of his ancestor, and was one of the most eminent lawyers of this city; nor, we believe, was his name ever written on the roll of a secret society. Mr. Shuman and Dr. Cummings were both reputed members of the Masonic lodge, the name of the former being on the roll of Oriental Lodge, No. 33. But no Masonic lodge or lodge ceremony appeared at the funeral ceremonies of either of these gentlemen.

The "patriotic" lodges, so-called, are eagerly placing flags over our public school buildings, as if the starry emblem of freedom would save the children for America and perpetuate American institutions. But while the flag waves above, the Bible is kicked out below, and leaves but the sepulcher of Americanism. The other day Secretary Tracy of the Navy department presented a Catholic "Sunday-school" in Brooklyn with a fine silk flag in the name of a G. A. R. lodge. Secret societies and politicians may fondly hope to nationalize alien elements by such methods. It is only white-washing sepulchers. The bones of decay and death are still within. In the same city a few days later the flags on the public buildings were put at half mast on the Sabbath day out of respect to "Father" Keegan, Vicar-general of the Romish diocese, just dead. How long before the school flags will be put to the same use? Not long surely unless there by a change in dealing with the principles taught beneath them.

The Roman priest who lately assailed the public school system at Joliet, Illinois, with such malignity, has been forbidden to speak on that subject in future. Perhaps Mr. McCann may now begin to ask himself why he may not in America enjoy freedom of speech? That is what America is for, according to the idea of some anarchists. Who forbids him now to speak against an American institution? Not American law, surely, or the executors of that law. This fact should lead the unfortunate priest to reflect that the system which he assailed was part of the American guaranty of free speech; while the hierarchy, for whom he at first ignorantly spoke, and to whose despotic mandate he now submits, can neither brook free speech or the American system which permits it.

The popularity of the Eiffel tower, in Paris, gives to the project for a similar structure at our Columbus Fair much assurance. The French engineer, it is said, will himself come over and erect a tower of much greater height; and every plan for buildings contemplates an elevated building from 1,000 to 1,500 feet above the ground. In London, too, a company has been formed with the sole object of erecting an immense tower. But these are, after all, only Babel notions. The world is never likely to be greatly benefited by the Eiffel tower. Its contributions to science are meager. Its only end is the gratification of curiosity and the pleasure that may follow. But at what cost of life! The New York Sun says that the loss of twenty-six lives was officially reported in building it; and that 6,000 men were injured during its construction. If such sacrifice of human life is necessary, or even probable, let us have no Moloch in our World's Fair.

One of the most fascinating and remarkable articles ever published in Scribner's Magazine is Stanley's account of the "Emin Pasha Relief Expedition." A fine portrait of the explorer fronts the title, and in every line of the resolute mouth, the keen, commanding eye, the bronzed and toughened cheek, the short, white hair, we may read again the story of sufferings endured, of great determinations made, and of matchless accomplishment. But above all the harrowing interest of the story is Stanley's noble confession. It will be remembered of him when his hardships are forgotten. In a letter of his to Sir William MacKinnon, which is quoted at length, the great explorer says: "You who throughout your long and varied life have steadfastly believed in the Christian's God, and before men have professed your devout thankfulness for many mercies vouchsafed to you, will better understand, than many others, the feelings which animate me when I find myself back in civilization, uninjured in life or health, after passing through so many stormy and distressful periods. Constrained at the darkest hour to humbly confess that without God's help I was helpless, I vowed a vow in the forest solitudes that I would confess His aid before men. Silence, as of death, was around about me; it was midnight; I was weakened by illness, prostrated by fatigue, and wan with anxiety for my white and black companions, whose fate was a mystery. In this physical and mental distress I besought God to give me back my people. Nine hours later we were exulting with a rapturous joy. In full view of all was the crimson-flag with the crescent, and beneath its waving folds was the long-lost rear column."

A year ago Masonic circles were in much confusion at the attempt to enforce a new law of lodge fellowship not given in the "ancient constitutions" of Anderson or Webb. Though promulgated with much parade of virtue, the edict against saloon-keepers affected nothing, even in Missouri. Now the Odd-fellows pose in the act of virtue. For several years the question of saloon-keepers in the membership has worried the Grand Lodge of Missouri, and at last the vote was carried against them last Thursday, by thirteen majority. But prominent members of the order say the new rule does not effect the wholesale dealers and manufacturers of human poison; and the hypocrisy of the order is herein revealed. The latter class are rich; the poor dram-seller may be a dirty fellow. The wholesale poisoner is taken into the fraternal arms of the lodge, a brother like Jonathan to David. The retailer is cast out as the devil's own. The retail druggists who have a back room liquor hole are also excepted. They keep broadcloth and a fair mask over their wickedness. The opponents of the new law propose to insist that liquor dealers of all grades and conditions be subject to its provisions, well knowing that the law would thus become most odious to the simulating order.

SEDUCING THE CHILDREN.

BY S. WINFRED MACK.

The following paragraph is from a letter in the Montreal Daily Witness. It may prove interesting to the Cynosure readers. The Witness, during the life time of the late John Dougall, was strongly anti-secret in its utterances. It is now in the hands of his son; and, while earnestly advocating many reforms, has not only ceased to carry on an aggressive policy against the lodge, but panders to it in many respects:

ODD-FELLOWSHIP.

SIR:—At a meeting of Odd-fellows of the I. O. O. F., Manchester Unity, held in Chatham Street Hall, on Thursday evening, they organized a Juvenile Branch of Odd-fellows, which admits members from eight to eighteen years. Quite a large number of boys were initiated, and it is expected that inside of twelve months the membership will be upwards of 200. This Branch is to be called Juvenile Branch No. 1 of the Montreal District. It will meet every alternate Thursday from 7:30 to 9 p. m., and also expects to turn out at the annual district church parade on the first Sunday in June.

To me, this appears the most dangerous lodge movement of the present time. The spirit of imitation is remarkably strong in children. Boys smoke, drink and swear simply in order to be looked upon as men. Here is a new opening for them. Under the cover of darkness they may be initiated into the secrets of the lodge-room, invested with mysterious and high-sounding titles and clothed with gilded trinkets and gew-gaws. Curiosity is satisfied; vanity tickled; and they go home impressed with the idea of increased superiority over their mothers and sisters as the sworn custodians of secrets which the latter may not know. The home-life, already too much broken into, is robbed of another evening; and the boy, at the time when he needs the most careful watching, is placed, to a greater or less extent, beyond the pale of home influence. The project displays ingenuity worthy of a better cause. Perhaps the worst feature of the whole plan is the initiating of boys into lodgery before they are old enough to judge of its merits or demerits for themselves.

This movement, while in every way deplorable, should serve to impress upon our minds one of the most powerful weapons against the system, viz, the proper education of the young. A skillful teacher will find opportunity, without directly attacking any system, to inculcate principles hostile to all forms of secretism. In the elementary schools of many of the States it is now customary to give oral instruction in such subjects as morals and political economy. It would not be introducing irrelevant matter, if a teacher were to dwell upon the evils of secrecy in the abstract, or show its antagonism to just government as illustrated in the lodge system generally.

Sabbath-schools and Bands of Hope should also be utilized for this purpose, especially when one is dealing with the liquor traffic, of which the lodge is one of the main supports. Proper literature should be introduced into children's libraries. Such a book, for instance, as Miss Flagg's "Between Two Opinions," in a quiet and inoffensive way might do a vast amount of good.

In conclusion, let us neglect no opportunity for influencing the young against this, as well as against every other evil. Here lies the secret of ultimate success. The Jesuit seeks not present results as he endeavors to secure control of the public schools of our land. Indeed, even if successful, he will not be likely to live until his plans are realized. But he is content, if, in future ages, the temporal supremacy of Rome shall be re-established. Let us take a cue from him and act accordingly.

FACTS THAT NEED NATIONAL EMPHASIS.

BY REV. J. M. FOSTER.

Terrence, the Roman moralist, said, "I am a man, and nothing that concerns the well-being of my fellow men can be alien to my breast." I find there are certain great facts needing special emphasis at the present hour.

The first is, that the Lord Jesus Christ is the King of nations. The people are willing to recognize his authority in the church. They acknowledge his right to the homage of the individual. But that he is the Lawgiver and King of nations is too often ignored or repudiated. The executive committee of the National Reform Association wrote President Harrison last October requesting him to recognize the name that is above every name in his Thanksgiving Proclamation. The letter was not answered and the Proclamation appeared without the name of Christ. Two of our District Secretaries attended the National convention of the Prohibition party in Indianapolis in 1888. They interviewed every member of the committee on resolutions and urged that the claims of the Lord Jesus Christ as Ruler of nations be recognized in the platform. This the committee absolutely refused to do. They said, "We have Jews in our party who do not believe in Christ. We have deists who will not acknowledge him. We have many Christians who do not think Christ has any thing to do with politics. Such a recognition of Christ as you propose would alienate these voters. We can't afford to lose their votes." That decision sealed their doom as a party. The discerning eye might have seen the finger of a man's hand tracing their doom on the wall, "Weighed in the balance and found wanting." No organization will be permitted to lead the sacramental hosts to victory in the conflict for moral reforms that does not honor Christ. But the fact is that party arose as high and no higher than public sentiment on that question. The people need to be educated on this subject. The message must be proclaimed on the house tops the Christ reigns as King.

2. Another fact needing emphasis is that the Ten Commandments are the sole and only basis of moral reforms. The American Sabbath Union has done a noble work in awakening a public interest in Sabbath legislation. But they are in danger of betraying the cause by surrendering the moral element in the question. It is true that our physical and mental constitution demand one day in seven for rest. A man cannot be his best self who does not rest every seventh day. A man has an inalienable right to this rest; and the government as the guardian of the rights of the people should secure this rest to all by law.

In Connorsville, Ind., for the past eighteen months a temperance meeting has been held every Saturday evening. The ministers and laymen who conduct it insist upon high license and tax as the remedy for the drink curse. They invited your correspondent to address them one week ago. Before we were through they found they had loaded the wrong gun. The difficulty with these brethren is, they fail to distinguish between a physical and a moral evil. A physical evil we may limit and weaken and cripple and burden. But a moral evil must be destroyed. Lotteries, houses of ill-fame, and saloons and gambling dens are fit only for burning. They must be exterminated.

We have on the statute books of all our States laws against blasphemy and profanity. What is the basis of these laws? Some say the protection of society. The blasphemer injures the public; and "public safety is supreme law." But why does he injure society? Because it is a violation of the Third Commandment.

The state executes the criminal. Why? To protect society, you say. But many oppose capital punishment and maintain that this end can be reached just as well by imprisoning for life. How are they to be met? There is only one answer. God has placed the "sword" in the hand of the civil officer for this very purpose. They are the agents of Jehovah to execute the law, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood by man shall his blood be shed."

The state punishes polygamy. According to what law? You cannot prove from nature that it is a crime. The animal kingdom does not teach it. Heathen nations do not teach it. We learn from the law of God that it is a crime. "They twain shall be one flesh."

The liquor traffic is a thieving, murderous, a God-dishonoring and man-destroying system. It breaks and tramples under foot every precept of the Decalogue. The state is under the highest obligations to destroy it outright.

3. The third fact needing emphasis is that God has a controversy with this nation because of its rebellion against his anointed One. Floods and fires and cyclones, strikes and race conflicts, the drink crime, the lodge, a secularized Sabbath, speedy and easy divorce, and political corruption; these are some of the evils with which our nation is afflicted. That which a nation sows that shall it also reap. We have sown to the wind and we reap the whirlwind. God has a purpose in all this. He is saying, "Kiss the Son, lest he be angry, and ye perish from the way when his wrath is kindled but a little."

ANOTHER WAY TO CATCH THEM.

PIGEON-SHOT FOR SMALL GAME.

Here come the merry boys and girls. Next the dear women who give their time so devotedly to the noble cause of training the young in temperance. While waiting I took a brief survey of the surroundings. The room was small, but contained eighteen large spittoons! Who uses this hall? Looking round at the framed charters, I saw that at least four different secret societies met there regularly.

The Band of Hope opened in a form which reminded me somewhat of my old lodge evenings. I gave the dear children a talk on our mission fields and the heathen. But I felt that these lodge surroundings would soon draw them into the delusive "mysteries" of modern civilized heathenism.

Then I went to address another Band of Hope in a Methodist church. This band was also under the auspices of the I. O. G. T. The forms and the books used are such as to prepare the children to join the lodge when a little further along in their teens. As a part of the program this day a temperance lecturer of local note gave a long and strong talk, mostly about the vast good done by a secret temperance order.

Now, why is it necessary for so excellent a work as Bands of Hope to be used as a cat's paw to draw the young into lodgery? Is there not a "more excellent way?" Why not run Bands of Hope on the broad principles of Gospel total abstinence, without the secret society flavor about them?

Christians can see readily that the great lodge systems are drawing people away from the churches and the means of grace. Why put your children under the wing of these shallow systems? Let Bands of Hope be established by W. C. T. U. ladies, by members of the various churches, or by union workers. But let them have nothing to do, in books, methods or surroundings, with the "Secret Kingdom." "Walk as children of the light."

THE THREE RUFFIANS.

A STORY FOR CHILDREN, ESPECIALLY FOR CHILDREN OF MASONS

BY REV. A. THOMSON.

Now listen, all good children, and I will tell a story, 'Tis not of Borgia's wickedness, nor yet of Caesar's glory; And yet it is so wonderful that when you've heard me tell it,

I think you'll own that Gulliver himself could not excel it.

In times so very distant that the Saber-tooth was living, And the Mastodon and Mammoth their loud trumpeting were giving,

When Solomon was living in his palaces so fine, And the "Widow's Son" was shining in the architectural line;

'Twas while the temple building was approaching its completion, And the Fellow-crafts were working under Hiram's admonition;

There rose a dreadful rumpus, and call it what you like, I saw those ancient workmen were just spoiling for a strike.

It seems there was a certain word of talismanic force, A word could make the workman rich or start a balky horse; And none of all the Fellow-craft had this beneath his bonnet,

For Sol. and both the Hiram's had a booming trust upon it.

And so those wicked Fellow-crafts resolved to break the trust,

To fall upon the Widow's Son and tell him that he must Yield up his precious secret, and if he would not do it, To open wide the trap of death and shove the master through it.

But when they went to bed at night and thought the matter over,

The most of them were just as sad as honest Ralph the Rover,

When he found his vessel sinking in the ocean's mighty swell,

Right in the place where long ago he dropped the Inch Cape bell.

Yet there were three great ruffians resolved the deed to do, Who swore by Baal and Ashteroth to see the matter through;

Those were the wicked Jubelo, and Jubela the glum, But you never knew a villain like the dreadful Jubelum.

Now these three precious rascals at the evening hour of prayer,

Took post about the temple, for the Widow's Son was there; King Sol. must have been feasting, for the guards were not on duty;—

Alas! the great grand master was a trifle fond of beauty.

When men will do a desperate deed their means are desperate too,

You should have seen those vagabonds when ready for review;

They were a perfect arsenal—not of bayonets, swords and balls,

But of try-squares and gauges, and of mighty setting mauls.

Alas! poor, faithful Widow's Son, he would not break the trust,

And so they squared and gauged him, and mauled him into dust;

But when Sol. heard the story,—no, not since time began, Has ever this round world of ours beheld so mad a man.

And when his sheriff found the knaves and brought them to his feet,

He cut them into pieces as the butcher cuts his meat:

From one he took the lying tongue, from one the faithless heart,

And he disemboweled Jubelum for his atrocious part.

And now, dear, faithful children, this tale is just as true

As the story of Alladin, or the Beard that was so blue;

And often in the gloomy night, a little after ten,

'Tis told in tones of wonder to big, bewhiskered men;

While the sentence of the rascals is still Masonic law;

And if you don't believe me, just go and ask your pa.

The Southwestern Presbyterian in a full column article calls on the American Press to help fight the Louisiana State Lottery Company. It says in closing, "The fight with the Louisiana State Lottery Company is the fight of the Republic." Leading papers in the country, as the Inter-Ocean, News, and Herald of this city, have bitterly opposed the renewal of the Lottery Company's license. The New York secular papers and the whole religious press of the country have opposed it. Nothing but a wholesale job of corrupt money influence can lengthen its life.

THE SITUATION IN MASSACHUSETTS.

BY REV. HENRY T. CHEEVER.

Local option and high license—An object lesson for the nation—Extraordinary spectacle at Dracut—Movement in aid of the Blair Education bill—The country to be roused in support of the American free school.

The struggle for prohibition this year in Massachusetts, and its partial success in not a few of the large towns, cities and counties, have developed certain phenomena of universal interest and importance that must not be hid in a corner. The nation has learned before now, as in Milton's charming Comus, the deceptive poison of alcohol:

"The visage quite transforms of him that drinks,
And the inglorious image of a beast
Fixes instead, unmoulding reason's mintage
Charactered in the face."

But the world has seldom looked upon such an object lesson as has been given of late to Massachusetts and the country at large, in the little village of Dracut, just across the Merrimac from the populous city of Lowell. That city having voted no-license, and the little neighbor-town for license, competition for the single Dracut high-license monopoly ran high, and the coveted prize was finally awarded to John Lennon, one of the largest wholesale dealers in Lowell, for the sum of $8,000. The first Saturday of May, the second day after the closure by local option of all the dram-shops in Lowell, the rush of the thirsty from the no-license city on the other side of the river was simply appalling. On that day the great factories close at noon, and so immediate and mighty was the scamper and tramp of drinkers across the border-line that the scenes of drunkenness and revelry are said to have been unparalleled. More than three thousand people at once were in and about this rendezvous of guzzlers. Ten bar-keepers were all incompetent to the task of serving the drinking crowd. Neither could the appointed policemen keep them in order, nor prevent their smashing doors and windows, capturing the building and taking possession of the premises.

Drunken men and boys lay stretched out insensible in all directions; and the town being without adequate police protection of its own, and the police of Lowell being both unable and not inclined to aid in preserving order beyond the city limits, there was a carnival of disorder and debauchery that would have delighted the fiends of Deacon Giles's distillery in old Salem itself. The fallacy of the folly, not to say the unfairness and inefficacy of local option and high license were most impressively proven. And the upshot was, in consequence of such a nuisance, that the high-license monopolist asked the selectmen of Dracut to have his license surrendered and his great groggery closed.

The working of no-license here in Worcester, with a mixed population of some 85,000, as yet is admirable. Prohibition is well enforced and does prohibit. Vigilant watch is kept by mayor and marshal over all suspicious places. Seizures of hidden liquors are frequent. The cordon of surrounding towns is dry, as is also most of the county. And since the grand drunk of saloonists and bar-keepers the last night of license, the city has been quiet, and arrests for drunkenness few. Liquor signs are all taken down and painted over, and a general submission is manifested to the new temperance order. No liquor is allowed to be sold anywhere, either by druggists or at hotels, for drink or for medicine, and the effect is immediately apparent in the reduction of cases in court, arrests for drunkenness, and assignments to the penitentiary.

At the same time a movement is being made in Worcester in behalf of the Blair Education bill by a memorial largely signed by citizens as follows:

To the U. S. Senate and House of Representatives:— Your memorialists, a responsible body of loyal American citizens, residents of Worcester, Massachusetts, alarmed by the late failure in the United States Senate, of the important measure that goes by the name of the Blair Education bill, thrice before carried through the Senate by large majorities, unite in requesting that your honorable bodies will forthwith reconsider and put into law that bill or something equivalent; whereby the means of impartial primary education in free public schools may be secured to all the illiterate freedmen and white inhabitants of the South, by the guarded appropriation of national funds to supplement state educational aid, as the same free school education is now secured to the people of less illiterate sections of the country by state-aid alone. We urge that the honor and faith of the nation are pledged to providing such an education, especially to the densely ignorant freedmen and the children of freedmen, through the agency of the tried American system of unsectarian public schools. And we, therefore, implore our national Congress to see to it that such education does not fail, by immediate national legislation, adequate to the emergency of increasing ignorance and illiteracy, and plainly demanded by a large majority of the intelligent American people without distinction of party.

Public meetings are contemplated in Mechanics Hall, Worcester, and Faneuil Hall, Boston, to be addressed by Senator Hoar and others. In the judgment of your correspondent it is of the utmost importance that speedy action be taken by the people, and the example of Worcester is to be commended to other cities.

The recent Supreme Court decision seems adverse to the prohibition cause as did the Dred-Scott decision seem a calamity to the Anti-slavery Reform, when in reality it was the needed stimulant to rouse the country to the last battle for equal rights. So, methinks, will this last decision of the Supreme Court be the occasion of a more united and vigorous effort than ever before for national prohibition. But would to God there were everywhere pulpits like that of the Church of the Puritans at New York in the anti-bellum times, to arouse the people and give expression to the Christian sense of the nation against the machinations of Jesuits undermining the foundations of our American system of public schools! New England ought to be heard at Washington with a protest of no uncertain sound, in behalf of the free, unsectarian, common school, now endangered by the threatened failure of the Blair Education bill. Let our still living poet, Whittier, speak for her again as he did of yore:

From her rough coast, and isles which hungry ocean
Gnaws with his surges; from the fisher's skiff,
With white sail swaying to the billows' motion
Round rocks and cliff,

From the free fireside of her unbought farmer;
From the free laborer at his loom and wheel;
From the brown smith-shop, where, beneath the hammer,
Rings the red steel,

From each and all, if God hath not forsaken
Our land, and left us to an evil choice,
Loud as the summer thunderbolt shall waken
A PEOPLE'S VOICE!
Worcester, Mass.

A GENUINE WORKINGMAN TO THE STRIKERS

The following earnest appeal gives voice for thousands of honest laboring men who are distressed by the despotism of labor-lodge oaths. It is a letter to the Inter Ocean:

Will you permit me through the columns of your very excellent and widely-circulated paper to say a word to the striking carpenters, who, for some time past, have been endeavoring by means both fair and foul to gain admittance to the Campbell building on Monroe street, where several of us have been doing carpenter work, and where we propose to continue our employment so long as the gentlemanly contractors need our service, and the Almighty is pleased to give us health and strength.

A few days ago a squad of carpenters, evidently of foreign birth, talked to us in a threatening manner, and one of them assured me that if we continued our work there would be "some bloody heads around here." We continued our work without molestation until to-day, when we noticed a large number of strikers swarming into the back yard of the Campbell building from Madison street, and hastening around toward the entrance of the apartment where we were eating our dinners. This action, together with the reports of their unlawful conduct in other parts of the city, and threats which each of us had received from time to time, compelled us to believe that the mob were intent upon doing us personal violence, and we determined to fight for our lives. The mob came to the very door, but withdrew to the sidewalk only when assured that they could only enter at the risk of their lives. They then tried to persuade us that they only wished to talk with us about joining the union, and wished me to come down from my place in the second-story front window and enter into friendly converse with them, but on account of their anger, which they were unable to conceal, I thought it best not to place myself among them, and I have reason now to congratulate myself for not having acceded to their wishes, for I am informed that while they were endeavoring to convince me that their motives were good, several of their party were making a desperate effort to climb up the back way.

Now, gentlemen, I have only recently come from Dakota, where, as you well know, we have had hard times for a number of years, and my circumstances will not permit me to lie idle at this time of the year, when there is plenty of work to do at fair wages. I know nothing about your union save what I have learned through the papers, and what I have seen of you, and I think some of you will admit that your conduct, especially that part of it which has been most widely reported, has not been such as might be expected to inspire confidence. You go about the city in squads, bruising the heads of poor men who are trying to earn an honest living, simply because they do not think as you do. Most of you are foreigners, whose habits of life call for a greater expenditure of money than would suffice to supply the wants of many of us. If you would drink less beer, use less tobacco, treat less when you cannot afford, and lose less time, you would soon find plenty instead of want knocking at your doors. Your children would acquire better ideas of life, and the great republic which has stood with open arms for more than a century to receive you as a part of our society, would be more secure. I will not advise you to abandon or continue your strike, for I am not prepared to say which step would be better for you at this time; but I do know that you must show a better disposition toward those of your craft who have not seen fit to join your union, if you expect to keep the sympathy of the public. If you act like anarchists you must expect to be treated as such.

I have no objection to talking with you. I will comply with your wishes in this regard with pleasure, but don't come in a mob when I am at work, and don't show such angry feelings, for no good can come from consulting with men when they allow their anger to run away with their judgment. They tell me that you will waylay me and kill me; but as I have done nothing to deserve such punishment at your hands I can hardly believe that you will do that. Speaking for myself, I can say that I have no desire to injure you in any way. I simply decline to join you in idleness, which, as you well know, brings distress to many people who are in no way responsible for your grievances, and who will not be benefited one cent even if you gain all of your demands. There is no country on the face of the earth where the laboring man is so well paid for his work as here in the United States, and while we occupy such high ground there can be no good reason for such uprisings as we have at present. He who advises the workingman to resort to idleness and violence to better his condition is no true friend of labor.

The servant who makes his employer's interests his own, and puts forth his best efforts to this end, will never fare ill at the hands of capital. But he who is always thinking that he is doing too much and receiving too little, will make for himself misery and woe. I have worked hard all my life, and my sympathies are with the working people, but I cannot believe that our condition can be improved by resorting to strikes. If capital should strike it could lie idle until labor starved to death. Your true friend and well wisher,

WILLIAM KENNEDY.

MASONIC BADGES.

I crossed bows, so to speak, the other day with an ancient mariner whom I had frequently met in lodge. After a chat about freights and the possibility of the season's trade, I said:

"How is it I haven't seen you in lodge for several years?"

"I got kind of tired of Masonry after a little thing that happened to me one day in Oswego," he replied.

"If not of too private a nature," said I, "perhaps you'll explain."

"I don't mind if I do reel off the yarn to you," said the mariner. "You see, I never believed in using the square and compass on the stern of my vessel, as some fellows do, as I thought it was a kind of showing off what you were. Wasn't I right?"

"Yes, and I'm glad to hear you express such an opinion," was my reply.

"Now, don't run afore the wind too fast, or you'll have to take in a reef. Well, one day outside of Oswego I was waiting for a tug, and so were several other captains. I was the first to signal for a tug, and soon one came out, puffing like a locomotive. Instead of coming straight for me, however, it took a sort of circle, and before I knew what had happened I saw a line passed from one of the vessels to the tug, and then that vessel went kiting in. I was mad, but between my profanity and kicking things around generally, I saw a square and compass on the stern of the favored vessel. I got into the dock later in the day, and determined that ever after I would let the world know I was a Mason. Before going up town I went into the cabin and hunted up a Masonic pin, which I fastened in my shirt front. I strutted up the dock as proud as if I was an admiral, but had not gone far when a gentlemanly-looking fellow tapped me on the shoulder, shook me by the hand, and said he was glad to meet a brother. I didn't catch on to the grip, but entered into conversation with him, and told him my day's experience. He sympathized with me, and suggested I should get a square and compass carved out of wood and gilt, and attach it to the stern of my vessel. I caught on at once, and he agreed to have an extra good article on hand by noon next day. He was prompt, and the emblem was immense, but the price was immenser—$25. I paid him, and in an hour sailed for Port Hope. On the cross trip we had a heavy sea chasing us, and, would you believe, when we reached Port Hope all that remained of the emblem was three six-inch screws and a few pieces of plaster. The old thing was a plaster cast, and I was swindled. Now you know why I am soured."—Canadian Craftsman.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 21, 1890.

The capital's municipal authorities have, for many months past, spent much time and labor in accumulating facts as to the character and management of the drinking saloons of the city. They know all about them now, and have been acting upon their information in such a way that the liquor dealers of the District and also the policemen of the District are deeply aroused. The strictest vigilance has been instituted over the saloons. The name of Col. Roberts is a terror to the liquor dealers, for it is he who drops into their dens of iniquity, incognito, at any hour of day or night, to inform himself by personal inspection of the conduct of business in these places so that he may report the truth to his brother commissioners. Col. Roberts found that the Sunday liquor law was violated in hundreds of instances through the rear entrance to the saloons, and that the police not only failed in their duty by declining to report these violations of the law, but winked at them, and assisted the liquor dealers in thus evading the law. In consequence, a large number of these false preservers of decency and order have recently lost their positions, and their discharge has caused something of a panic among the remainder of the brotherhood.

So last Sunday was a notable day with the toppers, for they really went without their drinks. Col. Roberts' policemen were afraid to wink, even if they wanted to do so, and the day was one of the "dry" Sundays, such as were experienced two years ago when the W. C. T. U. took an active part in the prosecution of saloon cases. Even the trusted friends of the saloon-keepers had to quench their thirst with something milder than beer or wine. In many saloons where meals were served, glasses of milk took the places of beer and whisky, and it was impossible to purchase liquor at many of the drug stores.

The Supreme Court of the District has just sustained the city commissioners in refusing to grant a liquor license to the proprietors of the Globe Theater of this city. This bar was one into which Col. Roberts dropped quietly several times and found that instead of being an orderly place, it was one calculated to debauch and injure young men. He says the average daily attendance there is from 600 to 700 persons, and that at least one-half of them are under twenty-one years of age.

Col. Roberts recently made an appeal to the moral sentiment of the community for assistance in the fight which the city commissioners are now making for order and quiet. He said the press should arouse public sentiment against these dens that they are trying to clear away. From the number of persons who have come to him in the interest of the proprietors of these resorts which they are laboring to eradicate, it seemed to him that the majority of the people must be opposed to the efforts of the commissioners.

A very stringent bill to regulate the sale of distilled liquor in the District of Columbia was recently introduced in the Senate. It places the license at $500 for wholesale and $1,000 for retail. For engaging in the business without license a fine of $600 is provided and for a second offense, in addition to a like fine, the party shall be imprisoned for not less than six months, nor more than one year, and the stock of liquors be seized and destroyed by the chief of police. For violation of any provision the fine is to be not less than $250 nor more than $500. Assistance in the violation of the act is also made a misdemeanor, with a fine or imprisonment. After the first day of November, 1890, the number of licensed bar-rooms in the District of Columbia is limited to four hundred, and the commissioners are given power to revoke and annul all licenses in excess of that number.

An F. street druggist says he is daily surprised at the amount of sauce made in Washington and the number of sick people here who need whisky. The ladies he says who buy, always give the sauce excuse, and they never come without explaining what they are going to do with it. They are shocked if asked to sample the liquor, and say they wouldn't know whether it was good or bad until it is in the sauce. The men who buy their liquor at the drug store, resort to the same tactics, only they talk about "medicinal purpose" instead of culinary. *

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

THE NEW ENGLAND WORK—ITS PROGRESS AND NEEDS.

BOSTON, May 22, 1890.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Pressure of duties has prevented me from reporting as often and fully as I would have otherwise done. I knew, too, that your columns were crowded and your readers literally feasted on the good things of the Conference just now, and have thought my brief epistles would scarcely be missed. I want it understood, however, that the cause in New England is coming up and its advocates are not to be suppressed.

I push aside a half-written sermon that I have agreed to preach in Bro. Hood's (U. P.) church on Sabbath, to say that there are victories to rejoice over and needs to be seriously and prayerfully considered by the friends. Since last October there have been added to the list of active outspoken opponents to the lodge, who have spoken out publicly, in Boston and vicinity, the honored names of A. J. Gordon, O. P. Gifford, Joseph Cook, R. D. Grant, F. O. Cunningham, L. W. Frink, I. J. Lansing and Elder Hughes. These all have boldly identified themselves with the anti-lodge reform since the question of a Boston conference began to be agitated, and I am assured that should another and similar meeting be held, this encouraging list would be more than quadrupled by accessions of pastors from New England pulpits. I have preached and spoken frequently, but my chief work has been distribution of literature and personal conversation.

The craft is extremely sensitive here and showed their vigilance by stirring up quite a commotion when we put out a sign advertising expositions of secret orders, etc. I had been careful to keep within the law, and when appealed to by the police, I reminded them that they were amenable to law as well as ordinary citizens, and the upshot of the whole matter is, that after considerable bluster, things have quieted down and the sign remains. Numerous parties have called for tracts and some have purchased books. I have been kindly warned by callers who did not seem disposed to talk or read on the general subject, but felt called upon to let me know how extremely perilous such an attempt was in Boston, etc. If, as seemed possible, the object was to inspire "fear of man" they have utterly failed, and we have no expectation of being routed since Sister Jones "holds the fort," and will defend her own and the rights of her tenants with discretion; but, if "the tug of war" should come, at any cost.

Since I began writing this, an immense bulletin board opposite my window has been covered with flaming pictures of "Molloy Maguire" scenes. Burning buildings, groups of masked men like the Odd-fellows, with torches. Men bound and gagged and others hanging on trees. Deep, dark council chambers entered under the "skull and cross-bones" so familiar to the lodge-goers; and ominous warnings, such as "Leave within ten days or die," and later the panorama, a bloody conflict between the "secret empire" and civil authorities, are the prominent features of a drama from real history to be given, as advertised, in a prominent "place of amusement" in this city. Certain it is that the original was anything but amusement for the actors, and how any one whose tastes are not vitiated by the mock or real murders of the lodge can derive comfort from such exhibitions of outlawry, it is not easy to divine; and why thinking men who witness the multiplication of secret lodges, until they outnumber the churches three to one, do not see the danger to our country, and read the future of our nation in these lawless mobs, is passing strange. It needs no seer to interpret these inscriptions on the wall.

I was about to say something of the needs of this particular field. Here, as elsewhere, there is great need of closer and more intelligent co-operation among those who are set for the defence of the truth. This difficulty will, I trust, be at least put in process of removal so soon as a representative convention of the New England friends can be held, and such a convention is greatly needed and should be held at the earliest practicable date. The convention held at Hoyt's Grove on invitation of that most excellent and brave brother and sister who own it, has been productive of great good, but owing to fewness of numbers it could be hardly called a representative gathering, though the attendance was from the bravest and the best in our Spartan ranks. The place was new to most of us, and the ways to reach it unfamiliar. We did not know the beauty of the scenery or the sterling worth of the host and hostess who should welcome us at our coming. It was the first and experimental effort in that line, and attended with many difficulties and drawbacks not likely again to occur. The success, despite all drawbacks, was sufficient to justify another meeting, which, if well worked up, I feel sure would be much more generally attended, and be followed by larger results.

Funds also are needed for the New England work. Since I came to the field a few brethren have contributed liberally, and in fact three or four have practically sustained us in the work. But the general ingatherings, as I have recently learned from the secretary of the New England Association, have been exceedingly small. Only a mere pittance has been paid to Miss Flagg on what was promised her at the beginning of the year, and those who have given pledges, and those who have not, should send to Miss Flagg, Wellesley, Mass., what they can spare as an offering to the Lord in this cause. Two or three thousand dollars seems a trifle to raise for a good cause in New England, but if friends will forward one-half that sum to Miss Flagg, the New England secretary, the work will move forward with greatly accelerated speed. Don't forget the fact that it takes money to carry on the anti-secrecy work in New England, and when your check or money are in the envelope, write plainly Miss E. E. Flagg, Wellesley, Mass.

I don't remember to have noticed anything in the Cynosure about the burning of the Baptist church at West Boylston, of which our fearless Bro. L. W. Frink is pastor. The church, and the lodges that had their place of worship and service above the audience room, were undoubtedly the heaviest losers, but the pastor suffered a considerable loss in the spoiling of his goods and books hastily hustled out and promiscuously scattered about in the expectation that the parsonage would go along with the church. It was saved, however, but valuable books and other articles were missing when the scattered effects were gathered up, and as he had no insurance, and is not encumbered with a surfeit of riches, it would be an excellent investment for some of the Lord's stewards to help this brother who has stood so nobly for the truth, and against such fearful odds.

J. P. STODDARD.

ROUND ABOUT WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 23, 1890.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Since my last letter I have concluded work in Brooklyn, N. Y.; visited Baltimore and Alexandria, Va.; and have arranged for future lectures in both the latter places. The interest manifest at recent meetings has been as good as could be expected at this season of the year. The friends who gathered to hear my lecture in a Lutheran church in Brooklyn, of which Rev. C. S. Everson is pastor, gave a vote of thanks, a good contribution and a request to return. The chart which I have used for some time past showing the process of degradation a man must pass through who becomes a Mason, has never failed to interest. Through the kindness of pastor Johannes of St. Paul's Lutheran church, Baltimore, I am soon to have another twice as large and much better fitted for lectures before large audiences.

The fact that the Cynosure seemingly, though not intentionally, misrepresented the position of the German Lutheran church on the school question, has constantly been brought to my notice. The statement that they united with the Catholics to defeat the Bennett school bill in Wisconsin, while in one sense true, is not in another. Both cast their ballots against the bill. But the German Lutherans did not cast their ballots against it because opposed to the public school system and compulsory education. Had the framers of the Illinois and Wisconsin school bills used proper care to word them so they would only interfere with parochial schools where treason is being taught, they would have found their German Lutheran friends on their side. But as they inserted clauses in the bills requiring the child to attend school, in the city, town, or district in which he resided, to attend at least sixteen weeks consecutively, etc., which would materially injure the attendance on the parochial school, in self-defence they were compelled to oppose it. To say to the parent, You shall not educate your child in the way you think best in this land of freedom of conscience, would be simple tyranny. Unless the parent undertakes to teach the child treason or to break the civil law, the law has no right to govern the instruction of the child, say they. A committee of nine representing the district synods of Missouri, Ohio, and other States have been duly appointed to prepare a pamphlet setting forth their position. The first sentences of this pamphlet read as follows: "We do not object to all children of a suitable age being compelled by law to attend some school. We want no truants. A general elementary education is one of the safeguards of our political institutions. If parents refuse to send their children to school, let the law compel them to attend to their duty." To seek the abolition of all parochial schools because the Catholic church has abused her privilege is unjust. The fact that more English books than German are used in the German parochial schools shows that the language they will use in the future will be English. The Missouri Synod publication society report having sold 25,000 English and 19,000 German readers for use in their parochial schools during the year past. When it can be shown that any denominational college or school [we must deal with all alike] is teaching treason to our government as is shown of the Catholic, then, and not till then, should they be interfered with. W. B. STODDARD.

BRO. HAWLEY GETS PROOF OF HIS WORK.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—From Aurora I came to Wenona, Marshall county, and preached Sabbath morning, May 11, in the Cumberland Presbyterian church, seven miles out. There was a fair audience, and they listened attentively. On Monday night I lectured at the same place on the Religious Philosophy of Freemasonry.

It had been announced that after the lecture five-minute speeches, for or against the lodge, would be in order. A Royal Arch Mason, a brother of ex-Governor Hamilton, took the floor to defend Masonry. He stoutly denied the truth of what I had said. His argument amounted to this: Fellow citizens, you know me. You know that I will tell you the truth; and I tell you that what the lecturer has said is false.

A lady in the congregation spoke, saying: "Masons will not tell the truth about Masonry." I found afterwards that she was the daughter of a Mason; and learned from her how she came to discount the word of the Royal Arch brother of the Governor as she did.

Her father being a Mason, she sought to learn from him something of the order. But he forbade her to ask him questions about Masonry, saying, "My daughter, I cannot, as a Mason, tell you the truth, and I do not want to tell you a lie."

But, though admonished by this lady that his Masonry was a flaw in his manhood that might weaken his veracity, the R. A. brother declaimed after the usual Masonic fashion, saying that I was either ignorant, and did not know what I was talking about, or else I was perjured. Now, this brother knew what I said about the Hiram Abiff tragedy, acted in the Master's degree, was true. But he did not know whether I got my information in a Masonic lodge, or from the testimony of Masons. If I got it from the testimony of Masons, he wanted to declare me ignorant of what I was talking about; but if I learned Masonry in the lodge, he wanted to charge me with perjury for revealing the secrets of the order. Poor fellow! he did not seem to realize that he was confirming the truth of what I had said; for, if I had not told the truth about Masonry he would not have been in a quandary; not knowing whether to charge me with being ignorant or perjured.

I intended to reply to this speaker, but thought I would wait until others who desired to do so had spoken. But the contention became so sharp, and the audience so tumultuous, that I dismissed the assembly, waiving my right to reply, as nothing had been said to disprove any point I had made in my lecture.

On Thursday night I lectured at the Beckwith school-house, five miles from Wenona. The audience here gave quiet attention, and gladly received the literature I distributed. On Saturday night I lectured on the Big Sandy, four miles from Wenona.

After the lecture Monday night a wise old Mason met a friend of mine in Wenona, and said, "Is not my prophecy coming true?"

"Why, what did you predict, Mr. J.?" said my friend.

"Did I not tell you that if you brought that lecturer you would raise hell?" said the Mason, as he walked away.

"If you smell brimstone, Judd, you must not blame me," was the grim rejoinder.

Remarks had been dropped, by the friends of lodgery, that had fired the hearts of the hoodlum element. Sure enough, when Saturday night came it was manifest that hell was rising. The house was filled, many standing, and many others around the house.

The pastor of the M. E. church on the Big Sandy and some of his most substantial members were there. They had come from where I lectured on Monday night, and from Wenona and all the country round about. I had announced that I would speak of Odd-fellowship, the Knights of Pythias and the Grange, as well as of Freemasonry, and the craftsmen of these several orders were out to hear.

The hoodlum element, and some fellows of the baser sort, went as far in disturbing the meeting as they dared; but, being admonished in the Word of God not to give place to the devil, I delivered my lecture and then opened the meeting for discussion. Mr. Hamilton had been suddenly taken ill, and was not present. No other gentleman volunteered to champion the lodge, and so, after waiting a few moments, I dismissed the assembly.

Eggs had been brought and were put into the hands of boys, but they were not thrown. The weightiest arguments employed by the minions of the lodge that night were grains of corn and little gravel stones, which were thrown during the lecture.

Sabbath morning I attended service at the Methodist church on the Big Sandy. The Sabbath-school was in progress when I arrived. Rev. Mr. King, the pastor, came to me soon after I entered the church, and, after shaking hands, said, "I was interested and pleased with your lecture, and there was nothing in it that I could object to." I replied, "I endeavored to faithfully present the truth last night."

You will the better appreciate this endorsement of my lecture if I tell you that Bro. King has taken three degrees of Masonry.

It was my privilege to listen to an eloquent sermon on the constraining power of the love of Christ, from the lips of this dear brother, and when called upon to follow with prayer my whole soul went out to God for his blessing upon the truth to which we had listened. Yours for Christ and the coming of his kingdom,

C. F. HAWLEY.

THE MAKERS OF PUBLIC OPINION IN OHIO.

GREENFIELD, O., May 20, 1890.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Abraham Lincoln said: "With public sentiment nothing can fail; without it nothing can succeed. Consequently he who moulds public sentiment goes deeper than he who enacts statutes or pronounces decisions. He makes statutes or decisions possible or impossible to be executed." The true reformer labors in the conviction that by and by the fruits of his labors will be apparent. John B. Gough, in his "Platform Echoes," said: "Little Mary Newton, a girl four years of age, touches an electric instrument with her baby fingers, and the sunken rocks that had impeded navigation for centuries were burst in pieces with a roar and a crash and a mighty upheaval of the water. Did Mary Newton do it? Oh, no. There had been men under the surface placing dynamite. For months they had worked in the dark and in the wet. Those unseen men, who were toiling and laboring night and day, while ships were sailing over them and men were passing on either side, unconscious of this hard toil,—they were the men that did the work, and Mary Newton was only the medium that God saw fit to touch the instrument that sent the electric current on its mission. Now, some of you are placing dynamite. You are preparing that which is to explode by and by, when God sends some man that shall apply the match, or turn on the electric current."

It was lately my pleasure to visit Greenfield, O., a beautiful little city of 3,000. Its streets and pavements are excellent. All the fast trains on the Baltimore and Ohio R. R. stop here. The Methodist Episcopal and Presbyterian congregations have 600 members each. The Baptist and United Presbyterian churches are leaders in reform. Mr. Stoddard's visit and the anti-secret convention which he held in the U. P. church form a distinct era in the history of this place. Mrs. Carr, that great-hearted worker who gives life and energy to the W. C. T. U., the Y. M. C. A. and the missionary societies, entertained the delegates. The Cynosure has no more diligent readers than Mrs. Carr and her sister, the honored president of the W. C. T. U.

On Sabbath morning I preached in the U. P. church, Rev. H. P. Jackson, pastor. This brother came here last fall from Hanover, Ind. He was away at Jackson, O., filling an appointment during my stay here. The Presbyterian church is undergoing repairs, and as they had no service we had a full house. The theme was "The Mediatorial Dominion of Christ over the Nations." In the afternoon I preached in the Opera House, on "The Basis of Moral Reformation." The hall will seat about 600. The closest attention was given throughout. A report of this address occupied a column and a half in the Enterprise, a weekly paper of this place. At 7:30 I preached in the U. P. church, on "The Bible, its Study and Use." We had a fine audience.

On Monday evening a meeting was held in the U. P. church, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. They have some twenty members, and are assisting the Y. M. C. A. to get a reading room and hall fitted up. The address was on "The Liquor Traffic and its Remedy." Rev. Dr. Crothers, the Presbyterian pastor, closed the meeting. I had a pleasant talk with Mr. D. S. Coyner. He was a rank Abolitionist from the time he located here in 1840 until Lincoln issued his Emancipation Proclamation. He is now in the front rank as a Prohibitionist, and is second to none as an opponent of secret societies.

These meetings were arranged by Rev. H. P. Jackson, a reformer of the highest type. As the boy read in the book of Daniel, "He is a man of an excellent spine." He has a good backbone, and it is in the right place. I was entertained royally at his home. Yours, J. M. FOSTER.

—The fiftieth anniversary of the installation of the Rev. Dr. Dales over the Second United Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, will be celebrated some time in June.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A NEW PLATFORM.

Editor Cynosure,

DEAR SIR:—Please criticise the following platform for a new party. No existing party wisely represents the conscience of the nation. Would this?—

1. On temperance: Doctrine—prohibition. Method—local option with proper restriction, through the educative, progressive period pending universal prohibition.

2. Suffrage restricted to men who can read and write English.

3. "Civil service reform" reformed; that is, the service conducted upon business principles.

4. A national Sabbath law.

5. A national marriage law.

6. A protective tariff.

7. The Australian ballot system, with the additional requirement that the names of all the voters who voted be published after each election.

8. Revision of naturalization laws so as to protect our institutions. A REPUBLICAN.

REMARKS.—1. We would say: Doctrine—prohibition. Method—prohibition. Let us do as we pray. Of course, national prohibition is not here to-day, but we must have town, county and State prohibition as fast as possible and the national issue will be won to-morrow.

2. Say citizens, not "men."

6. We prefer reciprocal free trade, or tariff for revenue only.

8. Remembering that one of the first of those principles is, that all men are created free and equal, and a Chinaman is a man as well as an Irishman, German or Italian.

MASONIC SALVATION.

AVALON, Mo.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—The Free Press "Bulletin" for June will discuss the "Religion of Freemasonry," proving beyond all cavil that it is a religion, that it claims to save men, save them completely and keep them saved. A Bible reading will show to the Christian citizens and praying voters the utter hostility and antagonism of Christianity and all organized secrecy. I desire very much to send a copy of this paper to every signer to the call for the late Congress of Churches in Chicago. They are mailed at just what they cost me at the office, two cents each. Thus, one dollar will reach fifty prominent people, and ten dollars puts the paper in the hands of 500 influential ministers. Who will help to reach the signers of the call and other pastors?

These papers are prepared at considerable expense in time and labor on our part without compensation, and we want to give them as wide a distribution as possible. They have already gone to thousands of leading people who never attend reform meetings and conventions, to set them to reading and thinking. Order at once a lot of these June papers. Every minister, Bible student and defender of our holy religion should have a copy for constant reference. It will be replete with lodge evidences on this phase of the subject, and embodies the cream of a whole library of Masonic authority and unimpeachable testimony. Address all orders to

THE CHURCH DECLINES AS THE LODGE GROWS.

FAIRMOUNT, Ind., April 28, 1890.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Permit me to add a chip to the fire of reform which is kept burning so nobly by your valuable paper. In my judgment the Cynosure and the Christian Statesman take the lead in moral reforms. There are two great evils in our day which are destroying men and women and are sapping the vitality of our churches. I mean the liquor traffic and secrecy in its various forms. The former is worse in that it degrades men more in the present life, but I am convinced that the lodges of our day are one of the greatest hindrances to Christianity. There is nothing which keeps so many men out of the church and which destroys true consecration to the Master as this system of Baalism.

A good Presbyterian brother said to me, "I know the lodge is wrong, but I dare not preach against it, or they will break up my church!"

Alas, what are we coming to when our ministers have to refrain from declaring the whole truth for fear of offending the lovers of darkness! We do not have to enter into the secrets of these works of darkness to see their evils, but you can see their fruit every day.

Here in Fairmount the Congregationalists held special services for two weeks. The pastor said on the last evening, "I am not satisfied with the results of our meetings." There were no conversions. The same week the K. of P. boasted of thirteen members joining in three weeks. Thus the lodges are growing and we are silent, not lifting up a warning voice against this evil. The Friends here are unable to keep out lodgeites from their membership, and now I. O. O. F.'s and K. of P.'s are in the church. Seven years ago the I. O. O. F. lodge was small here and there was no K. of P. lodge; now the I. O. O. F. and K. of P. are strong, but how about the churches? They have not grown at all! The Wesleyan Methodist churches are firm in their stand against the lodge, but they are weak.

Now, what can we do with these frogs which are creeping into our churches?

1. We can protest against them and warn the young who are not members not to join.

2. We can be more charitable and show men that true charity is for all, without having to pay in more than can be drawn out, or having to give a grip or a sign or a pass-word in order to get the help; and always letting our light so shine before men that they seeing our good works may glorify our Father in heaven.

3. By earnest prayer to God in Christ's name for our brethren that they may see the true way and have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness but rather reprove them.

R. A. McCoy.

A NEW SWINDLING LODGE.

CAMERON, W. Va., May 14, 1890.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—A new secret society, calling themselves "Patrons of Toil," is making its inroads into this neighborhood. I do not know where it originated, or how long ago, but it professes to be a revival of and improvement on the Grange. The old lady who has hatched out the broods that appeared in this vicinity bears the name of Mrs. Culbertson, from somewhere out West. Last Sunday I interviewed a couple of the "Toilers" and got the following particulars: Male and females join. Initiation fees more than repaid the fun of the ceremonies. The great benefit is to force retail store-keepers to sell to them at cost, or nearly so, or revenge themselves for refusal by keeping store themselves. This noble rule their masters beautifully illustrate by charging eleven dollars for a charter—cost, one cent; value, 0; or something less than the paper would be if clean.

PITH AND POINT.

CYNOSURE SALT IN ARKANSAS.

I must say that I am sorry to have the paper to stop, as I am in love with it, although I am a Master Mason. I have not been inside of the lodge since I have been taking the paper, the last two years, and if the Lord will help me I don't think I ever will go again. So, by this, you can see that your paper has done some good in Arkansas. All of my brother Masons say they are sorry I don't meet with them, as I was one of the officers, in lodge. When they get after me, I hand them the paper to read, and tell them this is why I don't meet with them. Some of them say that they are with me, after reading the paper.—ELDER J. ANTHONY, Madison, Ark.

LITERATURE.

Through the kindness of Col. George R. Clarke, of the Pacific Garden Mission, we are favored with a report of the fourth annual convention of Christian Workers, held in Buffalo, N. Y., October, 1889. A glance over the program shows that every topic treated was of the utmost importance to Christians. The very complete report given by the secretary shows the value of the work being done. The necessity of dependence upon the Holy Spirit for guidance and for co-operation of workers runs through the whole proceedings. Beside the large amount of spiritual reading matter contained in the book, it is valuable as a work of reference. Every pastor and Sabbath-school superintendent should read "Seven Years of Continuous Revival," an address by Rev. Russell H. Conwell, from which the following is taken: "We have the best class of music on the organ, but make no special effort for display. Many a church is killed by its fine music and operatic singing. The singing should extol Jesus Christ and nothing else, and woe to the church that has its operatic performance to drive the Spirit out at the roof. We would not have an unconverted person in the choir. We will do the singing ourselves first."

In 1887 for forty week-day evenings, on which prayer meetings were held in this church, out of fifty-two, just seven different people rose for prayers at each meeting; no more, no less. And though the church only had a membership of forty-seven who attended regularly when the work began, nearly thirteen hundred have been baptized since, who came forward seven at a time.

Among the chief obstacles of Christ's kingdom, Col. Clarke mentions these: "First, human selfishness. Want of love among the brethren is one of the greatest hindrances I find to the advancement of Christ's kingdom. Second, unholy alliance with the world in business matters, legitimate business carried on by the children of God in various ways. You can see what a wide field is included in that suggestion. Third, unequally yoked together with unbelievers in secret societies. I do not object to the world's people, that are always going to remain the world's people, tying themselves up in worldly societies, for the tares will have to be tied together, but for the dear ministers of Christ to band themselves with infidels and saloon-keepers, as they do in some great cities, is a great hindrance and drawback to the cause of Christ." Pres. J. Blanchard, of the Cynosure, and Secretary J. P. Stoddard attended this conference, and were kindly and heartily received. The remarks of the former on the question relating to the lodge are given in full.

The volume is full of suggestion and instruction, and should be in the hands of every Christian worker. It is sent from the Bureau of Supplies for Christian Workers, First National Bank building, New Haven, Conn., for $1.00 per copy.

Our Day, in the current number, most ably proves its right to be called "a record and review of Current Reform." The Roman Catholic question which is becoming more and more of moment and influence, has its contributions in a paper by Pres. C. A. Ameron of the French Protestant College of Springfield, Mass. He writes on "Our Duty to Roman Catholics," and earnestly reproves the indifference of Protestant Christians toward unconverted Romanists. Miss Cusack, "the Nun of Kenmare," also writes on a subject with which she is unhappily familiar, "Convent Life in the United States." The addresses of ex-Gov. Long and Gen. T. J. Morgan, Indian Commissioner at the Old South Church, Boston, on the "Rights and Wrongs of the Red Men," are documents of national interest. Rev. Emory J. Haynes of the Union Temple Baptist Church, Boston, contributes an important article on city evangelization, "Preaching to the American Masses," in which he calls attention to the young men and women from rural life who crowd into our cities. Mr. Cook's Monday lecture is one of his powerful reviews of one feature of the present Southern question, "Race Riots in the South." His bold but just views on this topic offended many Southern patrons and caused them to cancel his lecture engagements. Our Day should be on the center table of every American family that hopes to be abreast of great national questions.

In its June number the Missionary Review of the World holds on its way with growing interest and power. Dr. Pierson continues his graphic and informing Missionary Letters from abroad. The wondrous story of pastor Harms and his mission work by the veteran Lewis Grout, will thrill the reader anew. Dr. Schodde contributes a thoughtful and timely paper on Religious Work Among the Immigrants. Dr. Knox concludes his personal observations in Brazil, a highly valuable paper. Secretary Ellingwood gives one of his masterful articles on The Druid Celts—the Early Missionary Race of Western Europe. The most noteworthy paper in the number is written by one who has lived over forty years in the Turkish Empire; the title is, "How Shall Mohammedans be Evangelized?" It is long, but intensely interesting. It deserves to be not only read, but carefully studied.

Biblia, a journal for Bible readers, and organ of the "Bible Readers Union," presents an attractive table of contents in its May number. "The Epworth League," "Hebrew Word Studies," and "Proper Names in Genesis" are continued. Dr. Davis, the editor, is conducting an interlinear translation of the Old Testament in Hebrew and the New Testament in Greek. The various daily readings and notes are a very valuable aid to systematic Bible study.

LODGE NOTES.

The Grand Master of Canada has prohibited dancing in Masonic halls.

There are twenty-four Masonic periodicals in Paris, out of 1648 in all.

Delegates of the Modern Woodmen of Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin on Tuesday selected June 19 as the date of the annual picnic of the order, which will be held at Elgin.

The 13th annual meeting of the Grand Council of the order of Red Men of Illinois opened May 13th at Galesburg. About 150 delegates were present and were given a welcome by Mayor Stevens.

Not less than four new conclaves of Royal Adelpia are being now formed, all of which will be instituted in Chicago within the next two weeks. This will make ten conclaves in the city and twenty-two in the State.

There was a lengthy discussion in the grand lodge Ancient Order of United Workmen, yesterday, over a resolution proposing a change in the initiation fee. C. R. Matson, Sheriff of Chicago, was elected Grand Master.

The Masonic Church says: "Out of the 718 lodges in the State of New York, there are on an average from two to five clergymen in each lodge, representing all denominations. Two thousand or more clergymen is quite a respectable army, in one jurisdiction, upholding the banner of the Grand Lodge of New York: 'Holiness to the Lord.'" What a fearful sight.

The Freemason of Sidney, Australia, says significantly: "Can any brother devise a scheme, not involving a resort to muscular exercise, by which grog-sodden Masonic dead beats can be kept off one's premises? Not a week passes without a visit from one or more of these awful examples, who enter our sanctum with a heart-rendering story of distress, hunger and bad luck."

An Italian secret organization, known as Mafia, is creating trouble in New York, similar to the disturbance of the Clan-na-Gael in Chicago, which led to the murder of Dr. Cronin. America is not the battle-ground for the wars among secret societies connected with the European governments, and the Mafia and the Clan should be given a lesson that will make them understand this thoroughly.—Inter Ocean.

At the conference in Springfield, Ill., of the Farmers' Mutual Benefit Association, the Farmers' Alliance, the State Grange, and the Knights of Labor, the plan of having the organizations hold a convention at the same time as the Democratic State convention, with a view to a united ticket, was rejected. Resolutions were adopted asking for the free coinage of silver, the election of United States Senators by the people, and a graduated income tax.

"Freemasonry," says the Voice of Masonry, "esteems God first; country, second; neighbor, third; family, fourth; and self last; and its law of brotherly love applies accordingly. Some of the Craft forget this, and clearly show by their conduct that self-aggrandizement is their highest Masonic aim. They shove themselves forward on all possible occasions, and in every conceivable manner seek preferment and emoluments, regardless of the rights of others."

Justice Barrett, of the New York Supreme Court, granted a temporary injunction restraining the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks from holding their annual meeting of 1890 in Cleveland, Ohio, and Secretary Arthur C. Mooreland from removing from this State the seal and charter or books and papers of the order. The organization was formed in this State in 1871, and has now 160 lodges. The balance of power used to be in the East, but now the West has the majority. There are but fifteen lodges in this State. Until 1877, the annual meetings were held in New York, but in that year the grand lodge went to Philadelphia. There was an objection to this, and it was shown that the annual meetings were required, by the constitution, to be held in New York. In 1888 an amendment was adopted providing that by a majority vote the grand lodge meeting might be appointed for and held in cities outside this State. But the quarrel is to be continued in the courts.

CONCERNING PREMIUMS.

We offer premiums to compensate such of our subscribers as take the pains and trouble to secure new subscribers to the Cynosure. Many who do this refuse to receive pay, and work because they love the work; others are glad to receive premiums. But,

First, We do not offer any man a premium to renew his own subscription. If a man has taken this paper a year and does not care enough about it to take it longer without being hired to, we do not offer him a premium.

Second, We do not offer a premium to a new subscriber to hire him to take the paper. When he has subscribed for the paper and paid for it himself, and knows its worth, then if he will take the trouble to introduce the paper to others, he can have a premium on the new subscription, but not on his own.

Third, We do not offer a premium where one member of a family stops the paper, and another member of the same family subscribes for it. We do not consider such a name the name of a new subscriber.

Any book we publish or sell can be had as a premium at reasonable rates. We will allow thirty cents' worth of any of our publications, at retail rates, postpaid, for one dollar's worth of new subscriptions to the Cynosure.

THE N. C. A. FUNDS.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of — dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be sufficient discharge.

M., at 221 West Madison St., for the election of officers and the transaction of other important business.

THE WAR WITH THE ROMAN CATHOLICS.

Mosheim, the learned and sound Lutheran and church historian, tells us that for two hundred and forty years after the Pentecost revivals, the Christian churches were "little independent republics." From that time till the middle of the fifth century, when the papacy became complete, leading bishops, as they of Rome, Carthage, Jerusalem and Constantinople, had striven for the primacy; and corruption steadily followed power till the crosier ruled the scepter; and Rome, which had governed men on earth, claimed to rule them in eternity that she might tax them in time.

That "the beast" of Revelation, called also the harlot mother, is Romanism, wounded, perhaps, by the sword of God in the hand of Luther (Rev. 13: 3), is shown explicitly in Rev. 17: 9 and 18. And since the echoes of Luther's hammer, nailing his theses to the great church door at Wittemberg in 1517, broke the slumber of the dark ages, there has been ceaseless war between the Dragon and the Lamb. And since the fall of American slavery (Jan. 1, 1863), this Romish war shows tokens of becoming general and violent.

In 1832, twelve men met in an old printing office in Boston and decreed the downfall of American slavery, which then ruled the United States in church and state. In thirty-one years it fell. In the same Boston, a committee of one hundred men has lately been formed, with such men as Joseph Cook and Dr. Lansing of Worcester to speak for them, who seem resolved to pluck the United States from the teeth of the seven-headed beast of "the seven-hilled city." Will they succeed?

Our Chicago America, which deals heavy blows in this war on Romanism, lately compared the illiteracy of eight Roman Catholic states with that of eight Protestant countries, and finds in the population in the eight Catholic countries, 60 adults in every 100 who cannot read or write; and only 30 ignorant adults to 100 in the Protestant countries. But mere incapacity to read and write does not show the damage done to the people by the Roman Catholic religion. A poor German died this winter, and his widow was charged by her priest five dollars each week for saying masses for the repose of his soul. During the potato famine in Ireland, while thousands were dying of starvation, and American Protestants were sending ship-loads of provisions to the starving, the collection of Peter's pence by priests for the Pope, sent out of Ireland to Italy, went on all the same, amounting to more than a million dollars a year! In the same number America tells us: "The vast majority, amounting to almost a monopoly, of the saloon-keepers are Roman Catholics." A church capable of facing such facts and calling itself "Holy," while those saloon-keepers are held to the most abject obedience to their priests, and priests to the Pope, can be reached and reformed by nothing less than that power appealed to by Luther, namely, the Word and Spirit of God. This will do it.

Luther appealed to the scholars of Germany and satisfied them that the church of Rome was the woman seated on the civil power, "having on her forehead a name written, MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT; THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH." (Rev. 17: 5.) And the result of the popular belief which followed the interpretation of scholars in Europe, was, the fall of priestism and the exaltation of faith in Christ. The English, Scotch and Welsh masses, with those of Northern Germany and Scandinavian Europe, came to believe in salvation by faith in Christ, and their governments followed the convictions of the people: and Spain, Italy, Austria, the peoples who believed that ceremonies and sacraments deriving their supposed virtue and efficacy from priests would save souls, have sunk steadily in the scale of nations. But Jesuitism, which was born in a cellar under the "Convent of Martyrs." in Paris, at midnight, and endorsed and adopted by the Pope in 1540, nearly arrested the national progress of the Reformation; so that Coleridge has said, "It is a profound question to answer, why, since the middle of the sixteenth century, the Reformation has not advanced one step in Europe?" The answer is, Jesuitism; which has changed the old methods of popery itself, and infused its virus of midnight secrecy and sworn obedience into other institutions, or institutions with other names. Twenty-five of the 33 degrees of Scotch Rite Masonry, now practiced in this country, were formed by Jesuits in their College of Clermont in Paris in 1754. The Chapter and Templar degrees show their popish origin in their names: a Chapter being a dean and his clergy; and Templars, military monks.

But the trend and termination of the Apocalypse is the fall of Babylon so that "she shall be found no more at all." (Rev. 18: 21.) And this is to be followed by a state of things in which "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain."

The Conference of April 22 last month seems to us to be the beginning of the last discussion. Assailing Romanists, confirms them. But assailing their principles in Mormonism, Masonry and Jesuitism, may open their eyes and save them.

CHURCH ANNIVERSARIES.

The May meetings of the different denominations are now filling a large space in the columns even of the daily press. The national Baptist anniversaries in this city, the Presbyterian General Assembly at Saratoga, the Southern Methodists at St. Louis, the Southern Presbyterians at Ashville, S. C., and the General Synod Reformed Presbyterians at Pittsburgh, are all discussing interests of as much importance to the state and to society as to religion.

The great body of Christians that met in this city last week are still blessed with the spirit of their Carey, their Judson and their Nathan Brown, names which, while they belong primarily to the Baptist denomination, are the prized heritage of the Christian world. The Baptists have ever been pioneers in missionary work, and President Northrop, of Morgan Park Baptist Seminary, hit a new nail on its head in his answer to the question, "Where shall we look for men for the great mission fields?" He thought a mistake is made by sending raw, untried students rather than pastors of a number of years experience in the home field. Many of these men are practically wasted upon small home charges. He would even call a professor from each seminary to assume the marshalling of the forces where the millions are in the darkness.

The comity among denominations, advocated by the Presbyterians at Saratoga, would lead to the same result. One good evangelical church should be sufficient for towns where now there are several churches of different denominations.

Said President Northrop, "My suggestion is this: Let two hundred pastors under 40 years of age, the best men in the denomination, best intellectually, physically and spiritually, men who are receiving from six thousand dollars and downward,—let these men come forward from their comparatively small home stations, and say to the Board of the Missionary Union, Send us to the millions of Africa, Japan, China, anywhere."

This sentiment was heartily applauded, and it is to be hoped that it will be realized. Such a movement on the part of a goodly number of men of established reputation for intellect and moral worth, would stir the Christian churches from center to circumference.

The question of creed revision occupied the Presbyterians at Saratoga, and it is evident that some changes of the Confession will be made, though these will not be extensive.

The Reformed Presbyterians are making efforts to have a closer union of the psalm-singing branches of the Presbyterian church. The object of this closer union is to secure concerted action in missionary enterprises.

An important statement was made by the Methodists at St. Louis as to the spiritual state of the church. The statement, which was inserted in the book of discipline, condemned dancing, card-playing, theater-going, attendance on races and circuses, and declared these practices to be destructive to Christian character.

These several conferences were characterized by an urgent demand for a closer walk with God in personal life, and a wider walk with God in carrying out the missionary injunction, "Go ye therefore and teach all nations."

Among church gatherings of a more local nature the General Association of Congregational churches of Illinois, meeting at Elgin, was one of peculiar interest. Among the members of the body were names that have long been familiar to the readers of the Cynosure. Rev. Wm. H. Chandler, former president of our Illinois State Association, is now a State evangelist. His labors in this capacity have been greatly blessed. To one feeble church he saw seventy-two of one hundred converts united, over thirty of them heads of families who for the first time began family prayer. Rev. L. N. Stratton, former editor of the Wesleyan papers and head of their theological school, was an active member. Rev. L. White, formerly of the same denomination, is now the successful pastor of a Congregational church at Plymouth, where he has as great liberty as ever to proclaim the truth of God against the lodge or any other popular evil. From the Free Methodist church were brethren Miller, the popular singing evangelist, whose work with Rev. S. A. Harris is being greatly blessed in Southern Illinois, and Coquillette, who gave his testimony as a seceded Knight Templar in our State convention in this city in 1875 or 76. The latter was one of the secretaries. Bro. A. W. Parry was also present, representing the church to which he ministers, though he yet retains, we believe, his membership in the Wisconsin Conference. The presence of these brethren was a cheering sight in that it gave assurance that the testimony for Christ against his lodge enemy is gaining.

In this Association the work of evangelists and Bible readers is superseding that of the half-paid home missionary. Formerly the feeble churches raised what they could and the Home Missionary Society made up the balance. Now it is found better to send on a man of faith whose zeal kindles a revival, and the weak church fills up, becomes strong, and maintains its work without external aid.

Since writing the above the General Assembly at Saratoga is reported to have voted unanimously for a committee to revise their confession, which was instructed not to propose any alteration or amendment that will in any way impair the integrity of the reformed or Calvinistic system of doctrine taught in the confession of faith.

—The last number of the Christian Worker publishes the address of Prof. Joseph Moore, of Earlham College, in full. It is a clearly written and convincing document.

—The influence of Joseph Cook's great address at the April Conference is moving on the mass of Christian mind in ever-widening circles. The last number of the Evangelical Messenger, Cleveland, Ohio, prints it almost entire.

—Ground was broken last week for the foundation of the new building at Wheaton College. The walls will rise rapidly when the excavation is finished. The estimated cost of the new wing is $12,000. About one-half of this amount is paid in, and nearly another one-fourth is subscribed. The friends of the institution have therefore an opportunity to aid in this building, or in the raising the current expenses of the institution, for which $1,000 more is needed this year.

—In a note of May 20, Bro. I. R. B. Arnold writes that he had received about $50 during the few days previous for the River Mission enterprise. Cynosure readers please remember that all they invest in this work of Bro. Arnold's helps also the circulation of the paper among the Freedmen of the South. That is the pledge, and Bro. Arnold will make it good. Let the Cynosure friends put $500 in his hands at once. Specify that it is on Cynosure account when you send. Money can be forwarded through this office or sent direct to I. R. B. Arnold, Wheeling, W. Va.

—It was only in the fall of 1881 that H. L. Hastings, editor of the Christian, Boston, delivered his lecture on "The Inspiration of the Bible" before the Young Men's Christian Association of Massachusetts. Since then between one and two million copies of the lecture have been circulated. It has been translated into French, Spanish, German, Swedish, Danish, Bohemian, Hindostanee, and Hindee, and we believe into Chinese and some other languages. In all not far from a dozen translations have been made, and the demand for it is continually increasing. Persons who have never read it should send a quarter of a dollar to H. L. Hastings, 47 Cornhill, Boston, and order half a dozen for distribution, or get an assortment of his anti-infidel lectures for examination and distribution.

—The Farm, Field and Stockman we regard as the most reliable of the agricultural journals of the West. It has long been located at 156 Washington street in this city, but the office was lately removed half a block to the Times building, corner of Washington and Fifth avenue, where more commodious quarters are obtained. Gen. C. H. Howard, a gentleman of large experience in journalism, is editor-in-chief. He is assisted by Mr. W. B. Lloyd, whose education and taste peculiarly adapt him for the responsibilities of his work. Mr. Wilson, the publisher for the company, is a practical seedsman. All are Christian gentlemen of worth and integrity, and their wide acquaintance with agricultural interests well fits them for the good work they are doing for the farmers of the great interior.

—Mrs. Alice C. Hollingsworth, of the Friends, is visiting Chicago to awaken an interest in the needy children of Kansas and secure aid in building them a home at Cottonwood Falls, where a fine tract of land a mile square has been provisionally donated to the trustees of the Kansas Industrial Institute. This very worthy enterprise has the endorsement of Gov. Humphrey and a number of leading citizens of the State. Rev. J. H. Lockwood of Salina is president, and S. E. Busser of Topeka, secretary of the board of management. This institution is the conception of Mrs. Hollingsworth, and through her perseverance and energy it has reached a point where success seems within reach. Readers of the Cynosure are all interested in such a work, and many of them can aid in promoting it. Let all such address the president or secretary.

—With thanks to our Washington agent for a well-meant effort to set the Cynosure right with our German Lutheran brethren, there is yet this to be said: While it was never said or supposed that there was any organic union with the Romanists against the Bennett law in Wisconsin, yet the efforts of both are tending to the same end practically. Bro. Stoddard has probably not seen the law of which he writes, or he would not so misconstrued it. It very explicitly states that instead of the twelve (not sixteen) weeks instruction in the public schools, an equivalent in any parochial or private school will be accepted. The only real issue made against the law is not that it is compulsory, or that it requires certain instruction in English; but respecting the method of giving it effect. If it is not to be a dead letter, some one must examine the children. Now, it is plain that all citizens of this country owe to the state some duties, as well as to the church of God, and twelve weeks' instruction in the English studies named in the law ought not to interfere with the serious duties of religion in any well-organized household. Neither should a reasonable examination by the proper authorities be felt to be oppressive, even though the instruction be altogether confined to the home circle. If the school directors do not have this business in charge, some one else must, or the law be revoked. There is, as we read them, not a clause in either the Wisconsin or the Illinois law that gives the least hint of a purpose to "abolish" any parochial school whatever.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Bro. Hinman writes hopefully of the success of the Dayton meeting for promoting Christian union. His health is improved. He goes from Dayton to Yellow Springs, Ohio, for a few days, and then on to Kentucky.

—Rev. Wm. Fenton, of St. Paul, whose work for the reform in issuing the Christian Liberator is well known, is attending the Baptist anniversary meetings in this city this week. Rev. C. H. Hobart, now of California, is also here. In 1882 Mr. Hobart preached a Thanksgiving sermon while pastor in Aurora, Ill., which most ably reviewed the false nature of lodge worship. The discourse was printed in the Cynosure at the time.

—Every reader of this number will hear with pleasure of the safe arrival of Pres. J. Blanchard in San Francisco. So favorably had the journey affected him that he was able to preach on the day after his arrival. In our next we hope for an editorial letter that will put a new enthusiasm in all of us.

—Rev. M. C. Wilcox, of the Methodist mission at Foochow, China, an occasional contributor to the Cynosure, writes under date of April 2, that he is on the Kucheng district, a hundred miles from Foochow, holding quarterly meetings. The work is most hopeful, and inquirers after the true God are constantly increasing.

—Rev. S. A. Harris, late pastor of the Congregational church of Byron, Ill., is now doing a grand missionary work in a destitute field in extreme southern Illinois. At the Illinois State convention at Belvidere, three or four years ago, we had the pleasure of hearing his renunciation of the Masonic lodge, into which he had been persuaded by false representations.

—Rev. Dr. Metheny, who gave the interesting account of secret societies in Western Asia at the April Conference, is visiting the Reformed Presbyterian churches of the West. On the last Sabbath in April he was at Blanchard, Iowa, the home of Bro. M. A. Gault. On that day twenty-four were received into the church; eighteen by profession of their faith, and six by certificate.

—Bro. Wm. Hazenburger yet remains in South Africa, and has recently sent us from the wonderful city of Aladdin-like growth, Johannesburg, copies of its papers. The weekly edition of one of these, the Star, contains sixty-four long columns in its eight pages. It reports the dedication of a new Dutch Reform church with a capacity of 1,000. The report published in our American papers last fall of Bro. Hazenburger's return to this country were evidently incorrect.

—The Lutheran Standard in an excellent note on the disgraceful performances of college secret societies, says that "Princeton is the only one among the leading schools of the land which does not suffer these societies." The editor forgets Oberlin and the restrictions upon these societies at Harvard. The State University of Illinois at Champaign is also clear of these orders. Locally speaking, there are several leading institutions in the South and West that might also be counted in; and scores, which, while not afflicted with the temptations of wealth and popularity, are yet influential and important schools, which abjure secretism. May the day be not far distant when all our institutions of learning shall be like Princeton in this respect.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Springtime thoughts—Prohibition notes—A spasm of justice—Four hundred American "nobles" made in one night—The Cynosure's namesake—The Cyclone.

I do not wonder that New England has always been prolific in writers whose peculiar forte lies in pre-Raphaelite descriptions of her charming nooks and byways; her ferny, sweet-smelling glades and pastures, her blossoming apple orchards and tumble down stone walls, the habitat of the saucy chipmunk where wild roses and blackberry vines clamber at will. It is just this sweet, homely Nature that woe one on to a close and loving acquaintance instead of overwhelming us at the outset with unimagined sublimities that only stupefy and dazzle. Paradoxical as it may sound, very grand scenery is not "inspiring," though it may be called so in the unmeaning vocabulary of the average tourist. There is a deep philosophy in Aurora Leigh's exclamation amid the gold and opal splendors of an Italian sunset,

"With God so near me could I sing of God?"

An Isaac Walton or a Henry Thoreau is only possible in countries where Nature drops the "grand dame" with sweeping train and coronet, and shows herself as a dear old-fashioned mother, who lets us into all the wonders of her marvelous housekeeping, and sings her tired children to rest at last under a coverlid of green grass and springing daisies.

Speaking of the daisy, though it has been and still is such a popular flower it is coming out second best in the competition for a national floral emblem. All returns show that the golden rod is leading. Some have thought the hue of this latter flower too painfully indicative of our modern plutocratic tendency; but there is another and pleasanter idea which I have not seen suggested. As a yellow ribbon is the chosen badge of the Woman Suffragists, shall we not take the adoption of the golden rod as a gentle prophecy of triumph for this much maligned and abused cause.

The story that an English syndicate had bought up four of Boston's leading breweries—to leave these springtime thoughts for a less pleasant subject—proves to be entirely false, and so the "original packages" of beer which are said to be arriving in Lewiston, Me., by the carload will still continue to put money into American instead of British pockets.

Governor Goodell has so far recovered from his dangerous illness as to be able to walk out upon the streets, and it is to be hoped will soon take the reins of government again and convince New Hampshire liquor sellers that the Granite State has a chief executive of the same unyielding material.

The Worcester Times has received a check for $500 from Henry Faxon, to help the editor in his defense against the libel suits brought by the saloons. The Quincy veteran has of course been interviewed on the new law against the bars and expresses it as his opinion that it is nothing but a shrewd move on the political chessboard by Gov. Brackett, "who had to do something to please the Republicans." Here are some statistics from the Connecticut Home which are not flattering to Massachusetts pride. In 1888 under high license and local option, 32,000 criminals, of whom 90 per cent were drunkards, were committed to her jails, for the enlargement of which the prison commissioners asked that same year for over a million dollars. Iowa under prohibition during the same period had but 838 convicted criminals, while 55 of her jails were reported empty and others nearly so. Thus Massachusetts furnished 1 criminal to every 29 of her population, and Iowa 1 to every 2,000. Can the folly of high license be more fully demonstrated?

It is queer how a spasm of virtue will at times seize the legal authorities, and laws which lay as dead letters on the statute book will suddenly be resurrected to the consternation of offenders who, like the men killed by the tower of Siloam, are no worse than others, only they happen to be in the way of justice when she strikes. John Day of Boston was lately fined $3 in the police court for using profane language, and W. J. Harrison of Lynn $5 and costs for a like offence. If the law against profanity was strictly enforced, how the fines would mount up against Masonic swearers, especially those who have gone through the "sublime" blasphemies of the higher degrees. A man in Providence, R. I., has been lately arrested on complaint of Anthony Comstock for selling lottery tickets in connection with a secret society fair. It is refreshing to know that justice is not always cable-towed and hoodwinked.

How does this sound to an American who has read the Constitution and innocently supposes that when it forbade American citizens to assume titles of nobility it settled the matter for all time: "The session of Nobles of the Mystic Shrine for the reception of candidates for the noble's degree conferred the degree upon forty-four candidates in the presence of nearly five hundred members in this city (Bridgeport, Conn.), the only place in the State where candidates are admitted." Think of forty-four "nobles" made in one night! Surely this beat all monarchical records to nothing.

I notice that the Cynosure has a namesake. A monthly has been started in Boston under this title. One of its editors is on the Boston Globe editorial staff. "It is to be literary, educational and anti-medical monopoly." Surely no reform ever suffered more from plagiarists than ours. They have filched our party name without a shadow of compulsion, and now coolly appropriate the title of our national organ. During the illness attendant on my injury two years ago I employed for kitchen help a very illiterate English woman, who, unable to spell or pronounce the name of the Cynosure, used to invariably call it the Cyclone! May it prove indeed a cyclone to all the secret entrenchments of wickedness against which it is so bravely fighting.

THE HOME.

ALL THINGS NEW.

Old sorrows that sit at the heart's sealed gate,
Like sentinels grim and sad;
While out in the night-damp, weary and late,
The King with a gift divinely great,
Is waiting to make us glad.

Old fears that hang like a changing cloud,
Over a sunless day;
Old burdens that keep the spirit bowed,
Old wrongs that rankle and clamor loud,
Shall pass like a dream away.

In the world without and the world within,
He maketh the old things new;
The touch of sorrow, the stain of sin,
Shall flee from the gate when the King comes in,
From the chill night's damp and dew.

Anew in the heavens the sweet stars shine,
On earth new blossoms spring;
The old life lost in the life divine.
"Thy will be mine, my will be thine,"
Is the song which the new hearts sing.

CALEB—A MODEL FOR CHRISTIANS.

Caleb is one of the noblest characters in the Old Testament. His whole biography is condensed into a few bright and beautiful sentences. He was the chieftain of a clan in Israel, and during the long march in the wilderness was selected as one of the deputation to go ahead and spy out the land of Canaan. He came back helping to carry the luscious load of Eshcol grapes, and joined with Joshua in making a strong report in favor of the immediate occupation of the land. Their report was submitted to the "committee of the whole." The people were panic stricken when they heard of the "giants in the land," and clamored for a retreat to Egypt; but Caleb came to the front and made a ringing speech for the advance, and he did it in the face of the cowards who threatened to batter him to the ground with stones. God's verdict on his unflinching heroism was in these brief words: "My servant Caleb will I bring into the land, who hath followed me faithfully." In another passage it reads: "He hath followed me fully." God is always as good as his word, and he was in this case. While the rebels and the poltroons all perished in the desert, steadfast old Caleb lived to own the beautiful acres on the hills of Hebron, and the full view of the verdant vale of Eshcol.

Caleb is a model for the Christians most needed in these days. Quality is more important than quantity. Caleb is the type of thorough-going, uncompromising fidelity; he followed the Lord fully. What is required to make our churches vigorous and successful is not bustle, but business; not parade and puffery or pulpit pyrotechnics, but patience, prayer, and persevering work. We want the full following of Jesus Christ with the whole heart, and for the whole life campaign. Christ started his church on the principle of entire consecration. "He that is not for me is against me." It was thorough-going discipleship to the death or nothing. That sharp test, "Sell all that thou hast and follow me," frightened the selfish young ruler back to his farms and to his fate. Jesus wanted no half-hearted disciples. He kept sifting his nominal followers, and out of the whole number there remained eleven men and a few faithful women to lay the foundation of his church at the time of Pentecost. These were like Gideon's gallant three hundred water-lappers, who were worth more than all the rest of his army.

To follow Christ fully requires a thorough conversion at the start; a conversion from sin realized and repented of, to a Saviour realized and firmly grasped. Half-way converts make half-way Christians. Too many church members hang their boughs over on the church side of the wall, but their roots are on the world's side—such people bear nothing but leaves. Unless the submission of the soul to Jesus Christ is without compromise, and unless the work of the Holy Spirit is deep, there will be a half-heartedness and halting which is very likely to end in open backsliding. The secret of Caleb's fidelity was that "he had another spirit within him." His heart held him true, and God held his heart.

There is prodigious power in singleness of love for Christ; in doing just "one thing," and that one thing a pressing toward the goal of likeness to Jesus. A man of very moderate talents and education becomes a strong influential man as soon as the Master gets complete control of him. He follows that Master so heartily and so projectively that he carries other people with him by the sheer momentum of his personal godliness. During my long ministry I have come to estimate Christians, not so much by brain-power or purse-power as by heart-power. Weighing is a safer measurement in a church than counting.

When a minister is to be chosen, godliness should outweigh genius. Thorough-going piety is the foremost qualification for an elder, a superintendent, a Sabbath-school teacher, or for practical Christian work of any kind. "Many are called, but few are chosen." The choice Christians never commute with the Master for half-fare, or demand a cushioned seat in the parlor-car. They never "send their regrets" when they are summoned to a duty; they never interpret Christ's commandments in a lax or latitudinarian sense; if there is a doubt on any question of ethics, they never give self or the world the casting vote, and if a hard pinch comes, they relish even the severities of a difficult duty.

Another characteristic of the Caleb-type of Christians is that they are just as active in ordinary times as they are amid the fervors of a revival. It is easy, then, for even a minimum Christian to catch fire to rush to special meetings, to sing hymns, and shout hosannas. A season of spiritual quickening brings great glory to God and great blessings to a church; but it also brings a great disgrace on those church members who are too indolent or too worldly to lift a finger at any other time. Revivals fill the churches; seasons of dryness and dullness winnow the churches.

We pastors never love our Calebs and Barnabases and our Phebes and Priscillas as much as we do in the dry spells of spiritual drought; they always work right along without any need of external pressure. Their salt never loses its savor; their lamps never smoke. When silly social fashions are blowing the chaff along in the breeze, solid Caleb does not feel it; his only fashion is to follow Christ; his single purpose is to please his Master and not men—and that trieth his heart and proves it to be of pure gold. Good reader, I have been presenting a picture of what every blood-bought follower of Jesus ought to be. Have I photographed your character? Then you ought to be a happy man or woman—whatever your social rank, or your income, or your surroundings may be. "An abundant entrance" shall be given to you into the shining streets of crystal and of gold; you will not barely creep in through a gate ajar; and when you get to heaven you will feel at home there.—Rev. T. L. Cuyler, D. D.

THE REPORT OF THE SPIES.

Dr. Goodwin lately preached a stirring sermon, having as the foundation of his discourse the incidents connected with the report brought to the children of Israel by the ten spies.

1. Having our own way is very costly. The folly of self-will in the face of God's command cannot well be overstated. When God has spoken on a matter it is folly to listen to spies. Six hundred thousand dishonored graves in the desert are monuments to the unwisdom of listening to cowardly spies. Our own way does not pay. Lot at Sodom is evidence of that. Any sinful way is not God's way. Avoid all doubtful ways and means. Walk with God and you are sure of paths of mercy and truth. The peril of the churches is a leaning upon human counsel. In so far as a people lose sight of God's express purpose they will grow lukewarm. Trust God and make his Word the lamp to your feet and a light to your path. Let not the mysteries of his greatness and of his works be anything but an inspiration to your faith. God has spoken and he commands all for the good of his children.

2. There is untold danger to the masses from the unfaithfulness of leaders. The watchmen and shepherds of the people have a great responsibility. Ten men carried three millions into rebellion and to death, by diverting them from the truth and from confidence in God's Word. A man's judgment, to be worthy of confidence, must be backed by the words of God. "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." Take God at his word, even against vast majorities. We need to come back again and again to the sure ground of our faith, the Word, when some geologist or some patron of this or that "ology" or "ism" has brought a conflicting report. Woe to those following the business of spies. Confidence and not doubt should be sounded from the pulpits of the land. The Word should be searched more if the land not less.

HOW WE SAVED OREGON.

A long time ago, in 1670, when this country, beyond the Atlantic coast, was a wilderness, the dissolute king Charles II., the unworthy successor of Cromwell, sold to some of his favorites the right to buy furs along the shores of Hudson's Bay. The region was named Rupert's Land, from the king's cousin Rupert, the chief proprietor in the new trading company. This was the origin of the Hudson's Bay Company, which until 1869 ruled western British America much as the East India Company ruled India. Later their operations extended to the Pacific coast, and as far south as California, which was then a part of Mexico. From this territory they succeeded in crowding out all competitors. Even John Jacob Astor, who founded Astoria as his chief trading post in 1811, was obliged at last to yield. The northwestern boundary of the United States was not settled, and there seemed no hurry about it for the country was unknown and undesired. We had land enough east of the Rocky mountains, as a Senator said, to last us a thousand years. It seemed likely, therefore, that Great Britain and Mexico would possess the Pacific coast.

In the end of 1832 four Flathead Indians from beyond the Rocky mountains appeared on the streets of St. Louis, then a town of 8,000 inhabitants, and inquired for "God's Book." It was four years after a similar delegation of wild Karens, on a similar errand, called on Mr. Boardman, in Burma. The Indians fell into the hands of the Catholics, and received no Book. Two died in St. Louis, and a third died on the way back, and the lone survivor reached his tribe in disappointment.

But the story got abroad, and resulted in five Methodist missionaries going out to the coast in 1834. One, Rev. Daniel Lee, Caldwell, Kan., still survives. They settled first at Vancouver, opposite Portland. In 1836 the Congregationalists sent out Dr. Marcus Whitman and wife and another family, who settled 200 miles farther up the Columbia river, near Fort Walla Walla. They took a wagon through against the representations of the Hudson Bay Company, who wished the mountains to be regarded as an impassable barrier. This was six years before the first expedition of Gen. Fremont, the Pathfinder. So little was the West known that in the best map of the United States then available Salt Lake was shown as emptying by three rivers into the Gulf of California! In the six years following, 250 new settlers and several missionaries arrived.

Now began the contest, for it was felt that the country would eventually belong to the nation which had the largest population there.

Oct. 1, 1842, Dr. Whitman was at Fort Walla Walla to visit a patient, and there heard the surprising news that 150 Canadian emigrants were on their way to the Columbia river region, and that the governor of the Hudson Bay Company territory had gone to Washington to induce our government to draw our boundary line at the Rocky mountains. He hastened home, and Oct. 3 set out on horseback for Washington, a journey of 3,000 miles! He took one companion and a guide, and two pack mules.

To avoid meeting the Blackfeet Indians, and also because the season was late, they took a southeast route, aiming first for Santa Fe, 1,000 miles away. They made half the distance without difficulty, but soon after leaving Fort Hall, Idaho, winter set in, and they suffered exceedingly, and were often in danger of perishing by losing the trail. From Santa Fe the next point was St. Louis, 1,200 miles. At Fort Bent, Indian Territory, he left his exhausted companion and pushed on through Missouri alone. He arrived at St. Louis, gaunt and frost-bitten, Jan. 3, 1843, and pushing on to Washington had an interview with President Tyler and Secretary of State Daniel Webster. We have few particulars of the interview, but in his next letter to our Minister to England, after this interview, Mr. Webster said:

"England must not expect anything south of the 49th degree."

At Kansas City—then called plain "Kansas"—that spring two important expeditions made their rendezvous. June 1 Gen. Fremont left there with 40 men on his second exploring tour, and the same month 200 wagons with 870 settlers met there, and were piloted by Dr. Whitman across the plains and over the mountains to Oregon, which made the Americans outnumber the British five to one. On arriving there in September they organized a provisional government, which was obeyed until the boundary line was settled and a territorial government organized in 1846. Gen. Fremont's expedition helped to save California to the Union, and Dr. Whitman's certainly did a similar service for Oregon and Washington. It was just in time. If it had been delayed until the war with Mexico in 1847, or the discovery of gold in California in 1849, Great Britain would have been less ready to relinquish her claim. God's hand was in it. He intended this country, in which the social destiny of the human race is to be wrought out, to touch the oceans which touch all races. And that is how we saved Oregon.—The Missionary Visitor.

A LESSON.

A dying buttercup cried to the sun:
"What am I good for? What have I done
To make life worth the living!
You hang aloft in the great blue sky,
Lighting the world with your one big eye,
And you—you are always giving.
But I bloom here in the meadow grass;
The babies smile on me as they pass,
But my life will soon be done, alas!
And what was the use of living?"

The sun looked down on the little sun
That shone in the grass; it was only one
Among a great many others.

Said he: "It is wrong to thus despair,
The great All-Father placed you there,
You and your little brothers;

He meant you should blossom there in the grass,
For the babies to smile on as they pass,
Or to be in the bunches that each small lass Carries to tired mothers.

"God hung me here in the great blue sky
To light the world with my one big eye,
And show men how they're living;
But he put you down in the meadow lot,
The earth is fairer than if you were not;
Beauty and joy your giving.

I must see to the work he has given me;
You do what the dear Lord asks of thee;
Then all will be as it ought to be,
And life will be worth the living."

A LITTLE GIRL'S TEARS.

During the convention of Christian workers held in Buffalo last year, Rev. Russell H. Conwell told the following touching incident, which we copy from the printed proceedings of the convention:

"We had a little girl in our Sunday-school class in the infant department, and one Sunday I met her crying, and I said, 'What is the matter, May?' She said, 'I cannot get in.' I said, 'Never mind, you must come a little earlier and you can get a seat next Sunday.' She said, 'I want to go in now.' So I took her up and carried her into the church and put her down into the infant department, where she had to stand in a corner. I said, 'Lord, why can't we get room enough for the children who wish to come? Why should these things be?' I felt it deeply, and I asked the Lord why it was. I thought, 'It is very strange how the Lord manages things.'

"But I saw, a little later, why it was. Three weeks later that little girl died. When the funeral service was over they laid the little pocket-book in my hands that she used, and the mother said, 'May has been collecting these pennies that we might hire a larger room for the infant class.' I took those fifty-seven pennies and told the story to the church: 'These are the pennies that May has collected for a larger room for the infant class. Let us build a larger church.' I know why that little girl cried in the streets that day because she could not get in. I know now, but I could not see then."

God always has an angel of help for those who are willing to do their duty.—Dr. Cuyler

TEMPERANCE.

TEMPERANCE IN SOUTH AFRICA.

A late copy of the Cape Mercury, published at King William's Town, Cape of Good Hope, contains an interesting narration showing the progress of the temperance reformation among the natives of that colony. It appears, according to the Inter-Ocean, that the people of Chief Siwani's tribe were the first to agitate for the removal of the canteens (sutling houses licensed to sell liquors) from their locations. In this they were successful, and it was found by experience that the restrictions placed upon the traffic, though falling short of total prohibition, were highly advantageous to the tribe.

It was recently reported among them that the government, as a revenue measure, was about to abrogate the restrictions placed upon the traffic within the proclaimed areas. This caused much excitement among them, and was the occasion of the assemblage of a large meeting of Siwani's people, June 22, in front of the court-house in the town, to represent their views to the magistrate, and through him to the government.

That orderly meeting of dusky natives, but recently emancipated from the thralldom of barbarism, eloquently pleaded for the protection of their homes from the destroying influence of the drink, which is the curse of civilized man, formed a scene of pathetic interest to all who feel the pulse-beat of philanthropic sentiment. If the government does not heed such earnest appeals as were there made, then the white people who rule the colony should first of all be made the subjects of future missionary labors.

An old chief, named Mabope, was first to speak. They asked the government to take the liquor from their homes, and it had done so. He trusted it would now listen to their plea and not bring it back again. He wanted liquor kept as far away from the black people as possible. Sevis, a son of Siwani, said they looked to the government for protection. They were all agreed as to the good that had followed since the canteens had been closed, and they did not want the white man's liquor brought near their locations again. He was not speaking, he said, as a total abstainer, but he spoke for the good of his people.

The statement of Mema, son of a principal councillor, was to the effect that the women, as well as the men, were addicted to the drink habit. "When the canteens were among them," he said, "their wives spent all their time at them, and they had no wives." If the wives of white people should fall into like habits of dissipation, the men would speedily organize W. C. T. U. societies for the suppression of the evil. The dark-colored sisters, however, turned the tables on the men when they were given opportunity to speak. Nopodi, wife of a notable, said the women were losing their husbands and being ill-treated through drink; but since the canteens had been closed they had been happier, and had become prosperous and contented. Another woman bore testimony to the evil effects of drink, and concluded by saying that she "had almost become tired of being thrashed when the canteens were near them." That sort of experience would make even a white woman "almost tired!" A number of women spoke to about the same effect.

Mr. Dick, the local magistrate, closed the conference by saying that he would present the matter to the government, and that he believed it would be a good-day for the natives when strong drink could no longer be sold to the black man. This was greeted by signs of earnest approval by the assemblage. Altogether, the incident may be noted as an indication that the tidal wave of temperance is reaching all shores.—Sel.

T. D. Crothers, in the Scientific American, says of the effects of alcohol on the mind: "It is one of the curious errors that alcohol stimulates the imagination, and gives a clearer, more practical insight into the relation of events of life. The whirl of thought roused up by the increased circulation of the blood in the brain is not imagination; it is not a superior insight or conception of the relation of events, but is a rapid reproduction of previous thoughts, soon merging into confusion. The inebriate never creates any new ideas or new views; all his fancies are tumultuous, blurred and barren. The apparent brilliancy is only the flash of mania, quickly followed by dementia. Alcohol always lowers the brain capacity, and lowers the power of discriminating the relation of ideas and events. After a few periods of intoxication, the mind under the influence of spirits is a blank, blurred page. The poets and orators who are popularly supposed to make great efforts under the influence of alcohol, only repeated what had been said before in a tangled delirium of expression. The physicians who are supposed to have greater skill when using spirits, have paralyzed their higher brain-centers, and have lost all sense of fear or appreciation of the consequence of their acts, and hence act more automatically, simply doing what they have done before without any clear appreciation or discrimination of the results. The inebriate is the best of all imaginative persons, and the one in whom the higher brain forces of judgment, reason and conception are the first to give way. The man who uses spirits to give mental force and clearness is doing the very worse thing possible to destroy this effect. Alcohol is ever and always a paralyzant. It never creates anything; it never gives strength or force that did not exist before; it never gives a clearer conception and power to execution, but always lowers, destroys and breaks down."

The South American delegates to the International Congress, who have made a tour of the United States as the nation's guests, have been dined and winned most abundantly. At South Bend, Ind., they were entertained by Mr. Studebaker, one of the United States delegates, at a dinner at which one hundred and fifty guests were seated at the tables. Of this dinner the Chicago Tribune says: "The meal which was served was as elegant in its appointments as any with which the visitors have been honored. A novel feature of this dinner was its exemplification of Mr. Studebaker's ideas of temperance. For the first time on the trip the travelers were served with water only." All honor to Mr. and Mrs. Studebaker for thus giving to these South American guests a useful object lesson, and showing them the better side of truly American hospitality.—National Temperance Advocate.

Good Health presents the following results of an analysis of a cigarette, made by a physician: "The tobacco was found to be strongly impregnated with opium, while the wrapper, which was warranted to be rice paper, was proved to be the most ordinary quality of paper whitened with arsenic. The two poisons combined were present in sufficient quantities to create in the smoker a habit of using opium without his being aware of it, his craving for which can only be satisfied by an incessant consumption of cigarettes. The state should prohibit the making and vending of the poisonous cigarettes, as well as poisonous alcoholic beverages, and from kindred reasons.

The following from an exchange, shows what help we have from saloon-keepers in forming the morals and the habits of our boys. Lately, in Chicago, "a school teacher noticed a knot of boys counting the number of holes in some cards. He called one of them up and insisted on knowing what it meant, and the boy told him that a saloon-keeper who had his saloon near the school had given them those cards, and every time they took a drink he punched them, one hole for beer, two for straight drinks, and three for mixed drinks, and each month he gave prizes. The boy who had the most holes punched in his card got a revolver, the second a life of Jesse James, and the third a meerschaum pipe."

The New York Assembly has taken favorable action on the resolution providing for a popular vote on the question of a prohibition amendment to the Constitution. Sixty-six votes were recorded in its favor. The senate had already passed the resolution. This is the second legislature that has ratified the submission of the proposed amendment, and the question now goes before the people. It is to be acted on at a special election on the second Tuesday in April, 1891. No other subject will be voted on at the time, and the fullest opportunity for a fair expression of popular opinion on prohibition will accordingly be afforded.

The Congregational Union at its session in London, England, May 13, adopted resolutions denouncing the government scheme for the compensation of liquor-sellers who may be deprived of their licenses.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The model prayer, vs. 1-4. If we had never sinned, prayer would be as natural as our breath; but in humanity's fallen state prayer is a foreign tongue, and the most of us do, indeed, need to be taught to pray. "As he was praying" this request was made. It is the prayerful Christian who awakens a desire in others to learn to pray; he who prays as if it was a delight and has the consciousness of receiving. It is the most precious lesson we can learn, and one for which all the philosophy and accomplishments of the schools can be no substitute. We have many examples of prayer in the Old Testament, but none like this which forms a universal model fitting every age, class and condition; none which gives us the idea of Fatherhood, or sets before us the thought of a world-wide kingdom where God's will should be done by human beings with the freedom and gladness with which glorified spirits do it in heaven. It is a prayer that only a Christian can say sincerely, though it is every day taken upon formal and worldly lips. The first part relates to God, and has all humanity for its scope; the second to our own needs. The greater includes the less, and in prayer as in all other things we are to "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness," secure in his promise that the rest will be "added." Before we can truly call God our "Father" we must do the works of a loving, obedient child. If we want his name universally hallowed we must be careful ourselves to treat it with the greatest reverence. If we really want to have his kingdom come, we shall seek to have it begin in our own hearts. We are to pray for this day's wants, not for to-morrow's. We are to ask for strength to bear our burdens as they come, but not before they come. We are to forgive others if we would be forgiven ourselves. An unforgiving spirit turns its cup upside down, and makes it impossible for God to fill it. We are to understand the last petition, "Lead us not into temptation," by Christ's own prayer for his disciples: "I pray not that they be taken out of the world, but that they be kept from the evil." Not as recluses and hermits are we to live, but as strangers and pilgrims—in the world, but not of it. This prayer, brief as it is, sounds the whole gamut of human needs; and however we may amplify and enlarge, our every petition may be classed under one of these several heads.

2. The encouragements to prayer, vs. 5-13. It is a rule which scarcely has an exception that earnestness and importunity always win in the end. Human nature does not like to have its ease and quiet disturbed by constant begging, and even the veriest churl will, to get rid of a beggar, grant him his petition. Much more will a loving father heed the cry of his hungry child for bread. Yet even the tenderest human parent approaches no nearer to infinite love than to infinite wisdom. Surely we have the greatest possible incentives to prayer in the very character of God himself. The ninth verse is like a bank check. It stands for all its face value, and is the same as cash to the one it is paid to. So the asking is in itself receiving. One may not be conscious that their prayers are answered; but this makes no difference with the fact. They can go their way in rejoicing hope with a heart "to labor and to wait." This has made the world's saints and heroes strong to battle against popular iniquity. When everything else failed they could pray. It ought to make us strong in the present age. Rum and tobacco are mighty, and secret societies boast themselves invincible, yet there is not an evil in the world to-day so strong as the prayers of the humblest Christian.

HELPFUL THOUGHTS FROM PELOUBET'S QUARTERLY.

THE THREEFOLD ANSWER.—There are three ways in which prayers are answered. (1) In the praying itself is an answer, the communion with God that comes through prayer; but this cannot come without another answer. (2) There is a giving of the exact thing we ask for, where direct promises are made, or where it would be good for us to receive it; but not always in the way, or at the time, we may set. (3) As many times the exact thing we ask for, in the form we ask for it, would be the worst thing for us, and what we really do not want; therefore, in such cases God gives us the spirit of our prayer, what we really would have asked for had we known all things, as he does. A child asks for a white powder he sees, thinking it sugar, when in reality it is poison. The parent refuses the poison, and gives real sugar instead. He, not in a literal form, but a thousand times more really, gives what the child asks for. So does God with us, and so at last we shall see that every true prayer is really answered.

Note in regard to the answer, (1) that the best things cannot be given directly, as money and houses can be given, but they must be wrought in us; and the extent to which they can be given depends on our co-operation. Such gifts are character, the Holy Spirit, education, usefulness, love. (3) The best answers to prayer, therefore, often take a long time to ripen so that we can receive them, but the answer begins to come with the first prayer of faith.

EDUCATIONAL.

—The contributions to American Colleges during 1889 amounted to about $4,000,000.

—Rev. W. P. Johnston has been elected president of Geneva College, Beaver Falls, Pa., to succeed Dr. H. H. George, resigned. Mr. Johnston has been vice-president of the college and professor of Latin and English literature. He was a student in Geneva College until his senior year. That year he studied in Jefferson and graduated in 1858. For nine years he was pastor of the Baltimore Covenant congregation. He resigned this charge to accept a call to the Washington (Iowa) congregation where he was pastor for eight years, and for two years principal of Washington Academy. In 1881 he resigned these charges to accept a professorship in Geneva. He is said by the Brooklyn News-Letter to be a faithful teacher, painstaking and enthusiastic in his work, popular alike with faculty and students, and is one of the most polished and cultured preachers in the church.

—The University of St. Petersburg numbers 1,759 students, of whom 1,228 are members of the Orthodox religion, 21 Armenian Gregorians, 172 Catholics, 199 Lutherans or members of the Reformed Church, 3 Anglicans, 125 Jews, 8 Mussulmans, and 3 of other non-Christian cults. Divided into their classes in society, there are 1,135 either noble or the sons of officials, 148 sons of notable citizens or of merchants of the first guild, 116 sons of clergymen of the Orthodox Church, 280 of citizens, merchants of the second guild, and industrials, 51 peasants, 8 Cossacks, and 21 of foreign origin. Of the students, 1,728 were educated in classical gymnasia, 5 in ancient seminaries, and 26 in other educational establishments. The University of Helsingfors has at the present time 1,735 students, among whom there are seventeen women. These are divided into the following faculties: One hundred and eighty-nine theological students, 601 law, 138 medical, 408 philological, and 399 natural sciences and mathematics.

—Mr. Edmunds, of Vermont, has introduced in the Senate a bill to establish a University of the United States, and had it referred to a select committee of nine. The bill provides that the university shall be governed by a corporation and board of regents composed of the President, members of the Cabinet, the Chief Justice of the United States and twelve citizens, no two of whom shall be appointed from the same State. The purpose of this university is to institute and carry on a course of education and research in all branches of learning—investigation that shall, in the opinion of the board of regents, from time to time be most conducive to the advancement and to the increase and development of knowledge. The bill also appropriates $5,000,000 to be permanently set aside in the treasury of the United States as the principal and perpetual fund, the necessary part of the income of which may be annually used for the expenses of the university. No special sectarian belief or doctrine shall be taught or promoted in the university, but this proposition shall not be deemed to exclude the study and consideration of Christian theology.

—The Trustees of the Slater Fund held their annual meeting in New York on the 6th. The members of the Board present were ex-President Hayes; Senator Colquitt, of Georgia; William E. Dodge; John A. Stewart, president of the United States Trust Company, and William A. Slater, of Norwich, son of the founder. Mr. John F. Slater, of Norwich, Conn., gave $1,000,000 in 1882, to be invested and the income to be voted in aid of schools among the freedmen of the South. His desire was not to build new schools but to assist those established by others. By prudent management the fund has been increased to $1,200,000. About $45,000 had been paid during the twelve months under review toward the support of thirty-four institutions. Dr. Haygood, a prominent friend in the South of the education of the Negro, was present and spoke very hopefully. He said that there were now 16,000 schools for colored children among the freedmen, supported by the State governments at an annual expense of about $5,000,000. As a proof of progress during the past twenty-five years, he said that they were now receiving the children of those educated at the beginning of this effort, and that on presenting themselves they were found to be far in advance of the children of untaught parents. He said, also, that there were now 9,000 children in the schools assisted by the fund, showing a steady increase from the beginning.

—In Cleveland, Ohio, the Congregational churches have increased from three in 1860 to thirteen in 1890.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—Rev. J. Milligan Wylie was some time ago appointed an evangelist to organize Covenant churches in the West. His headquarters were for some time in Kansas City. He is now located in Denver where he established a mission church in April. The organization is growing and has a good attendance at its services.

—The First Free Methodist Church of this city have purchased ground in a central location on the West Side, and expect to erect a new building in time for the next General Conference which is to meet in this city.

—The Thirty-Second General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church of North America will meet in the First United Presbyterian church of Buffalo, N. Y., on Wednesday, May 28, 1890, at 7:30 o'clock P. M. The opening sermon will be preached by Rev. E. S. McKittrick, D. D., the moderator of the last General Assembly.

—Josiah W. Hambleton died at South Bend, Ind., Monday night, aged 55 years. He was the child of wealthy parents, but since the war, in which he served as captain, he has devoted his life to missionary work among the Indians.

—In China there is now, according to intelligent estimates, one missionary to about every 300,000 people.

—Philadelphia has the largest number of Sunday-school attendants of any city in the United States, 195,802. New York ranks next with 187,000, Brooklyn next with 107,233.

—A missionary lady (A. B. C. F. M.) at Kumamoto, Japan, has been at her home eight weeks only in the last twelve months, the rest of her time being filled with tours for labor among women in various cities and towns of Kinshin.

—The Methodists build two houses of worship every day in the year. They raised last year $716 every day for church extension.

—It is announced that the next Ecumenical Conference of the Evangelical Alliance will be held at Florence, Italy, in April, 1891. It has been in contemplation for some years to have an International Conference in Italy, but the way has not been open before.

—To the Reformed Presbyterian Church, Olathe, Kansas, about twenty-five members have been added since last Synod. The pastor, Rev. J. H. Wylie, is an earnest worker, and his people support him, working in four Sabbath-schools, two in the church and two, which are union schools, in the country.

—The East End Covenant church, of Pittsburg, held the first service in their new building on Sabbath, May 4. Rev. Thos. Sproull, D. D., offered the dedication prayer. In the morning the pastor, Rev. O. B. Milligan, preached. In the afternoon there were addresses by neighboring pastors, and in the evening Dr. David McAllister preached. The church is at the corner of North Highland avenue and Harvard street, and is a very commodious and beautiful building.

—Forty persons were received into the membership of the Fifth Reformed Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia, Rev. W. H. Gailey, pastor, at the Communion on Sabbath, April 20. This makes the addition of 100 since the opening of the new church one year ago. The present membership is 500 and the Sabbath-school numbers 400.

—A matter of some import as evincing afresh the influence of Roman Catholic priests in shaping the policy of the French Republic in certain directions, is the case of the Rev. John Jones, who was forcibly expelled by the French authorities of New Caledonia from the Island of Mare, which had been the scene of his successful missionary labors for thirty-three years. The government allowed him only an hour for preparation and arrangement to go on the French man-of-war to Noumea; and now the home officers of the Republic have refused an application of the British Government to review the case.

—The new Gospel launch of the American board, built for missionary use in the Caroline Islands, made its first trial trip in Boston Harbor. The boat will be stationed at Ponape, one of the Caroline Islands, for the use of Rev. F. E. Rand, for fifteen years a missionary at that point, and Mrs. Rand. They have heretofore been obliged to visit the islanders there in a small and unseaworthy canoe. Ponape has a population of about five thousand souls, and Mr. Rand has thirteen churches there in active operation, with a membership of more than one thousand. The launch itself is a seaworthy craft, 25 feet in length with a beam of 5½ feet, and has a four-horse power engine capable of securing a speed of seven or eight knots per hour.

—The announcement that the Quakers are not dying out, is made in a letter from "A Quaker" to Murray's Magazine. During the first half of this century their decline in numbers was very rapid; but for a good many years past the accessions by "convincement" have been every year so greatly in excess of the secessions that, notwithstanding a very low marriage rate and very low birth rate and some emigration, there is yearly a steady though slight increase in Great Britain. In the United States the Quakers, we are told by the same authority, are increasing almost rapidly, especially in the South and West, mainly through accessions from other religious bodies.

IN BRIEF.

Volapuk is now eleven years old, and it is asserted that 5,000,000 people are able to use it.

Senator Hoar recently remarked that the Sunday newspapers was the greatest curse of modern times.

It has been found necessary to protect President Lincoln's monument from relic-hunters with a stout iron fence.

The people of New York State pay out about $25,000,000 annually toward the support of its 350,000 criminals, paupers, tramps and vagrants.

The Farmers' Alliance of Texas is in trouble and sensational developments are rumored. In 1887 the leaders organized an exchange with a capital of $500,000 at Dallas. They are alleged to be short $250,000, and farmers who are stockholders demand an investigation.

The New York legislature, which adjourned May 9th, voted the day before to submit a prohibitory amendment to the voters of that State at a special election to be held on the second Tuesday of April, 1891. This measure has already passed the preceding legislature, and will therefore be submitted to the people on the date named.

The bill authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Hudson river at New York has passed the House of Representatives, and is now awaiting the action of the Senate. The proposed bridge will be 6,500 feet long, including anchorages, which is nearly twice the length of the Brooklyn bridge, and more than 1,000 feet longer than the Forth bridge in Scotland, now the longest bridge in the world. It is estimated the bridge, with right of way, terminal stations, etc., will cost $40,000,000.

One of the latest and most unique of electrical inventions, is a machine for buttering bread. It is used in connection with a patent bread-cutter, and is intended for use in prisons and reformatory institutions. There is a cylindrical-shaped brush which is fed with butter, and lays a thin layer on the bread as it comes from the cutter. The machine has a capacity of cutting and buttering 750 loaves of bread an hour. The saving of butter and of bread, and the decrease in the quantity of crumbs, is said to be very large.

Mr. Caldwell, of Ohio, has introduced in the House a bill to prevent the desecration of the United States flag. It provides "that any person who shall disfigure the national flag, either by printing on said flag or attaching to the same, or otherwise, any advertisement for public display, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof in the District Court of the United States, shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $50 or imprisonment not less than thirty days, or both, at the discretion of the court."

For 110 years to come, no man, woman or child will write the current date without using the figure 9; for nineteen years during that period two 9's must be written—in 1899, 1909, 1919, 1929, 1939, 1949, 1959, 1969, 1979, 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994, 1995, 1996, 1997, 1998; and for one year—1999—three 9's will have to be set down. Of the people now living, it is safe to say that not one will ever write the date of his or her own time without using a 9. Besides minding their p's and q's, the next three generations must give particular heed to their 9's.

A unique and interesting feature of the Henry C. Bowen's Roseland Park celebration this year, on the Fourth of July, will be a monster parade of Sunday-school children. Owing to the recent death of Mr. Bowen's son, he himself will not have the direction of the celebration, having requested a committee of Woodstock citizens to take charge of it. But as he has given the committee carte blanche in everything, the occasion will lose none of its interest and attractiveness. When it is stated that Rev. Dr. Wayland, of Philadelphia, is to be one of the orators of the day, it will be seen that a rare intellectual treat is in store for those who will have the good fortune to be present.

The boundary line between the United States and Canada is not "imaginary," as most people suppose. The fact is the line is distinctly marked from Lake Michigan to Alaska by cairns, iron pillars, earth mounds and timber clearings. There are two of these marks between the Lake of the Woods and the base of the Rocky Mountains. The British placed one post every two miles, and the United States one between each British post. The posts are of cast-iron, and cast on their faces as the words, "Convention of London, Oct. 20, 1818." Where the line crosses lakes, mountains of stone have been built projecting eight feet above high-water mark. In forests the line is defined by felling trees for a space a rod wide.

And whoever has renewed their subscriptions within the last six months can get 1280 pages of Dictionary, sent post-paid for $2.25!!

Read the advertisement on page 13, "A REMARKABLE OFFER."

SCOTT'S EMULSION

Of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites Of Lime and Soda.

There are emulsions and emulsions, and there is still much skimmed milk which masquerades as cream. Try as they will many manufacturers cannot so disguise their cod liver oil as to make it palatable to sensitive stomachs. Scott's Emulsion of PURE NORWEGIAN COD LIVER OIL, combined with Hypophosphites is almost as palatable as milk. For this reason as well as for the fact of the stimulating qualities of the Hypophosphites, Physicians frequently prescribe it in cases of

CONSUMPTION,

SCROFULA, BRONCHITIS and CHRONIC COUGH or SEVERE COLD. All Druggists sell it, but be sure you get the genuine, as there are poor imitations.

REMARKABLE OFFER!

Nearly everyone is familiar with the name, but it has been estimated that only one in every two hundred and eighty persons in the United States is fortunate enough to have access to the valuable information contained within the covers of the grandest work ever written by mortal man,

Webster's

UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY.

That this is an unfortunate state of affairs will be admitted by all, and it is due to the fact that no one save the rich could afford them.

The Dictionary is a necessity in every home, school and business house. It fills a vacancy and furnishes knowledge which no one hundred volumes of the choicest books could supply, and all young or old, educated or ignorant, rich or poor should have it within reach and refer to its contents every day in the year.

The Loomis reprint contains all the matter as compiled and arranged by our esteemed and honored author and statesman,

NOAH WEBSTER.

About forty years of his life was devoted to this great work, and when we consider the fact that this book contains about 100,000 words, we will appreciate that these years must have been well spent.

Some idea of the magnitude of this book may be gained from the fact that it contains over 440 cubic inches of paper and has about 300,000 square inches of printed surface.

In addition to the 100,000 words it contains a portrait of the author, together with his biography and a valuable table of 12,000 synonymous words.

By special arrangement with the publishers, we are permitted to furnish this valuable volume: 1st. To any subscriber to our paper; 2nd. To any renewal subscription; and 3rd. To any person who has paid a full year's subscription within the past six months, on receipt of $1.50 for the paper one year, and two dollars and seventy-five cents to cover express charges, packing, etc., of the Dictionary.

HOME AND HEALTH.

LAUNDRY HINTS.

Grass stain is particularly obstinate to remove. It will sometimes disappear by dipping the spot in molasses, and letting it lie a few moments. Rinse the molasses out in clear water, and the stain will disappear with it. A more effectual method, however, is to dip the spot in a solution of tin chloride, and immediately wash it out in an abundance of clear water.

Many stains which are too firmly set to yield to the treatment with boiling water, will come out by dipping the spot in warm chlorine water.

Fruit, mildew or ink stains on delicate fabrics can be dipped in clear cold water, and then in a mixture made by one table-spoonful lemon juice, one tea-spoonful oxalic acid and one-half pint rainwater, shaken together. Grease spots can usually be taken out by covering the spot with French chalk scraped on, covered with brown paper and a warm flat-iron set on it to cool.

Grease on cloth can be rubbed well with fuller's-earth, or yet with benzine, or, again, with purified ox-gall mixed with yolk of egg. When nothing else can be obtained, common wheat flour can be made into a paste with cold water and when dry rubbed on to a grease spot.

Blood stains can be saturated in kerosene oil, and washed out in warm water. Mildew will readily disappear in a dilute solution of chloride of lime.

Delicate colors in embroidered handkerchiefs can be set by soaking for ten minutes previous to washing, in a pail of tepid water, in which a dessert-spoonful of turpentine has been well stirred.

Silk underwear should be washed through several cool waters in which soap and borax have been dissolved. All silk wear should be squeezed by the hand rather than rubbed, although especially soiled spots must be rubbed with a little soap.—Bazar.

GIVE WATER TO INFANTS.

A distinguished children's doctor believes, from his practice, that infants generally, whether brought up at the breast or artificially, are not supplied with sufficient water, the fluid portion of their food being quickly taken up and leaving the solid too thick to be easily digested. In warm, dry weather, healthy babies will take water every hour with advantage, and their frequent fretfulness and rise of temperature are often directly due to their not having it. In teeth-cutting, water soothes the gums, and frequently stops the fretting and restlessness universal in children at this period.

HINTS.

Salt fish will soak fresh much quicker in sour milk than in water.

Lamp burners can be renovated by boiling them in strong soda water.

Cups and saucers stained with tea may be made bright by using a little damp salt.

Yellow piano keys may be whitened with sandpaper and afterward polished with chamois.

To remove tar from the hands, rub with the outside of a fresh lemon peel and wipe dry immediately.

Spruce pillows which have lost their fragrance may be renewed by subjecting them to steam and drying them afterward.

Rattan chairs that have become discolored may be made very pretty by a coating of golden-brown paint and finished with a handsome cushion.

One pound of flour, a table-spoonful of alum and three quarts of water, boiled together with newspapers till of the consistency of putty, makes a good filling for floor cracks. It hardens like papier-mache.—Detroit Tribune.

Baron Liebig, the great German chemist, says that "as much flour as can lie on the point of a table knife, contains as much nutritive constituents as eight pints of the best and most nutritious beer that is made."

FARM NOTES.

POTASH IN THE SOIL.

The effects of potash upon the soil are well known to be remarkable. One hears continually that "the land never forgets a dressing of ashes," and cases are continually spoken of where the effects are apparent after thirty or forty years. This is not surprising when the action of potash in the soil is considered. Much error is taught in this respect. Potash is held by the soil very firmly, and so is phosphoric acid; and both of these are the principal fertilizing elements of wood ashes. Dr. Lawes states that potash and phosphoric acid remain in the soil for at least thirty years, and an application of these fertilizers made thirty years ago at Rothamstead is still recognized by its effects upon the crops. Potash is one of the most necessary ingredients of the soil for plant food. It is at the same time very abundant in the soil, but unfortunately is held in its combination with silica, in the form of a silicate, in an insoluble and inert condition; and therefore it is that an application of potash, in whatever form it may be, to the soil has such remarkably favorable effects. It is because of these effects upon the soil in rendering the potash available by dissolving the silicate that lime, salt, chloride of potash, and perhaps gypsum, or the sulphuric acid released from this in its decomposition, are so beneficially used as fertilizers; and it is this effect, also exerted by the atmosphere and the weather upon the silicates in the soil, that makes fall plowing, fallowing; and cultivation of so much use. The abundance of potash that exists in the soil may be realized by considering the proportions of it which go to make up the following common rocks and minerals which enter into the composition of rocks. Mica, the glistening, scaly substance that is so abundant in almost every soil, and in a great many rocks, contains nine per cent of potash feldspar; the flesh color and reddish rock which is so often associated with quartz in granite, gneiss, mica slates, porphyry and basalt, and is often found in masses and veins alone, contains no less than 17 per cent of potash, and nearly all the slates contain a considerable portion. As these rocks form more or less of nearly all soils, clays, loams, gravels and sands, potash is therefore exceedingly abundant; but, as we have said, it is so locked up as to be only slowly available. But as it becomes available it is held very firmly in the soil, and is never carried off by the drainage. A farmer can never, therefore, go wrong in liberally supplying his soil with potash.—The Dairy.

CATCH CROPS AMONG FRUIT.

The question what to plant for a catch crop is an important one to the fruit grower at any period of his career, but especially so to the beginner, who is paying out all the time without any possibility of gathering a profitable crop from even the strawberries in less than a year. To the difficulty of growing two crops at the same time, without injury to either, is added the question of gathering and the problem of profit, as affected by the increased cost of production. The tree fruits give but little trouble, as any hoed crop can be grown, excepting such as require very high manuring, like cabbages and onions. Of the small fruits, strawberries give very little opportunity for growing anything else, although some plant them twenty inches apart in the row, and plant a single eye of some dwarf potato, like Early Ohio, between. Onion sets may also be put in, provided it is done early; and on high priced land, near a city, the rows of strawberry plants may be set four or four and a half feet apart, and a row of early cabbages, or onions, or early sweet corn may be grown; but this means a good deal of hard labor that must be hired cheaply if a profit is to be expected.

An acquaintance of the writer once tried the experiment of growing early cabbages between rows of strawberries planted three feet apart. The ground was a long neglected garden spot that had produced a crop of weeds three

PAT'S DILEMMA.

Shure, docthor, this pain is jist awful!
Be jabbers! I'm all of a sweat!
I hope you will thry to relave it,
For belave me, I can't lay nor set!

Well, Pat, I will try and relieve you, (duced), (With a smile which Pat's speech had in-
And if you can't "lay" nor "set" either,
Perhaps you had better just roost!

But, Pat, for the pain you complain of,
Simply roosting alone might not do,
I think I would try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, too.

For Liver Disease, Biliousness, Indigestion, Scrofula or any blood-taint or disorder, the "Golden Medical Discovery" is the only remedy possessed of such superior curative properties as to warrant its manufacturers in selling it, through druggists, under a positive guarantee that it will either benefit or cure in every case, or money paid for it will be refunded.

It's a legitimate medicine, not a beverage; contains no alcohol to inebriate, no syrup or sugar to derange digestion. As wonderful in its curative results as in its peculiar composition. It stands alone,—incomparable! Therefore, don't be fooled into accepting something instead, said to be "just as good," because the substitute pays the dealer a better profit.

The equal of the "Golden Medical Discovery" has not been invented; if it ever is, it won't be sold for a less price than what the "Discovery" costs, viz: $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00. It's a concentrated vegetable extract. Dose small and pleasant to the taste. Equally good for adults or children.

To invigorate the liver, sharpen the appetite, improve digestion, and build up both strength and flesh, when reduced below the standard of health, it ranks pre-eminent. Has the largest sale of any medicine in the world, without a single exception!

For all itching, scaly, festering, burning, tormenting Skin and Scalp diseases, it is especially efficacious. Salt-rheum, Tetter, Psoriasis, Erysipelas, Eczema, and all humors, from a common pimple or eruption to the worst Scrofula, vanish under the use of this world-famed remedy, if continued for a reasonable length of time. Scrofulous Sores and Swellings are cured, and the most tainted systems are, by its somewhat persistent use, cleansed from the most virulent blood-poisons and completely renovated and built up anew. WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Proprietors, Buffalo, N. Y.

$500 OFFERED for an incurable case of Catarrh in the Head by the proprietors of DR. SAGE'S CATARRH REMEDY.

SYMPTOMS OF CATARRH.—Headache, obstruction of nose, discharges falling into throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; eyes weak, ringing in ears, deafness, difficulty of clearing throat, expectoration of offensive matter; breath offensive; smell and taste impaired, and general debility. Only a few of these symptoms likely to be present at once. Thousands of cases result in consumption, and end in the grave.

By its mild, soothing, antiseptic, cleansing, and healing properties, Dr. Sage's Remedy cures the worst cases. Only 50 cents. Sold by druggists everywhere.

years in succession. There was no room for horse cultivation, and hand hoeing did not push the cabbages as horse work would have done, and they were only second early, bringing a low price which did not begin to pay for the extra hand work required. The cabbages, which should have been out of the way by July 15th, were not marketed until September 1st, and then the strawberries had, in many places, run across the row, and the cultivator belied its name and became a destroyer.—Vick's Magazine for May.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

WASHINGTON.

Monday, Mr. Wilson (Iowa) made an effort in the Senate to have the bill relating to liquors imported into prohibitory States taken up and considered, but he was forced to yield to the prior claim of the silver bill.

Wednesday the United States Brewers' Association met in annual convention at Washington, D. C., and was opened by Chairman Lefens, of Chicago, who, in his annual address, recommended the erection of a complete brewery at the World's Fair.

For the first time in the history of the House judiciary committee, a majority of the members agreed, Thursday, to a favorable report upon a joint resolution, introduced by Representative Baker (N. Y.) providing for a Constitutional amendment to grant the right of suffrage to women. Twice before a minority of the committee has reported favorably on similar propositions, and one of these reports was drawn by the present speaker, Mr. Reed, but a majority could not be induced to take favorable action.

CHICAGO.

The grand jury entered into the investigation of the Twenty-fourth Ward election frauds in earnest, Saturday, and returned an omnibus indictment against twenty-six persons charging them with conspiracy to violate the election law. Two aldermen are among those indicted.

COUNTRY.

Thursday, United States District Judge Foster, who has just returned from the Indian Territory, said at Topeka, Kan., that the Indian tribes were anticipating the arrival of the Messiah at any moment.

The boodle aldermen of Des Moines, Iowa, were indicted by the Grand Jury Thursday, and immediately arrested. They are charged with unlawfully drawing money from the treasury, and issuing fraudulent warrants to cover the same.

At Nevada, Mo., Thursday, Judge Hindman, of the District Court, in his charge to the Grand Jury, took the ground that in spite of the "original package" decision, the local laws concerning the sale of liquor were supreme and should be obeyed, and directed the jury to indict any persons violating the local liquor laws.

A wreck is said to have occurred Tuesday, near Plover, Wis., on the Portage branch of the Wisconsin Central, in which twenty persons are reported killed or injured.

The largest saw-mill in the world, says an exchange, is located at Clinton, Iowa. It cost $260,000, and is capable of sawing 450,000 feet of lumber in eight hours. It has seven band and three gang saws, and two batteries of ten boilers each.

Shortly after 7, Sunday morning, the Mohawk Valley was disturbed by a slight shock of earthquake accompanied by lightning and heavy winds. The shock increased in intensity to Montgomery county, where, at Fort Hunter, it was quite severe. At Little Falls, N. Y., dishes were rattled and a rumbling as of distant thunder was heard. At Fort Hunter buildings were shaken and beds moved so that the occupants were awakened.

Buildings were fired by lightning at Lucas, O., Sunday morning. While removing goods about fifty pounds of dynamite, which was kept in a store, exploded with disastrous effect. The bodies of two men were horribly mangled and mutilated beyond recognition. About twenty-five persons in all were more or less injured.

Eight persons were drowned while boating Sunday afternoon, near Fall River, Mass.

The King of Italy, since the death of his brother, the Duke of Aosta, has continued in a profound and alarming melancholy.

Mr. Mutsu, late Japanese Minister to the United States, has been appointed Minister of Husbandry in the new Cabinet of Japan. The position is next to that of premier. Diplomatic circles in Washington are greatly pleased at the appointment. While at Washington Mr. Mutsu negotiated the reciprocal treaty between Japan and Mexico. Mr. Romero, the Mexican Minister, was the other negotiator.

Mr. Gladstone, in a letter on the licensing question, says that the mere introduction in Parliament of the license bill which provides for compensation for loss of licenses, has already increased the value of publicans' property by probably £50,000,000. The measure, he says, is the heaviest blow ever struck at the cause of temperance.

The village of St. Mahlen, near Hildesheim, Germany, has been visited recently by severe hailstorms, which have done a great deal of damage. Thursday the people gathered in a church to pray for a cessation of the storms. While the services were in progress a thunder storm came up and the church was struck by lightning. Four persons were instantly killed and twenty were injured, four being rendered completely blind. The people were panic-stricken, and in the rush for the doors two children were crushed to death.

The lodgemen and papists of Newburyport, Mass., are in a fine quarrel. The Converted Catholic of New York says: "Through the efforts of a secret society all the licenses for that town have been granted to so-called Protestants—of course they are not members of any Christian church—and Father Teeling, the Roman Catholic priest, has protested against this unfair discrimination. He thinks the Roman Catholics should have a monopoly of liquor-selling."

The Bennett law controversy took a peculiar turn at Milwaukee, where a state convention of Catholics was held last week. Every speech is said to have banged away a broadside of argument or invective at the law. But especially Bishop Katzer assailed the law in the name of American liberty and the rights of conscience, which he and his church are so diligently promoting in every part of Christendom. But, more, he claimed that the Masonic lodge was the real author of the law, and arraigned the order at length for its opposition to "the church." His speech was heard with great applause and aroused the Masons of the State, and they are arranging for a suitable reply.

The dedication of a monument to General Lee was the occasion of an immense demonstration in Richmond last Friday, which ought to have startled the spectators with the exhibition of the old Confederate spirit. One might have believed the world rolled back thirty years, and the rebellion yet in its pride. Confederate flags were waving by the thousand, while the National colors were generally furled or held to the staff. That was the exhibition of patriotism in Richmond—a display of rebellious spirit which may well make us fear. But at Cleveland there was another demonstration, equally immense in numbers and enthusiasm, and graced by the presence of President Harrison. It was the dedication of the Garfield monument. There was but one flag displayed here, but there was the recognition of an element as disloyal to America and as subversive of her principles as the old rebel songs and flags in the Southern city. In the vast procession were a long parade of Knight Templar Freemasons, of Uniformed Knights of Pythias and of the Odd-fellow military degree. All these bands of drilled, armed and officered men are really marshalled under as disloyal a flag as the "stars and bars." Their organizations are un-American and dangerous and every patriot who shudders at the display at the monument of Lee should cry out against that at the tomb of Garfield.

The Cynosure has several times of late noted the marvelous expansion of the assessment secret societies in Massachusetts. There has been much said also by the Boston papers concerning the frauds practiced upon members by the managers and promoters of these orders. The Insurance Commissioner of the State says that he has given charters to thirty-two endowment societies in the last year, and in a single week lately sent out papers for fourteen more. Many of these are of a piece with Dr. Wilson's celebrated Royal Society of Good Fellows. The Commissioner says that if he had been allowed discretion he would not have permitted the organization of one of these associations in the last two years. He shows how untrustworthy are these orders by a few statistics. One company with 118 members, on January 1 had paid $1,593 to get these members, and owes $2,948 more. The salaries of officers which these 118 must pay are $12,800 a year. Another society which has paid $375 in sick benefits in five and a half months, collected $5,201 in the same time, and the cost of the society for a year was $14,212, of which $8,769 was paid in salaries to officers. Such management is much in need of a secret society to give it character.

The federation of the five Central American States, Guatemala, Honduras, San Salvador, Nicaragua, and Costa Rica, shows the trend of all American countries towards union and harmony. This federation is to take effect Sept 15th, under a constitution similar to our own. They have a population only a little less than ours in 1790, and a combined territory something less than that of Texas. Each State will be a gainer, not only by their mutual aid in all works, either of defense or intellectual improvement, but especially in unrestricted traffic. Their foreign trade, which amounts to about $31,000,000 yearly, might nearly all of it be directed to the United States, if our legislators only had the wisdom to secure commercial reciprocity. Our importations from these countries, mainly tropical fruits, coffee and cochineal, are such as we cannot produce, while the articles we have in excess are precisely those which they need. How reasonable that we should exchange. Diversity of language, religion and type of civilization, will, for a long time, prevent the Latin nations of America from becoming identified with those of British origin, but there is no reason why they should not become united to each other, so that there shall be, eventually, but two great republics on the Western Hemisphere, and these shall be in mutual harmony and commercial union.

There is a movement on foot among the ritualistic churches that keep "holy days and festivals" to forsake the well-tried and successful International Sunday-school Committee's arrangement of lessons, for one that will be in accord with their idea of church festivals. Where will such a movement end? It is to be earnestly hoped that the Episcopal church, which made such an urgent call for Christian union, will protest against the severing of this bond that binds the Sabbath-schools of the world together. At the last annual meeting of the Synod of the Potomac, of the Reformed church, at Carlisle, Pa., in October last, it was resolved that "the observance of the leading fasts and festivals of the Christian year in their proper Scriptural and historical order, is a matter that far transcends in importance any advantages that may accrue from the use of any uniform series of Sunday-school lessons, such as have been presented in the schemes prepared from time to time by the International Sunday-school Committee." It was also regretted that the committee had not recognized these festivals, and an attempt was made to secure the co-operation of other in the observance of "Christmas," "Easter," and other holidays of heathen name or origin which were baptized by Romanists several centuries after Christ.

After many weeks of "dwelling under a cloud" Mr. Quay of Pennsylvania is to be vindicated. The Beta Theta Pi fraternity of Washington and Jefferson College have determined to make him a character to order or, at least, try to clear up the spots on his old one. They are preparing to prove that it is impossible for a man who has been a Beta Theta Pi to steal $250,000 out of the State Treasury or to commit other eccentricities which would bring grief and shame upon the chapter hall. They have notified the Democratic and Independent press that the publishing of such lies must be stopped. Of course the press is afraid of the "fraters." But this is all legitimate so far as the Beta Theta Pi is concerned, for they pledged Mr. Quay long ago "to place implicit confidence in every member of this association, and to use all honorable means to promote his interests and to aid his preferment," and "never to see calmly, nor without earnest desire and decided efforts to prevent it, the ill treatment, slander, or defamation of any one who wears the badge or bears the name of Beta Theta Pi." What else could the Betas do with such an oath over them? But the laughable part of it is Mr. Quay's extreme reluctance to prove what liars newspaper men are. So great is his reluctance that it is probable he will send an affectionate letter to the chapter room of Beta Theta Pi, beginning "Dear Brothers" and ending "Yours in the bonds," etc, in which he will suggest that the matter is worthy of only the most silent contempt, and hint that the more silent the contempt is the better he will like it. It is probable, therefore, that the investigation of the Gamma Chapter of Beta Theta Pi will follow the lead of the National Committee and be "indefinitely postponed."

THE SONS OF THE REVOLUTION.

BY H. H. HINMAN.

A new secret society has come forward as an educator in patriotism. It appears that ere long the G. A. R. will expire by limitation. The Loyal Legion was never more than a select few, and the Sons of Veterans can never include more than a fraction of humanity. How then shall our patriotic impulses be cultivated and represented? In view of the imminent danger that our love of country would die out, the happy thought has been suggested that we have in our midst the elements of an order that shall be both ancient and honorable, and be a perpetual school of patriotic enthusiasm. There is a large number of our citizens who can trace their lineage to the men who fought at Saratoga and Yorktown, and these, if bound together in secret oaths, with gorgeous titles and a grandiloquent ritual, might become a vast training-school for the nation. I surely think so.

Besides, too, this is no one-sided affair. The men who fought for the Southern Confederacy are virtually, if not actually, shut out from the G. A. R., the Loyal Legion and the Sons of Veterans. Is there to be no way for them to express their patriotism and to honor the old flag? Surely our once "wayward sisters" ought not to be denied their share in our national secret societies. It is enough that their names are not on the pension rolls and that they have ceased to furnish us our presidents. We can at least accord to them an honored place in our newest, grandest, patent-right school of lodge patriotism.

Henceforth we may consider the bloody chasm fairly bridged over. Now we may expect in our political world an absolute and instructive purity of action and motive. Under the teachings of this new and wonderful order our political leaders will "love themselves last," "be just and fear not," and "Let all their aims be their country's, God's and Truth's."

And that

"Still in their right hands they will carry gentle peace to silence envious tongues."

Surely the political millennium is about to dawn since the advent of the Sons of the Revolution.

How sad to think that our Puritan fathers previous to 1735 (when the Masonic influence first dawned on our land) were entirely without any secret lodges! How deplorable must have been our condition during the decadence of lodge-ism, say from 1828 to 1848, when the great mass of our citizens knew nothing of any religious worship except that of the churches, and drew their patriotic inspirations from the Bible and Declaration of Independence! True, we had some men we called statesmen and patriots, such as John Quincy Adams, Daniel Webster, William Wirt and William H. Seward; but alas! these men knew nothing of the grandeur of lodge morality and thought only of showing their kinship to the Revolutionary fathers by emulating their self-sacrificing devotion to liberty and truth. How wonderful that it has been reserved to the last decade of the nineteenth century to discover the way of making men just, wise and patriotic, by swearing them to secret favoritism!

But in contemplating the grandeur of this wonderful order, that costs only $5 for initiation and $3 for annual dues, we must not forget another that has recently put forth its claims to recognition and support. The Poor Man's Protector and Friend is about the title of a new order that has originated in Georgia and has had for its leading object to break up the monopoly of licensed distillers and protect themselves in the business of making whisky by the light of the moon.

Surely these men have as much natural right to make and sell a clearly recognized article of merchandise as their neighbors in more favored localities. If it is right to ship whisky to Georgia and sell it in "the original packages," then it cannot be wrong to make the "packages" in the State where they are called for. This is only another phase of "protection" and of "State rights." True, it was quite necessary in order to carry out this scheme of beneficence that they should kill a few people and burn some dwellings. But these are but the incidents of war. Whoever heard of a war for freedom in which some were not killed and much property destroyed? What is the life of a United States marshal—a mere hireling of an oppressive government and a protector of monopolists—in comparison with the inherent rights of the citizen to conduct his own business in his own way? In a war for freedom, does not the end justify the means? If not, then all war must be wrong, since every battle is simply a scene of violence and death.

Secret societies for the promotion of patriotism may be more popular, but surely they are less practical, than this Georgia lodge for the protection of "moonshiners."

Dayton, O.

The manufacturers of Great Britain are not, it appears, very enthusiastic about the United States "World's Fair" of 1893. Great Britain's exhibits in Paris were on a grand scale and contributed largely to the success of that exposition. If she holds back from the Chicago exhibition it will certainly lessen an element of success. Exhibitors expect to be reimbursed, to some extent, by sales in the country in which they exhibit, and this source of recoupment is cut off by the American tariff and trade policy of exclusion. But it has been suggested, from a free trade standpoint, that a lesson in political economy might be taught to the Americans by ticketing goods so as to show the selling price in England, the selling price including the cost of carriage in the United States, and the selling price plus the United States duty. Possibly the United States might object to such a showing up of the results of their ultra-protection. Meantime, taking this idea in conjunction with that of the Dutch, of organizing a sort of European boycott of the United States, there is, perhaps, food for thought. —The Critic, Halifax, N. S.

THE HOME DAY.

BY REV. WILBUR F. CRAFTS.

Much is said of the Sabbath as the day of rest and worship, for body and soul; not enough of it as the Home Day, the day of the heart.

God's two first gifts to unfallen man were the family and the Sabbath, the Jachin and Boaz pillars of beauty and strength before man's Edenic temple. Although scarred by the Fall, they still remain, like the majestic pillars that tower above surrounding ruins in Rome, and behind these pillars, in the loving fellowship of the weekly Home Day, we find, more than anywhere else, our Paradise Regained.

He who steals a poor man's purse "steals trash." He who steals the poor man's threadbare overcoat commits only petty larceny. But he who robs the poor man of his weekly Home Day, to gratify greed or appetite, commits grand larceny. The law that forbids needless Sunday work is not, then, as its enemies allege, a law to punish what is only a sin against God—it is a law to prevent a crime against man.

The recent increase of divorces is doubtless due in part to the increase of Sunday work, a wedge that not only splits the Decalogue but also the household in twain. Why should it be expected that love will survive with no weekly feast day but only increasing fast days?

The Vanderbilt engineers, in their famous plea for their rest day, said that their sons were often demoralized because of the influence upon the home life of the father's Sunday work.

What pathos there was in the suggestion of a child in such a household, when the mother was reading of the days of creation, "Let us pray God to make an eighth day so that papa can have a day to be at home with us!" A railway engineer in Washington said in an address, "For seven years I have not had one Sabbath at home with my family."

The railroads of our country, long enough to belt the world thirteen times with a single line of iron rails, are Laocoon coils crushing father and children by their Sunday work.

The home is the unit of the state, which can be no healthier, no more intelligent, no more pure than the average of its families. The average of family life is very low and the statistics of impurity very high, where the Sabbath is left open to toil and dissipation.

Laws against work on the Sabbath day are consistent with liberty, nay, more, essential to it, in the same way as other laws for the protection of the home.

The enactment of such laws by national and State and city governments should be urgently pressed in order to emancipate three millions from the Sunday slavery of needless work for gain, and the twelve million in their households whose Home Day is thus broken by a vacant chair.

NOWHERE TO GO.

Secret societies are multiplying on every hand, and for every professed purpose. Sound the alarm!—Wesleyan Methodist.

We belong to only one secret society ourselves, and that is the society composed of those who can say, "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him," but we see no occasion for alarm in the multiplication of such organizations. As a rule, we believe the secret societies of our country are doing good. We would far rather have men spend their evenings in lodge rooms than in saloons.—Baltimore Methodist.

Quite so: and if there is no other place for men but saloons, by all means let the lodges flourish, even if they do now and then kill a minister while initiating him. The ignorant hospital nurse, who, in the absence of the chaplain explained to the dying patient that as he wasn't fit for heaven he would have to go to hell, had the grace to say that he ought to be thankful that there was some place provided for him to go to; and so I suppose every man ought to be thankful that there is some place he can go to besides the saloon. But in our simplicity we had supposed that a decent man might sometimes be permitted to spend an evening at home with his wife and children, or perhaps in the house of prayer; or in reading, studying or hearing something in which his family might be interested and take part, and which would minister to their moral, intellectual and physical improvement. But if there is nothing for a man but lodges or saloons—well, we are on the fence, and shall probably stay there as long as the mud is a foot deep on each side. H. Boston, Mass.

ANTI-SECRECY AND WESLEYAN METHODIST CONNECTION.

BY GEORGE RICHEY.

[From the Bible Standard.]

The Wesleyan Methodist Connection of America was formed by a convention that met at Utica, N. Y., on the 31st of May, 1843. The call for this convention was signed by J. Horton, O. Scott, L. Lee, S. Sprague, Jr., W. Blakemore and S. R. Jackson. The convention consisted of one hundred and fifty delegates, mostly seceders from the M. E. church on account of its connection with slavery. While all were agreed on the question of slavery, the members differed widely in regard to other questions. The questions of church government, and secret societies came up for discussion. The subject of secret societies especially was warmly discussed in the Utica convention, and came very near producing a rupture. Some wished the question entirely ignored; some wished to insert an article in the Discipline advising our ministers and members to refrain from all connection with secret societies, and others wanted a stringent rule against all secret societies, while others still wished a stringent rule to apply only to secret oath-bound societies. It was finally agreed to insert in the Discipline the following:

"Ques. Have we any directions to give respecting oath-bound societies?"

"Ans. We leave that matter to the several Annual Conferences and the individual churches."

This was adopted as a compromise measure, and was not satisfactory, and especially so to Rev. E. Smith, of Pittsburgh, Pa., who was, with many others, opposed to all secret societies. Consequently, the subject was again called up by E. Smith, in the first General Conference which met in Cleveland, O., in 1844. There the question of secret societies, but especially of secret oath-bound societies, was warmly and ably discussed. The best talent of the Conference and of the Connection was called out on both sides. It resulted in the adoption of the following, which was inserted in the Discipline:

"Ques. Have we any directions to give concerning secret oath-bound societies?"

"Ans. We will on no account tolerate our ministers and members in joining secret oath-bound societies, or holding fellowship with them, as in the judgment of the Wesleyan Methodist Connection, it is inconsistent with our duties to God and Christianity to hold such fellowship."

A respectable minority entered a protest against this action. They claimed that it created a new test of membership, and that the Conference had no right to do this without first submitting it to the Annual Conferences; and that they would regard the new rule as advisory.

During the following eight years the question of secret societies and the action of the Conference of 1844, were the subjects of discussion in our official organ. At the General Conference of 1848, no change was made in the Discipline on the question of secrecy. At the General Conference of 1852, the controversy was renewed with great earnestness. It was confined, for the most part, to the action of the Conference of 1844. Those opposed to the action of that body earnestly argued that it was unconstitutional, null and void. The majority, in order to remove this objection and hoping to put this vexed question at rest, added the following to the action of 1844, in the shape of a foot-note: "This section the General Conference ordains as law." This action utterly failed to put the controversy at rest. It was claimed by the opposers of this action that if it was not law before, for the reason that the Conference of 1844 had no power to create a new condition of membership, this note did not, and could not make it law, and consequently the subject remained just where it was before this late action. The question still remained an open question, and a question much controverted among us until the General Conference of 1860. At that Conference a substitute for the rule of 1844 and foot-note of 1852 was adopted and sent to the various Annual Conferences for their concurrence. The substitute reads as follows:

"Ques. Have we any directions to give concerning secret societies?"

"Ans. We will on no account tolerate our ministers or members in joining or holding fellowship with secret societies, such as Freemasonry or Odd-fellowship, as in the judgment of the Wesleyan Methodist Connection, it is inconsistent with our duties to God to hold such connection."

A protest was entered against this action of the majority, and signed by nearly all of the minority. This action opened up the question of secret societies anew, and for the four following years we had warm discussions upon the same. The change proposed by the General Conference of 1860, was adopted by a large majority of the Annual Conferences, and received a large majority in its favor in the General Conference of 1864. This settles the question among us, so far as the constitutionality of the rule was concerned. But it fell far short of settling the question of secrecy in our Connection. The question arose as to what secret societies were, "such as Freemasonry or Odd-fellowship." Some assumed that in as much as Odd-fellowship was not oath bound, therefore all secret societies were such as Odd-fellowship, and that the rule excluded members of all secret orders. Others argued that no other secret societies were "such as Freemasonry or Odd-fellowship," and therefore the rule applied to them only. The result was that the practice of the local churches was not uniform, some churches excluding all secret society men, and others receiving all, except Freemasons and Odd-fellows. This produced confusion and general dissatisfaction.

Finally, in order to produce like practice throughout our Connection, the Champlain Annual Conference recommended, at its annual gathering in 1876, that our rule on secret societies be so changed as to exclude members of all secret societies of whatever name. This recommendation was submitted to all the Annual Conferences for their approval or rejection. The result was that it was approved by a large majority of the Annual Conferences. This recommendation of the Champlain Conference, which had been approved by the Conferences, came before the General Conference of 1879, for the action of that body. Suffice it to say it was adopted by the Conference by a very large majority, and placed in our Discipline in its present form.

So far as my recollection serves me, the above is a very brief history of the past action of the Wesleyan Methodist Connection on the subject of secret societies. And now I wish that I could say in truth that we are all satisfied with our present position on this vexed question, but I cannot. While a great majority of our ministers and members are satisfied, we have a respectable minority, both in the ministry and membership, that are not satisfied with our position on this question. This only settles the question that good men do not and cannot see alike on all questions. Some that would not on any consideration receive a man into the church that belonged to a secret oath-bound society, would not hesitate to receive a man who was connected with a society that was bound to secrecy by a pledge of honor. All secret societies bind their members to perpetual secrecy either by an oath or a pledge of honor. Many among us cannot see how a Christian can (in order to obtain membership in a society) take or make a solemn pledge or vow that he will ever conceal and never reveal the secrets of that society, until he knows what they are. We take this view of the subject, while the oath is extra judicial and taking the name of God in vain, the vow or pledge is rash, and may place a man in a position where he must either violate his pledge, or commit a sin in keeping it. Such was the rash vow of Jephthah and also of Herod. We cannot see why a Christian should seek or desire membership in a society that transacts all its business with closed doors and blinded windows, and with all its members pledged to perpetual secrecy. It has the "appearance of evil." "He that doeth truth cometh to the light," etc.

Africa, Ohio, April 1, 1890.

Societies of all kinds are so many these days, that it is wearisome to attempt a classification of them. Many of them are secret, having all the worst features of the lodge, while others, though they are without the oath, bear a general likeness to Masonry, and are claimed as affiliating more or less with it in spirit and aim. Not the Church itself alone, but the members of it, find it difficult to make way among all the organized temptations that beset them; indeed they do not make way at all, but surrender to them, and permit, in a most unworthy way, the society to attract them more than the Church.—United Presbyterian.

THE GREAT NAVY.

The religious society of Friends for the States of Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware have addressed a memorial to Congress on the proposal to largely increase our navy. They say:

"The present lamentable condition of the most powerful military nations of Europe in consequence of the oppressive taxation, and the enforced service of the young men in camps and martial training, should be sufficient proof to wise statesmen of our own country of the futility of building up vast armaments to promote national prosperity. It has been a recognized axiom by American legislators from Washington's day to this, that a large standing army is inimical to the character of our free institutions, and of pernicious tendency. Why is not the same reasoning applicable to a great navy? We are not menaced by surrounding nations either by sea or land, and we rejoice to notice the amicable spirit in which the representatives of Central and South American States and our own Government, now assembled at Washington, are adopting mutual resolutions of good will; and in accord with the sentiments so well expressed by the Secretary of State in welcoming them to the United States, have proposed arbitration instead of a resort to arms, in all cases of dispute which may arise between the governments they represent and our own. Will not the building of war vessels of unusual size and number, and the erection of coast defences, at such a juncture, arouse a feeling of jealousy and suspicion against us on the part of these neighboring republics, and tend to nullify the salutary results hoped for by the labors of the Pan-American Congress?"

"If the machinery and implements of war are multiplied, they foster national pride, and stimulate ambitious political leaders to seek occasions of quarrel on slight pretexts, rather than to settle differences by peaceful negotiations. The danger of war is increased by the creation of a large body of military and naval officers imbued with the animus of war and brought into place and power by unusual appropriations for such objects, who would realize that their hope of promotion lies chiefly in active service. Thus some of the greatest calamities have fallen upon nations, merely to gratify their ambitious rulers. The existence of a large surplus in the United States treasury seems to us but a fallacious plea for the proposed outlay of millions in naval armament. This surplus belongs to the people, and it has been in part contributed through heavy taxation, whilst many of our citizens are thereby impoverished, and a great national debt remains to consume the resources of the people. Justice to them demands the most economical care in national as well as State expenditures, rather than squandering their hard earned means in useless vessels which entail still further expense for their future maintenance.

"The world has not been left without an illustration of the practicability of carrying on a government upon purely Christian principles. In the establishment of that of Pennsylvania, no provision was made for the maintenance of a military force; and although William Penn and his coadjutors had to deal with an untutored and savage race of men, yet during the period of seventy years in which this province was under the control of himself and those sharing his religious belief, in no instance was there a resort to arms to settle the claims of either party; whilst other English colonies who assumed that an armed force was necessary for self-protection were involved in frequent desolating wars with the native tribes.

"If the grand design and aim of Christianity as expressed in the Lord's prayer, that his kingdom may come, and his will be done on earth as it is in heaven, is ever realized, such a result can only be attained by simple faith in the practical value of the precepts of Christ, and a ready obedience to them in all the concerns of life. In proportion as men and governments are disposed to accept and act upon the exalted principles of the Gospel, nation will not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

A FRIEND OF JESUITS.—In your article headed "Let in the Light," on page 206 of your March 15th issue, you speak of an uprising against Jesuit intrigue in Boston and the British provinces. 1. Please explain in your next issue what you mean by the term "Jesuit intrigue." 2. What have the Jesuits or what has the Catholic church in general to do with the secret lodges? Do you not know that the Catholic church forbids its members to join secret societies of any kind under penalty of excommunication?—John Becker.

The Jesuits are an oath-bound organization dating from the fifteenth century. They have been noted for intrigue from the very first; so much so, indeed, that the word jesuit has come to mean in a secondary sense in our language, "a crafty person, an intriguer," and when we want to speak of a person as designing, cunning or deceitful, we use the term, jesuitical. We refer to Webster's dictionary. On account of their intrigues nearly every prominent nation has been compelled to either suppress or banish them. Even Italy has found it necessary to repress them. And as late as 1873, Germany passed very severe laws of repression, banishing all foreign members of the society from her territory. Their order is strictly monarchical and despotic. The general of the order holds his position for life. In all gradations of the society, subordination is complete, and the obligation of obedience is immediate and unreserved. They must obey and not question why. Secrecy is one of their leading features. It will be readily seen that the very foundation of the society is opposed to our free institutions and seem in particular to be haters of that bulwark of our liberties, our free-school system. Our friend Becker will therefore see we have some reason for using the phrase, "Jesuit intrigue." 2. The Jesuits are themselves, in a measure, a secret society. Among the thoroughly initiated numbers there exists, it is alleged, a secret code called Monita Secreta (secret instructions) which is meant to be reserved solely for the private guidance of more advanced members. There are several other similar organizations which have the sanction of the Catholic church. Each nunnery, and similar places are strictly secret. It is lodges and societies outside the church which they forbid their members to unite with.—Farm, Field and Stockman.

SECRECY AND SILENCE.

Aristotle, when asked the most difficult thing to execute, replied: "To be secret and silent."

It has so happened, sometimes, that the secrets of great discoveries have been so carefully guarded that for a season the most curious eye has been defeated in its efforts to pry into the shops and laboratories where the process of manufacture was executed. But seldom do manufacturers nowadays trust their secrets to the protection bolts and locks give them. They have found out that the best protection is a patent, which gives them a weapon with which to defend their interests which secrecy fails to do.

THE FARMERS' ALLIANCE AND THE SECRECY QUESTION.—"We do not know that the Christian Union can reach the ear or influence the action of the Farmers' Alliance. If we can, we should be glad to second most heartily what the bishop says respecting the organization. There is no reason why it should be in any sense ecclesiastical; no reason why it should encumber itself with either creed or ritual, and every reason why it should not. . . . We second also what the bishop has to say about the evils of making the Alliance a secret society. There is nothing in the work that they propose to do for which they have any occasion to be ashamed or afraid, and therefore there is no occasion for secrecy. If their plans were likely to be thwarted if they were known, or if they were likely to be hounded or persecuted by oppressors, there would be some excuse, if not justification, of secrecy. As it is, secrecy will only be a glamour to attract an undesirable class, while it will repel those whose presence and counsel would be most valuable to the work."—Editorial in the Christian Union, Feb. 27, 1890.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

"The noble red man."—"Purified by fire."—Encouraging signs that the lodge is nearing its downfall.—Rum, Romanism and various matters.—"Anniversary weather."

The simple-minded European who believes that "the noble red man" still stalks majestically through Broadway and kindles his council fires within sight of Bunker Hill, has been made the butt of the merciless newspaper wag, in company with the dude and the mother-in-law, long enough. He has certainly a right to think the worst of American civilization when the dailies of the Hub print such items as the following:

Watain Tribe, No. 85, captured two pale faces on their hunting grounds on the 9th sleep, and took their scalps; also received one application. On the 23d sleep the hunters degree will be worked on two candidates. The tribe is in fine condition, and hope to have many scalps to hang in the belts of its chiefs during the coming season.

It would not be strange if men who will thus voluntarily lower themselves in the scale of manhood by adopting the dress and lingo of savages, should develop some of the vices of savages without their corresponding virtues.

A farmer in Ipswich, Mass., while plowing, the other day, turned up what is supposed to be an Indian idol of solid stone, in the image of a serpent. The Indians known to Elliott's day, though full of superstition and heathenism, did not worship graven images; and if this relic, which has been deposited in the Essex Institute, Salem, be really an idol, it must have been the work of some anterior race to the one whose flint arrows are still frequently turned up by the plowshare in many localities of New England. I have heard my father say that in his family, when a child, one of these "finds"—a large stone pestle which had, perhaps, been used by some dusky squaw to grind maize long before the Mayflower sailed into Boston harbor—did duty in pounding the coffee and spices which, in those days, were always bought whole and crushed in mortars. There were aged people then living who remembered Queen Anne's war, and could tell blood-curdling stories of captivity among the Canadian savages. "The noble red man" was much too grim and real a factor in the lives of our forefathers, for them ever to think of dressing up in paint and feathers and burlesquing his language and manners in a secret lodge.

The Baptist church in W. Boylston, where Rev. L. W. Frink preaches, was destroyed by fire some weeks ago, the parsonage, itself, narrowly escaping. It is to be hoped that when a new church is built, it will be for the pure worship of God, unmixed with that of Baal, and never need, like "the former house," to be "purified by fire." Bro. Frink's attack on the Grange in the W. Boylston Enterprise was followed by a torrent of abuse; but the exceedingly calm and clear article, written by Rev. Jacob Davis, telling what he knew about the Grange, and a few points on lodge religion, given by myself and obligingly published by the editor, who seems to be a very fair-minded man, "made a great silence." West Boylston Grangers appear to be of the opinion of the darkey, who, when convicted of stealing his neighbor's spring chickens, replied to the judge who asked him if he wanted to say anything before receiving his sentence, "Deed, jedge, I'se had er 'nuff trubble 'bout dis chicken question, and I'm willin' ter let er matter drop."

Although the parsonage was saved, Mr. Frink sustained considerable financial loss, in the damage done his furniture, but he meets these trials, lodge boycott and all, in the true spirit of Christian heroism. "Elijah's God still reigns," he writes; "the meal shall not fail till the victory come." Let us pray that, even in temporal things, he may yet reap the reward of his faithfulness. The Spy says of Rev. J. F. Lovering, who has just given up his Worcester pastorate, very much to the surprise of everybody, that "Mr. Lovering's prominence in Freemasonry and his open defense of the institution, a few days ago, have been the occasion of some criticism among certain members of his congregation, and this may have something to do with this matter." It is very encouraging to see the resignation of a Masonic minister attributed to such a cause. It shows, at least, that the lodge is losing caste in the church, and this is the first great step to its final overthrow. When Christian sentiment refused to tolerate rum-sellers in the churches, it placed a ban upon the trade that has been sinking deeper and deeper, like the mark on Cain, till now the rum traffic finds itself outside the pale of even worldly respectability. And it is going to be so with the lodge.

Another sign that secret societies are on the down grade, is the fact that Dr. Quint feels called upon to bolster them up in a lengthy editorial in the Congregationalist. It is about the weakest apology for the lodge that I have yet seen. And, like every other lodgeman, Dr. Quint finds it impossible to proceed far in his argument without slurring the church, of which he is supposed to be one of the watchmen and defenders.

The Congregational Club of Boston, in February last, took steps to promote setting up at Delfthaven a monument to that Dutch hospitality and toleration which gave a home to Pilgrims when driven out of England. The site is to be at the junction of the Leyden Canal with the River Maas; and as the Government of the Netherlands is said to be warmly interested in the matter, it is probable that the funds will be raised. It is a consolation to think that the shame of calling in representatives of Rome, Masonry and Rebellion, to dedicate the monument, as was done at the Plymouth celebration, will not be likely to be repeated on the soil of Holland.

Speaking of Rome, the fact that, under threats of a boycott from the editor of the great Catholic organ, the Pilot, President Robbins of the Waltham Watch Company had notices posted up all over the factory to the effect that employes, who discussed religion or politics during working hours, would be immediately discharged—which placards were, at latest accounts, still up—shows how much of the true American spirit is left in men who worship the almighty dollar. Such attempts to suppress free speech are dangerous—doubtly dangerous if they succeed.

The Prohibition Executive Committee held a meeting at Worcester the other day, and decided to place a full State ticket in the field this fall, and endorse only such candidates as are pronounced Prohibitionists. The new law abolishing open bars is still much discussed, but it is generally "allowed," to use the phrase of our good Southern brethren, that the effect is to greatly discourage the drinking habit among clerks, salesmen and the more respectable class of young men who have, hitherto, found it very convenient "to step around the corner," get a glass and go back without attracting observation. Now they have to sit at a table, in plain view of anyone passing, and wait two or three minutes before being served, elbowed on either side, perhaps, by the lowest habitues of the saloon. Naturally they shrink from such an ordeal, and prefer to go without their usual indulgence rather than face it.

Anniversary week so far has not belied its reputation. It has been cool and showery, with little sunshine, but the papers present a very interesting program of meetings; and "anniversary weather" has so long been a standing proverb in New England that everybody who attends them calculates on a certain amount of rain as a matter of course, and governs himself accordingly.

THE CONFERENCE FOR CHRISTIAN UNION.

HELD AT DAYTON, OHIO, MAY 21-23.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—The Conference of all Christians called to consider the subject of the visible unity of all true believers in Christ, met in the lecture room of the Y. M. C. A. in Dayton, Ohio, May 21, at 10 A. M. John G. Fee of Berea, Ky., was chosen temporary chairman and J. F. Browne, secretary.

After a season of devotional exercises an address of welcome was given by W. F. McCauley, pastor of the Park Presbyterian church. It was a most cordial invitation to consider a most important question and to seek the consummation of a most eminently desirable object. All such efforts had the warmest sympathy of the speaker, and he thought the times propitious for their consideration. The address was briefly responded to by the chairman, setting forth the purposes of the Conference and disclaiming any desire to form a new sect or to reform the old ones, but rather to bring together the disciples of Christ in every place in practical, visible unity.

Committees were then appointed, and John G.

Fee read a most valuable paper showing wherein this movement differs from the denominations. The address was most closely listened to, and was followed by a brief discussion.

At the afternoon session, C. E. Hulbert, pastor of Unity church, Detroit, Mich., was chosen president; Hezekiah Davis of New Britain, Conn., vice-president; J. F. Browne of Berea, Ky., secretary; Miss I. D. Haines of Dexter, Maine, assistant secretary; treasurer, H. H. Hinman. A vote of thanks was then given to the publishers of the Herald of Gospel Liberty, Dayton, O., the Christian Evangelist, Oakland, Cal., and the Times of Rejoicing, New Britain, Conn. After a season of devotion a discussion ensued as to the position of the Christian denominations on the subject of unity in Christ, in which quite a number participated.

C. C. Foote of Detroit then read an able paper on "The Sin of Schism." A communication of greeting and sympathy was then sent to the convention of the "Disciples of Christ" in session in another part of the city. This was subsequently responded to in a resolution of equal cordiality.

In the evening Hezekiah Davis of New Britain, Conn., gave a most able address on "The baptism of the Holy Spirit a pre-requisite to the unification of the church of Christ."

On the morning of the 22d after a season of devotion H. A. Hulbert read a paper prepared by A. K. Sweet of Detroit on "The Local Church," which was followed by discussion and criticisms. This was followed by an able paper by J. A. Young of Marshall, Mich., on "The Trend of the Union Movement." A letter and paper from Rufus Smith was also read, from which I make a brief extract:

"The oneness of the church" is thus proved:

1. There is "one Lord." He can have but one people.
2. "One Father." A true father has but one family.
3. He is the "Head." One head can have but one body.
4. He is the "Vine." One vine can have but one set of branches.
5. He is the "Foundation." One foundation can sustain but one building.
6. He is the "Good Shepherd." The good shepherd has but one flock.
7. He is the "Bridegroom;" and, of course, has but one bride.

At the afternoon session of the 22d an admirable paper by O. D. Colton of Morgan Park, Ill.,

REFORM NEWS.

THE COLLEGES OF CENTRAL ILLINOIS.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—After leaving Bloomington I visited Lincoln University at Lincoln, Logan county. This institution belongs to the Cumberland Presbyterians. Pres. A. E. Turner appeared favorable to the N. C. A., and I made arrangements to furnish the college some anti-secrecy books.

The next day I made my way by Peoria to Galesburg, which I found greatly enlarged since I was here in behalf of the freedmen in '65. I called on Hon. N. Bateman, president of Knox College, and found him very friendly but overwhelmed with work. He said that he had forty or fifty letters to write that afternoon. He said he would be responsible for the reform books I proposed to send; and so I passed on.

There is another college in Galesburg called Lombard University, Rev. N. White, president, whom I failed to see. But I found Prof. Standish, the librarian, and made arrangements to donate some reform books to their library.

While at Galesburg I took the train for Abingdon and spent a few hours at Hedding College, Rev. J. G. Evans of the M. E. church, president. I examined the library and consulted the faculty and finally concluded to send them our anti-secrecy books, as Rev. J. R. Jaynes, D.D., promised to see them sent back if any difficulty arose about them.

At Monmouth I found the College and the two large United Presbyterian churches, earnest laborers in the reform work. Pres. McMichael told me that the College had received our anti-secrecy books from a committee of the town's people some seven years ago. The pastors, Dr. Hanna and Dr. Campbell, are mighty men in opposing the secret empire; and I do not know of any place in Illinois that stands more firmly against the secret empire than the city of Monmouth.

S. F. PORTER.

THE CRAFT WONDERFULLY STIRRED.

WENONA, ILL.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—This expresses in one short sentence the result of three lectures delivered by Rev. C. F. Hawley in and near Wenona, Ill., within the last few days. Bro. Hawley directed his attention more particularly to Freemasonry. We think his idea correct: that it is useless to be stamping the tail of the great serpent when the head is visible. Had Gabriel sounded the trumpet calling these sons of Hiram to judgment, greater consternation could hardly have been depicted upon the countenances of some of them. How can the protestations that "lectures against Freemasonry makes more Masons," be reconciled with the manifestations of concern and wrath shown by them when lectures are announced?

The region around Wenona may be called a regular hot-bed of secret societies. It is like "bearding the lion in his den" to discuss the subject in this section; but it has been pretty thoroughly illustrated in this community that this great "lion" has more roar than bite after all. Indeed, some are beginning to think him merely "an ass in a lion's skin." "We can't talk." "We don't talk." "It is un-Masonic to talk." These are a few of the standard expressions among Masons around Wenona for the last few days. Poor dupes! What power has taken away their "inalienable rights?"

We began the campaign at the Cumberland church about seven miles northwest of Wenona on Monday evening, May 12. Mr. Hawley had preached a sermon the Sabbath preceding, which was well received. His lecture on the following evening would more properly be called a sermon, showing the difference between the religion of Christ and the false religion as taught in standard Masonic authorities. A Royal Arch Mason present, who evidently felt wonderfully ground up by the convincing logic of the speaker, undertook to refute Mr. Hawley by presenting the "good man" argument. His way of presenting that old stereotyped argument is certainly peculiar. It is not likely, however, that the average Mason, on account of a sort of innate modesty common to most men; will be likely to adopt his method. Said he, "I am a Royal Arch Mason. I am a Christian man. I have lived a great while among you. You know me. Now I say to you as a man of honor and a Christian man, that what the speaker has said is not true."

Evidently fearful that some might not be willing to accept this broad assertion, he proceeded to say further: "One of two things is certain: either the speaker has not told the truth or I am not telling the truth."

A great part of our community are yet wrestling with the above astounding proposition; and when we remember that Mr. Hawley drew all his conclusions from quotations made from the Bible and standard Masonic authorities, it is likely the truth of a lady's remark in the audience, that "you cannot believe Masons when talking about Masonry," will be verified in the minds of some. To what heights of folly men will rise when trying to live up to that terrible oath to "never reveal and ever conceal" Masonry.

Strenuous efforts were made to prevent the people hearing the lecture on the following Saturday evening at a school-house a few miles out of Wenona near the M. E. church. Lest "bad blood" might be stirred up (as one of the trustees pithily put the case) the church building was refused. The three directors had given their consent to the use of the school-house, one of whom was the champion Mason referred to above. The result of the lecture at the Cumberland church seemed to lead him to change his mind. Perhaps the prospects of a Masonic "revival" after the lectures did not seem so flattering as at first. He tried, but in vain, to persuade the other directors to close the house against the lecture. A complication of circumstances make it difficult to decide why some of the audience were so disorderly at this lecture. But Bro. Hawley bravely coped with them and came off victorious. He only reminded them that "they were giving a more efficient lecture against the lodge system by the spirit they were manifesting than he was." Two of the directors now say the house can be had again for another lecture. All right. It would be the most practicable way to redeem our credit as a law-abiding community, and Mr. Hawley is the man to speak again.

The audience at Wenona on Monday evening, May 19, was made up in great part of lodge members, many of whom came boldly to the front.

Here at Wenona another lodge champion stepped forth. He did not reveal his identity only enough to tell the audience that he "was not a Mason." Said he: "This young man has been speaking from hearsay. I am going to tell you some things I know myself. I know George Washington was a Mason [by hearsay of course.] A great part of our great men are Masons. I had a brother in the Mexican war. Together with others on one occasion he got treed; and, fellow citizens, if he had not been a Mason the enemy would have shot him and his companions out of those trees like squirrels." (Applause by young Masons. Old Masons hold their peace, perhaps not "seeing the point.")

Mr. Hawley put in a rejoinder, illustrating the advantage of being a Mason by citing a case where a condemned spy, who was a Mason, had been set free, and an innocent non-Mason being shot as a substitute. Rallying again to the charge, the Masonic champion went into a laborious effort to quote a text of Scripture somewhat in the following style: "P-u-r-e—a-n—d-e-f-i-l-e-d (some what confused) andy—eh—un-de-filed re-li-jin is to v-i-s-t the w-i-d-e-r an the f-a-t-h-e-r in their f-l-i-c-shun" (quotation cut square off at this point.) "Now," said he, "I call that good religion. That's the kind of religion Masonry is. I seen it illustrated when I went to Calaforny. A poor emigrant got sick. His wagon was broken. He couldn't git no further. The Anti-masons passed him by. He gave the sign. Some Masons seed it and went to his relief. No, fellow citizens; Masonry is a good thing, and let us give the devil his due."

Here the champion sat down amid the applause of the younger portion of the Hiramites. The wiser heads at the front held their peace. They did not cheer. An arduous task was before them for the morrow. All responsibility for that speech must be denied, and so it was: S. J. WHITE.

DISCUSSION AT WENONA, ILL.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—Before leaving Marshall county I lectured in Wenona. The interest awakened on the Big Sandy had spread so that on the next Monday night, after the Saturday night meeting on the Big Sandy, the Armory Hall in Wenona was well filled. The pastors of the Methodist and Presbyterian churches and many of their people were present.

Mr. Jerome Howe, son of Peter Howe, introduced me to the audience, and I spoke on the relation of Freemasonry and kindred orders to the Christian religion.

It had been announced through the papers and on the handbills that after the lecture short speeches for or against the lodge would be in order. Mr. Myers of Varna, a Universalist preacher, responded to the call and came forward as the champion of the lodge. I had opened out the religious pretensions of Freemasonry and shown how utterly Christ is excluded from the Masonic plan of salvation. In the light of the facts that I had presented every friend of Christ would be horrified at the thought of being identified with such a system of false worship.

Whether Mr. Myers had prepared his reply before hearing my lecture I cannot say, but at all events he was innocent of any attempt to controvert a single fact or argument that I had presented. It is embarrassing to a man to be understood to have two religions when there is but one religion of God; but one true saving religion, the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ. False religions are not only worthless counterfeits of the true religion; but they are Satanic conspiracies against Christ. It seemed strange that Mr. Myers did not come to the relief of church members, who are also members of the Masonic lodge.

But no; the case was too clearly proven by quotations from the works of eminent Masons who have given us the philosophy of the system; and so Mr. Myers did not challenge the fact that in the religious philosophy of Freemasonry, men are taught to climb up to heaven in some other way than through our Lord Jesus Christ. He left me who profess to believe that there is but one name given under heaven or among men whereby we can be saved, to answer for themselves, and tell why they are identified with an order that teaches another way of salvation.

Mr. Myers was prepared to show that Masons are strongly bound together, and when the grand hailing sign of distress is given, will respond and fly to the relief of the brother who gives it. He gave facts that had come under his observation showing that when the grand hailing sign of distress is given, Masons will help each other. As he had not assailed my position I did not feel like attacking his, but freely admitted that whatever might be true of some Masons, those who regarded their obligations would respond to the grand hailing sign of distress at the risk of their lives.

To further illustrate that principle in Masonry I gave a case showing that the bond was so strong that Masons guilty of crime could call the brotherhood to their aid; so that while the unfortunate might be aided, the guilty criminal would, if possible, be cleared. Indeed, a Mason told me but yesterday that he had never known but one Masonic murderer hung, and that occurred from his neglect to give the sign of distress until he was on the way to the place of execution, when it was too late to save him.

This Mason also told me that Morgan was Masonically murdered. He further said that after the Morgan murder, and the collapse of Masonry, his lodge was taken under the wing of Odd-fellowship, and secretly met in the Odd-fellows' hall.

The next Sabbath after the Wenona meeting I preached two sermons, one of them on the religion of Freemasonry, in the United Brethren church, six miles north of Arrowsmith, in McLean county.

While in Bloomington I visited a lady who expressed a purpose to will a considerable portion of her estate to the N. C. A. May the Lord raise up men and women to help financially as well as to work directly for the overthrow of this pagan-deistical worship. C. F. HAWLEY.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SET THEM RIGHT.

The Boston press have rarely given fair attention to our reform meetings held in that city. It would be much to expect, therefore, that they should mention with fairness our grand Chicago Conference. Miss Flagg, in the following letter to the Boston Traveller, gives its editor some useful information:

"Allow me to correct an egregious mistake on the part of your reporter who describes the 'Christian Conference,' lately held in Chicago, as 'a little gathering of village clergy,' and characterized by 'a notable lack of men and women who are prominent in church or social life.' I shall not take upon me to say whether this is ignorance or wilful misrepresentation, but shall content myself with simply stating the true facts in the case.

"Among the signers to the call for the Chicago Conference of Christians on the secret lodge system were the names of between 20 and 30 college presidents, and the names of about 90 professors in various colleges and theological seminaries. One of the chief speakers was Joseph Cook, whose fame is world-wide. Among others was Colonel George R. Clarke of the Pacific Garden Mission, and the pastors of the First Baptist Church, Eighth Presbyterian Church and First Congregational Church, of Chicago. Does this look like a mere 'gathering of village clergy?'

"Your reporter goes on to draw a parallel between lodge and church charity, which is no less absurd than it is false. Both Masonry and Odd-fellowship exclude from membership all but able-bodied white males over 21 years of age, and with visible means of support. Women, the crippled, the aged, and all who especially need help, they coolly leave out, and accept only those whose prospects are good for never needing it. Furthermore, the members must pay their dues promptly or forfeit all right and claim to the 'charity' of their lodge brethren. Fancy the church limiting her benevolence by any such rule! It is a fact that in the Johnstown disaster, when even saloon men opened their purses and contributed without a thought of stipulating to whom it should go, the secret societies contributed only for the relief of their own members among the sufferers. Even saloon charity was, in this case at least, ahead of lodge charity. When Masonry is able to call together, in her interest, an equal number of 'men and women prominent in church or social life,' as those who signed the call to the Chicago Conference, it will be time for her to ridicule Anti-masonic gatherings. Meanwhile, as the business of the press is to give the public true reports of what is going on, and being a constant reader of the Traveller, I cannot allow such an utterly false statement to pass uncontradicted.

AN INCIDENT IN THE BAPTIST ANNIVERSARIES.

CHICAGO, May 24.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—We were thrilled with Dr. Northrup's address on Friday morning, but somebody's heart should have been made sad at the closing words: "Oh, that thou hadst known in this thy day the things that make for thy peace, but now they are hid from thee." The fact is, Satan has punched a hole in the missionary ship.

We were interested in the rehearsal of a Buddhist sermon by Mrs. Ingalls, who has been a missionary in Burmah for thirty-eight years. It was a silly fable, a gross absurdity, for an intelligent being to trust in for the eternal world. But there was nothing in it to compare with the following:

"This pure wine I now take in testimony of my belief in the immortality of the soul; and as the sins of the whole world were once visited upon the head of our Saviour, so may all the sins of the person whose skull this once was, in addition to my own, be heaped upon my head, and may this libation appear in judgment against me, both here and hereafter, should I ever knowingly or willfully violate this my most solemn vow of a Knight Templar; so help me God and keep me steadfast."

And he drinks the wine out of a human skull. This is called the sealing obligation, because it seals all other Masonic obligations. God who reads our hearts like an open book sees all that our Christian leaders do in their secret lodges, every oath and bloody murder penalty, every false prayer, every act of sun-worship and every lying myth and fable by which the Bible and his character is defamed.

When we shall have put away from our hearts and the churches the evil of our doings, we shall see the glory of God. But while men are assailed by the churches in their personal character and cast out of churches for true and faithful testimony against secret lodge abominations, what may we expect but the frowns of the Almighty.

AN INTERESTING EXPERIENCE.

WARE, Mass.

Whether conversion is necessary in order to be healed by the prayer of faith, or whether it is wholly for the converted, or those who have not arrived to the years of accountability, has been asked many times, even by the professors of the religion of Jesus Christ. If God turned a deaf ear to the petitions of the wicked, it would be in vain for them to plead for a forgiveness of sins, and I see no just reason why he should not answer a prayer for the healing of the body as well as the salvation of the soul.

If I rightly understand the Scriptures, none are rejected that go to God believing that Jesus is able to save "even to the uttermost" all that call upon his name. I might go on at length quoting Scripture to substantiate this fact, but I think it needless, for every Bible student knows that none are rejected that go to God and ask, believing God is able and willing to save all that call upon his blessed name.

Perhaps an incident in my early Christian experience might be of benefit upon this point. After the healing of "little Mary," which I related in a former article, the news of her restoration spread rapidly, and, as is usual in such cases, many comments and theories were advanced in regard to this "strange doctrine," "the prayer of faith."

Several miles from my home lived a prominent citizen (said to be an infidel and a Freemason) who had two sons aged respectively 11 and 17 years. The younger was attacked with diphtheria and died in a few days; then the other child was prostrated, and after a brief illness, a council of doctors was called and the decision was that he, too, must die. This seemed more than the father could endure. He called the hired man and said to him, "You go and get her that prayed for 'little Mary's' restoration, and tell her I want she should come at once and pray for my boy."

"The call almost startled me at first, knowing, as I did, that both father and son were unconverted. But I felt as though it was duty, and if the Lord called me to go in such places he would go with me. I took with me a dear sister in the Lord who had recently been healed by the 'prayer of faith.'"

As I neared the home of the sick one I saw quite a company of friends and neighbors and in the group the family physician. When I entered the room where the boy lay his father was bending over him and weeping bitterly. The physician came in, felt of his pulse, and gave him a scrutinizing look, and quickly passed out of the room, remarking to the nurse, "He will live only a short time."

The father said to me, "He can't talk to you, but I think he realizes everything just as well as he ever did." I stepped to the bedside and told the young man I wanted to ask him two or three questions before offering prayer, and, as he could not speak, he might answer when in the affirmative by closing his eyes. I asked him if he believed it was beyond the power of man to restore him; if he believed God had the power to rebuke the disease and restore to him his health; and if he was willing to lay all medicine aside and trust all to Jesus. He answered in the affirmative. We then knelt in prayer. Before I arose I had the evidence that he would be restored.

After prayer was offered the physician came again, felt of his pulse and head, and hastily left the room without uttering a word. As he passed through an adjoining room, a lady inquired, "How is he now?" Being a very rough, profane man he replied, "His fever is all gone to the d—l, and if that boy lives, give the glory to God Almighty and not to me, for it belongs to a higher power than man."

From that hour he began to amend, and in a short time called for food, and in a few days was able to attend to the duties of life, and only a few months ago I heard that he was still living.

This was, if my memory serves me, about 28 years ago, and proved to me that God turned none away who believed that he was able to heal, and were willing to trust his mighty power to save even these bodies of ours.

Last year a reader of the Cynosure saw my appeals for missionaries, wrote and became a candidate. I opened the way for admission into a good institution for training, and now the superintendent writes me that this candidate is a very promising case. HELP TO KEEP BROTHERS AND HUSBANDS OUT.

All the Christians in our churches, and all mothers, should know the things published in your paper, and be enabled to keep their sons out, if not their husbands, from the secret societies.—J. P. DYAS, Henry, S. Dak.

LITERATURE.

BLACK BEAUTY, his Grooms and Companions. By Anna Sewall. The "Uncle Tom's Cabin" of the Horse. Pp. 245. Price 20 cents. Am. Humane Education Society, 19 Milk St., Boston.

Two years ago when Mr. Bartholomew was exhibiting his band of trained horses in this city, the Cynosure recommended the Humane Society to engage an evening's performance and give the drivers of the city an invitation to visit it free. As a practical exhibition of the success of kind, firm treatment, and of the almost human appreciation of the noblest of domestic animals, it was an object lesson never to be forgotten. Few men could recklessly beat a horse after seeing Bartholomew's animals go through their performance. With like feelings one lays down this remarkable book after reading a chapter or two in any part. It is Charles Reade's "Put Yourself in his Place" applied to the poor beast that perhaps more than all others suffers and toils for man. Given in the form of an autobiography it has all the fascination of Mrs. Stowe's famous story, and appeals largely to the same feelings of humanity and justice which the reading of "Uncle Tom" has always enlisted. We doubt if ever a book of equal value was ever written about the horse. It is replete with good sense and right feeling about this dumb friend of man, and besides is written in good taste and will delight refined persons while the simplest can understand it. Mrs. William Appleton of Boston gave 1,600 copies to the drivers of that city. A hundred thousand copies have been sold in Great Britain, and Mr. Angell of the American Humane Society has printed a first edition of 40,000 copies in this country, which may be had for 12 cents each at the Boston office, or by mail for 8 cents additional for postage. Let every American boy read this healthful book.

Scribner's Magazine for June is a Stanley number, containing the only article which he will contribute to any periodical. This article fills thirty-two pages of the issue, and is a most graphic and exciting narrative from first to last. It opens with a solemn acknowledgment of Stanley's belief in God's help to him when he was helpless in the forest solitudes of Africa. "I feel utterly unable," he says, "to attribute our salvation to any other cause than to a gracious Providence, who, for some purpose of His own, preserved us." Stanley reviews the work of his officers, and plainly but charitably criticises the conduct of the Rear Guard. He explains fully Emin Pasha's attitude, and speaks vigorously on the whole question of slavery in Africa and its extirpation. The larger part of the article is a detailed account of the wonderful journey through the forest in search of food, and the relief of Nelson's starvation camp. The illustrations are unique—presenting the first results of modern photographic methods as applied in places never before seen by a white man, as well as drawings from sketches made by Mr. Stanley himself. One of the most striking pictures shows a group of the Wambutti Pigmies—a new race discovered by Stanley. "The City House" (the East and South), by Russell Sturgis, is the second article in the series on homes. It is very fully illustrated with pictures of typical houses in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and the South. President Seth Low, of Columbia College, writes of "The Rights of the Citizen as a User of Public Conveyances."

The Anti-Infidel Library. This is a serial issue of live, vigorous pamphlets, issued by H. L. Hastings, 47 Cornhill, Boston, Mass., dealing with modern infidelity in a most readable and trenchant style. The numbers contain from thirty-two to 160 pages, bound in strong manilla covers, as durable as cloth, costing 5, 10, 15, 20, and 25 cents each. The whole library is sent to any address for $2.50, and will furnish sufficient equipment with which to not only meet the ordinary assaults of skeptics, but also to carry the war into Africa, and give infidels something to think of which they never thought about before. These publications have the heartiest commendations of leading ministers and laymen of all denominations throughout the English-speaking world.

An old adage runs thus: "God made the country and man made the town;" and the American Garden evidently believes it. The aim of the Garden is to forward the "common good of country life and work," and to "advance the cause of right and true methods in the fields and gardens of America." This magazine contains sixty-three pages of useful matter. Twenty cents a number. Rural Publishing Co., New York.

The American Agriculturist for June has its usual fifty pages filled with fresh farm and home literature. Each department of the magazine is well sustained. The table of contents fills a whole column. The club rates are specially advantageous. In the household department is an article by Dr. Mark Trafton, and Frank G. Carpenter has an article on farming in Palestine.

The largest and best number ever issued of the Ladies' Home Journal is that for June, in which sixty articles and over fifty authors discuss every conceivable point of interest to women. "Are Women Careless of Money?" is a striking article by Junius Henri Browne, in which the author takes up the question whether women ruin men by their extravagance.

A supplement to the Evangelical Messenger, No. 17, has been issued, containing the proceedings of the trial conference in the matter of charges against Bishop Rudolph Dubs. The full case is set forth, together with an appendix containing developments of some points treated in the investigation and press comments.

"What's the News?" is the title of an article by Eugene M. Camp which will appear in the June Century, and which will, by the consent of those interested, give figures as to the cost of special dispatches in certain of the daily papers; paper bills, etc.

Edwin Arnold, still in Japan, is said to be writing a new epic, "The Light of the World," with Christ his theme.

LODGE NOTES.

The Royal Society of Good Fellows still has a "fuss in the camp" at Boston. It is asserted that the financial management is bad, and the gain for the secretary and the medical examiner too great; insinuations are made that the secretary is not honest; claims are put in that the laws are unjust. In fact, the committee on grievances finds the utmost dissatisfaction with the way things are done. One speaker said he was ashamed to belong to an order which cheated poor widows out of their small benefits. It is claimed that the order has lost 2,000 members.

The Masonic fraternity at Washington, says the Masonic Chronicle, particularly the branch known as the Scottish Rite, witnessed a ceremony recently that had never before been exemplified in that city and but three times before in America. It was the burial service of the Knights of Kadosh, or Thirtieth degree Masons, and occurred at "low twelve," or midnight. The Scottish Rite Cathedral was draped in black, and the Cathedral itself was in darkness except a few lights that were arranged around the remains as they lay in state in the center of the auditorium. At exactly midnight a solemn procession of twenty-one knights in black robes filed into the Cathedral, each bearing a lighted taper, and formed around the casket. After the opening words of an impressive service, a concealed choir chanted "De Profundis," accompanied by the Cathedral organ. The remains were those of Edward Fitzki, who attained the thirty-third degree, and was among the prominent Masons in what is known as the Southern jurisdiction of the Scottish Rite. The floor was covered with black cloth, and heavily padded to prevent the sound of footsteps. At one stage in the ceremony the lid of the casket was removed and showed the body of the dead knight with his feet bound with a cord, a laurel chaplet about his head, and a bundle of violets and a heavily-jeweled gold cross lying on his breast. These symbols were all removed, one by one, during the services, and at one time all the lights were extinguished except the taper carried by the presiding officer, leaving the lofty Cathedral in almost total darkness. The solemn service was conducted by a selected corps of prominent Masons.

One of the most notable meetings of railway employees ever held in Indianapolis convened at Tomlinson Hall, May 25, to discuss the question of federating the various orders of the railway service. Fully 500 delegates were present from Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, Kentucky and Michigan, representing the following orders: Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen, Brotherhood of Conductors, Switchmen's Mutual Aid Association, and Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen. The meeting was called to order by William Hugo, of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. At the night session a vote was taken resulting in the unanimous adoption of the scheme, and final adjournment was taken. The action is not final, as it must be submitted to the Brotherhood of Engineers at their meeting in the fall, and be ratified by that body before it can go into effect.

On the same day a union meeting of the Brotherhood of Engineers was held in New Haven, Conn. Grand Chief P. M. Arthur delivered an address in which he said, among other things: "I am opposed to our brotherhood forming an alliance with any other class of labor. Character makes the man, and without that no organization can succeed. I attribute our success to the fact that we have kept aloof from all other organizations. Our policy has been plain, solid English: 'Mind your own business.' When the brotherhood federates with any other organization it will forfeit the respect, not only of the public at large, but of the employers."

The pastor of St. John's German Catholic church of Joliet, Ill., lately violently assailed from the pulpit the members of the Joliet Saengerbund for accepting an invitation to sing at the public banquet of the Odd-fellows. He read out their names, among whom are some of the most prominent Germans of the city, and threatened them with excommunication. The members of the Saengerbund were greatly excited.

The Catholics of the same town are greatly worked up over the existence of an order known as the Patriotic Sons of America, and have placed a boycott, agreed upon at a secret meeting, upon every member doing business in Joliet.

The railroadmen's organization of Indianapolis is declaring opposition to the Blair bill, pending in the United States Senate, providing a method for arbitrating differences between railroad corporations and their employees. The local branch of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers has adopted resolutions in opposition to the bill. Similar resolutions have been passed by the Switchmen's Mutual Aid Association, the Brotherhood of Railway Conductors, and the Brotherhood of Trainmen. The resolutions hold in substance that the bill smacks of governmental interference and paternalism, of which the employees say they do not stand in need. The principal objection to the bill is that the arbitration committee provided for would be composed in majority of persons not interested in the employees' welfare.

Fully 1,500 people attended the promenade concert and ball given at Battery D, Chicago, by the staff of the Uniform Rank, Royal Arcanum, to the Grand Council of Illinois. Otis S. Favor, the "Major General commanding," and his staff of about twenty officers, were all dressed in the gorgeous uniforms. The dance program contained ten numbers.

Salt rheum, with its intense itching and burning, is cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. Many who were formerly severe sufferers have reason to thank "the peculiar medicine" for cures effected.

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED.

TO THE EDITOR:—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption, if they will send me their Express and P. O. address. Respectfully, T. A. SLOCUM, M. C., 161 Pearl St., New York.

CONCERNING PREMIUMS.

We offer premiums to compensate such of our subscribers as take the pains and trouble to secure new subscribers to the Cynosure. Many who do this refuse to receive pay, and work because they love the work; others are glad to receive premiums. But,

First, We do not offer any man a premium to renew his own subscription. If a man has taken this paper a year and does not care enough about it to take it longer without being hired to, we do not offer him a premium.

Second, We do not offer a premium to a new subscriber to hire him to take the paper. When he has subscribed for the paper and paid for it himself, and knows its worth, then if he will take the trouble to introduce the paper to others, he can have a premium on the new subscription, but not on his own.

Third, We do not offer a premium where one member of a family stops the paper, and another member of the same family subscribes for it. We do not consider such a name the name of a new subscriber.

Any book we publish or sell can be had as a premium at reasonable rates. We will allow thirty cents' worth of any of our publications, at retail rates, post-paid, for one dollar's worth of new subscriptions to the Cynosure.

The General Fund is that from which the running expenses of the Association are paid. From it the agents on the field are supported.

The Foreign Fund is that from which the foreign demand for literature against the lodge is supplied to missionaries.

The Free Tract Fund clearly states by its name the object for which contributions are solicited. Millions of pages have been distributed by means of this fund.

The Cynosure Ministers' Fund. The donations to this fund have enabled the Association to send many copies of the Cynosure to the ministers of the South, especially to pastors of colored churches. The result has been a blessing to them and their churches.

Contributions to any or all these funds are urgently solicited.

FORM OF BEQUEST.—I give and bequeath to the National Christian Association, incorporated and existing under the laws of the State of Illinois, the sum of — dollars for the purposes of said Association, and for which the receipt of its Treasurer for the time being shall be sufficient discharge.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., May 23, 1890.

TO OUR READERS:—I am here on the Pacific Coast. I am with a younger member of a family who came here when Spanish was almost the only language spoken on this coast; and almost all the towns bore the prefix "San" for Saint. The towns were "missions;" the people papists; and the government priestism. Excepting the Aztecs and Indians the populations were Spanish. When Columbus discovered America, Henry VIII. was one, Francis I. of France was two, and Charles V. of Germany and Spain eight years old. These were afterward the leading monarchs of their age; and all three were a unit against the Bible translated and set free by Luther. Christ has conquered by the sword which proceeded out of his mouth.

If God spares life and gives strength, I hope to give our readers some sketches of the conflict on the Pacific Coast which has turned adobe huts into houses; and which must continue till Christ's unchangeable priesthood is universally acknowledged, and all other priests are seen to be usurpers and counterfeiters. "For this man, because he continueth ever, hath an unchangeable priesthood." Heb. 7: 24. "Wherefore he is able to save to the uttermost all that come unto God by him; seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them."

The soft Spanish tongue here has "Died into an echo;"

and the sooty, sullen-faced descendant of old Castilian lords is now on yonder corner selling strawberries to the children of those Puritans who planted on these wild shores "a church without a bishop, and a state without a king." But the struggle between truth and falsehood is not over. The progeny of priests are infidels. And though Cromwell's Ironsides defeated and drove out the representatives of false faith of which Henry VIII. was "defender," which faith Luther proved was the scarlet woman of the Apocalypse; that same harlot "mother of abominations" moved men (not churchmen) to make an image of secret priest-power, which, without its pretensions, exerts its terrible power. Rev. 13: 14. Charles II. and James II., the last of the Stuarts, joined both the Beast and his Image—the secret lodge. I am assured by his Congregational brethren that Dr. Barrows, pastor of the First Church of this city, has sworn fealty by blood drunk from the human skull in a Knight Templar's oath: and as Knight Templars are or originally were military monks of popery, if his brethren are not misinformed, this brother, like the two Stuart monarchs, is a professed Protestant and a sworn papist. If his example is sustained, unless a divorce can be effected between his conflicting religions, what has happened to the Spanish churches along this coast will come to the Congregational churches here, leaving but their memories and their names.

—Under the catching words "Union flags torn down," some of the Chicago papers published an account of an exciting affair in Ogden, Mich. The "Liberals" of the United Brethren church in that town voted the use of their church edifice to the G. A. R. for memorial services, and after they had adjourned the "Radicals" entered the church house and tore down all the decorations. It is Masonically reported that the American flag was torn to tatters, and kindling wood made of the flag-staff, but this is too "far-fetched." Such stories will do for certain districts of Mississippi and Louisiana.

CHICAGO'S MASONIC MAYOR.

The penalty of putting Freemasons in office was seldom so manifestly visited upon a community as upon Chicago. A year ago last spring when D. C. Cregier, Past Grand Master and Sovereign Grand Inspector General, was nominated by the Democrats and independent voters for mayor, the Cynosure plainly warned them they were dealing with a power behind their candidate which they were in no condition to control, and that in advocating his election they were betraying trusts that should be sacred to every citizen. Their candidate had been many years in public office in this city and this was taken as self-sufficient guarantee of his integrity and ability, without examination into the influences which had kept him in office and which had condoned for numerous derelictions. The influence of the Daily News, the paper of largest circulation in the city, probably carried the vote for Cregier against Mr. Roche. The News is independent in politics and favors many municipal reforms in a courageous and wholesome manner, well worthy of imitation by our great Chicago papers. After marking Cregier's course for some months the News frankly admitted its mistake and has fairly endeavored to right the wrong. No paper could do more to arouse the city against the infamous Sunday saloon, and for months it has spoken fearlessly against the gambling dens openly allowed by the Mayor, though he has issued two or three delusive orders about closing them. Mayor Cregier is in fact so bound to the vicious classes of the city by his lodge obligations, that, even if he honestly desired public reformation and the enforcement of the plainest of ordinances, he could not do so until he had broken with the Freemasons. This fact is becoming so apparent that the papers are calling attention to it of late in unmistakable language. Thus the Herald, which is the Mayor's particular organ, said on the 19th ult., after remarking about a case tried before Judge Baker in which two persons were sentenced to the penitentiary for detaining a young person in a disreputable house:

"Another case of precisely the same character is now pending in the courts, but the public is not likely to see any such justice meted out. The principal in the case is a Clark street fiend named Gus Anderson, who by judiciously dispensing the wares he keeps in his vile den, by his money, and by the baleful influence he is able to wield by means of heavy and conspicuous secret society emblems which adorn his person, is able to keep outside the penitentiary. The authorities seldom if ever molest him, and his word used to be as much law around the Harrison street police station as that of the mayor or chief of police."

On the 25th the Tribune made this indictment of the Cregier administration:

"Vice and crime prevail in Chicago at this time to a greater extent than at any time in its history. Every day the papers chronicle at least one murder in the city. The calendar of the Criminal court is crowded with murder cases. The grogeries where the murderous propensity is promoted and intensified are kept open all hours of the day and night in violation of the laws of the State and of the city ordinances. Vile, poisonous, maddening whisky is sold in defiance of the statute to drunkards and maniacs under the eyes of the authorities."

The News of the next day spoke more plainly still, and put a searching finger upon the very center of the ulcer:

"If any one doubts that the present city administration is doing what it can to foster vice and crime he should spend a few hours investigating the matter. That the police, the dive-keepers, and the gamblers are on the best of terms cannot be questioned. Ballot-box stuffers and other criminals have no reason to complain of their treatment at the hands of the authorities. The Daily News has presented ample proof of the Freemasonry which binds together the administration and the criminal classes."

On the same day the Inter Ocean in an editorial quoted the following from a speech made by Cregier at Fort Worth, Texas, during his late Southern trip:

"If any of you come to Chicago and get into trouble I will see you through. I have said I would, and I mean what I say. If you should get into a bad snap the Sheriff of Cook county (he is here) will smuggle you a jury and see that you come clear. I mean it, and I have some little authority up there."

This is such a speech as an arrogant lodge master, who has become accustomed to use his Masonic grips and oaths to override courts and cheat justice, might be expected to make. It is what Masonic mayors, police officers, and prosecuting attorneys have been doing for years in Chicago and every other American city where they can get into power. It is what they practically swear in the lodge to do, and it is what the lodge is good for, so far as they are concerned. The Inter Ocean apologizes for this confession of knavery and promise which a thief would make to a thief, that it may be regarded as but an after-dinner pleasantry. But the editor adds: "There are too serious complaints of the complicity and sympathy of Mayor Cregier's police with gamblers, Clan-na-Gaels and election corruptors for any jocoseness on his part as to personal power and personal willingness to shield misdemeanants."

This exhibit is full justification for the Cynosure, if any reader has objected to our occasional reference to Mayor Cregier. We hold and have held that it is a moral impossibility for a man so steeped in Freemasonry as he has been to administer public office with justice and probity. And the same principles which are operating in his case to injure the fame of our city and make it an unfit place to which the world should be invited, are not different from those which produce corruption, bribery, fraud, Tweedism in every city and town. Men who are sworn, in the secret lodge, to favoritism to the few, are thereby unfitted for the impartial administration of public office for the benefit of the whole people. This is a moral axiom. It needs no argument to establish it. So long as the lodge oath is regarded, the civil oath must suffer. It is reason enough for a good rule, worth observing by every American voter, that no adhering Freemason or active secret society man of any name should be put in office by his consent.

THE SENATE AND THE SUPREME COURT.

A bill introduced by Senator Wilson, of Iowa, was adopted by the Senate on Friday which provides that "all fermented, distilled or other intoxicating liquors or liquids," taken into any State or Territory, shall be subject to the local laws and shall not be exempt because of original packages or any other reason. Voorhees of Indiana and Vest of Missouri attempted ridicule, the former moving to amend the title of the bill, so it should read: "A bill to overrule the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in its interpretation and construction of the Constitution on the subject of commerce between the several States and thereby to relieve the State of Iowa from the consequences of her own misguided legislation."

This decision of the Supreme Court will long be remembered. In the first place three of the judges, Fuller, Bradley and Lamar, a few days after rendering it, decided the Utah case, involving the same principle of State rights, in a directly contrary manner.

Second, Judge Huston of Burlington, Iowa, has found a decision, rendered by the Supreme Court, and involving the same principles, except that the commodity in one case was coal, and in the other, liquor. The court then held that after the property, imported from another State, had reached its destination it was at once a commodity and "it had become a part of the general mass of property in the State" without having passed out of the hands of the consignee.

Third, the decision of the Court if rendered thirty years ago when slaves were a commodity in part of the country would have made that business legal everywhere; and Jeff Davis could have called the roll of his slaves on Bunker Hill, just as well as on Capitol Hill in Richmond.

The courts in several States are ignoring the decision, in evident anticipation that Congress will soon provide a remedy for its disastrous application.

—An interesting letter from Secretary Stoddard is received too late for publication this week, in which he speaks very hopefully of the progress of public opinion against the lodge evil in Boston.

—A student in the Northwestern University, who belongs to one of the best Greek-letter secret fraternities there, has just withdrawn from it, as he found that being yoked together with unbelievers was a hindrance to growth in grace, and saw many things in the fraternity that were not only non-Christian but anti-Christian.

—The Evangelical Messenger for May 27 has letters from Bishop William Doane, Rev. Dr. John Hall, Joseph Cook and Bishop John H. Vincent in answer to the question, "Is it wrong or inconsistent for a Christian to attend the theater?" They write in condemning the playhouse and attendance upon theatrical performances.

—The Democrat, a new paper of New Iberia, Louisiana, recalls the cruel days of a year ago last winter when Rev. Byron Gunner was driven from his home and church work, and several Negroes were killed. Its reference is a bit of sarcasm, running thus: "There has been no assassination of Negroes by the Regulators during the last week, a decided improvement in the moral tone of that organization."

—The program for Commencement week at Evanston—Northwestern University—begins with the graduating exercises and concert of the Conservatory of music Friday evening June 13. The Baccalaureate sermon will be preached Sunday, 15th inst., by Milton S. Ferry, D.D., and Rev. Simon J. McPherson, D.D., of Chicago, will deliver a sermon before the University Christian Association. Tuesday evening, 17th inst., services in memory of President Cummings will be held at which address will be made by Rev. Jas. N. King, D.D., and Rev. R. Fleming, of New York.

—At the yearly meeting of the Society of Friends in Philadelphia, Pa., a minute was entered on their book containing a condemnation of the practice of joining secret societies as inconsistent with their principles and testimonies. Those who had become entangled in this evil were affectionately entreated to withdraw from any connection with such organizations. However worthy may be the ostensible object of such societies, it was felt that the incorporation in them of the feature of secrecy precluded every consistent Friend from joining them.

—The attention of every reader is called to the notice of the annual meeting of the National Christian Association to be held in the Carpenter building, 221 West Madison St., Chicago, Thursday, June 19. The enlarging work of the Association and the proposal that an International Conference be held here during the World's Fair suggests business of great importance to be done. Let there be prevailing prayer for the presence of the Holy Spirit of God in the meeting to give unanimity and a spirit of wisdom to the meeting, and let every corporate member and every friend of the reform be present who can do so.

—A Syracuse correspondent of the Wesleyan Methodist reports the following experience which is an emphatic reminder of 2 Cor. 6: 14: "I had a conversation with one of the G. A. R. some time since, and he said he carried his badge in his pocket, because if he wore it where it could be seen every old rum-sucker he met would step up and called him 'Brother' and ask him to treat. 'I got so ashamed of my company,' said he, 'that I put my badge in my pocket. He was not a Christian, but could not fellowship his brethren.' I asked him if there was any way to get rid of them. But he said, 'No, any old veteran who keeps up his dues cannot be shut out.'" —The thirty-seventh national convention of the "Ancient Order of Hibernians" has just been held in Hartford, Conn. Over five thousand men are said to have been in the line of march; and, as the Hibernian is a secret armed organization controlled by the priests, it is easily seen what such a body of men would mean in case of an uprising of Roman Catholicism in this country. The day has passed when men apologize for being Roman Catholics. We shall no longer find Rome on the defensive, but every ten years hence will find her more and more on the aggressive, and in the not far-off future may have to give our reasons for being Protestants, and then defend our position. The secretary's report of this order shows that there are in the United States and Canada 168,053 members, and that the order has cash and property to the value of $1,480,350.77. At the banquet Governor Bulkeley of the State of Connecticut and Mayor Dwight of the city of Hartford responded to toasts. Letters from Charles Stewart Parnell and Michael Davitt were read.

—The largest mission on the Ohio river is now being put into operation by Bro. I. R. B. Arnold. He has let the contract for the building of a floating chapel 30x110 feet. One end will be partitioned off into kitchen, dining and bedrooms, printing office and store room for papers, books and tracts, of which he distributes large quantities. The chapel room will seat 700 people, and so arranged that, with two stereopticons, a hymn may be thrown in large print on one large canvass, 12x12 feet, so the entire congregation can read and sing, and beside it on another canvass, a picture illustrating the same. The chapel is being built at New Martinsville, W. Va., and is to be completed July 1st, when it will be put into active service along the Ohio, reaching Southern rivers in time for a vigorous temperance campaign during the winter. Religious and temperance papers for distribution among the Freedmen should be sent, freight prepaid, to Marietta, Ohio.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Rev. B. A. Imes of Memphis preached the annual sermon before the Y. M. C. A. of Knoxville College, Tenn., at the late commencement anniversary. He also gave the annual address before the literary societies.

—Rev. S. A. George of Mansfield, Ohio, for several years secretary of the Ohio State Association, has accepted a call from the Covenanter congregation of Baltimore, Md., and was to have preached his first sermon as pastor last Sabbath.

—Prof. G. W. Moorehead, D.D., who is delivering a very popular series of lectures on the Bible and its study before the Moody Institute for Christian Workers in this city, is engaged as one of the instructors of the Bible school to be held at Chautauqua, N. Y., July 19 to August 2.

—Bro. W. B. Stoddard of the Washington office spoke in Alexandria, Va., at three services on the 25th ult. One was in the city jail where five spoke of their determination to begin a new life, with God's help. He went to Baltimore last week to fill appointments in one of the Baptist churches and in the United Presbyterian church on the Lord's day. He intends coming to the N. C. A. annual meeting on the 19th inst.

—Rev. S. S. Palmer, who went to India under the auspices of the Faith Missionary Society of Oberlin three years ago, returned last November on account of the failing health of his wife. They were settled at Akola, in an unhealthy district, and suffered much from malarial diseases, which finally induced heart trouble in Mrs. Palmer. They left their work with much regret, and hope, if the Lord will, to return if health is restored. Bro. Palmer is now in Chicago and desires to engage with some church. Bro. Rogers, who is laboring still in Akola, enjoys good health, and has taken to himself a native wife, a Christian woman connected with the mission.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 28, 1890.

The noble stand taken by the Engineer Commissioner at Washington, Col. Robert, in executing the liquor laws, was heartily commended and applauded at a meeting of temperance workers held at the Congregational church last Sabbath. The course he has pursued in his recent crusade has resulted in wiping out of existence 313 low dens of iniquity, saloons of the meanest and most harmful character. Mr. Hiram Price, ex-Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who is a zealous temperance worker, and who was one of the speakers at the above-mentioned meeting, suggested that every man and woman of the capital, interested in morality and religion, ought to call on Col. Robert and personally express approval of his cause. He said he was going to do so; that he wanted to see a District Commissioner who was disposed to do his duty.

There is an organization in Washington known as the Congressional Temperance Society, composed mainly of members of Congress. Presumably it has for its object the dissemination of temperance principles, especially in Congressional circles. This organization has been in existence for forty or fifty years, and so has the Congressional groggery. The sale of rum over the bar of the House has gone on all these years in the most unblushing and promiscuous manner, and drinks have been dispensed to all applicants with as much freedom, and as little attempt at disguise or discrimination, as in any other public bar-room. The Washington Post asks if the Congressional Temperance Society will not do something to abate or abolish this national disgrace, and says further, that the Capitol is no place for this sort of business. It does not comport with the dignity of the United States for Congress to keep a bar.

He is now Senator Carlisle. The ex-Speaker took his seat in the higher branch of Congress on Monday, as Senator from Kentucky, to fill the unexpired term of the late Senator Beck. The ceremony of subscribing to the oath of office was witnessed by well-filled galleries, there being an unusually large representation in the gallery reserved for the press. On being escorted to his seat by his colleague, Senator Blackburn, Mr. Carlisle was immediately surrounded by Senators from both sides of the Chamber tendering their congratulations.

It is notable that the investigation of different affairs, undertaken by the two Houses of Congress this session, has for the most part been without practical results. The ballot box investigation resulted in nothing, except the humiliation of those public personages at whom it was directed. The investigation of secret session leakages was a ridiculous failure. The inquiry into the office of the supervising architect, in connection with the Springfield (Mo.) public building, developed nothing. It is true the Silcott investigation resulted, indirectly, in the members of Congress getting reimbursement for their stolen salaries, but no reform was accomplished which would prevent a repetition of the theft provided another rascal should get the same opportunity of which Silcott took advantage. Immigration, compound lard, transportation of meat products, etc., have all received a great deal of investigation with no practical results as yet visible.

One committee, however, must be excepted from this category, and that is the one which has just completed its investigation of the Civil Service Commission. It enjoys the distinction of having gone in search of something which was found in the place suspected. The investigation has lasted a long time, but the thorough character of the work is sufficient excuse for this. The proceedings fill 362 pages. They were according to accepted methods. Accused and accuser were present, witnesses were sworn, examined and cross-examined, arguments and explanations were made, and there was a final hearing for all. You can learn a great deal about reform and its freaks by looking over this report.

When the Civil Service Commission received the report of its investigation, it did not recognize its own features. Instead of reading the report, it promptly returned answer to the Congressional Committee that the papers were too inaccurate for revision. It had never seen a likeness of itself before, and could not believe its own eyes.

—An exchange says: "The friends of Christian principles in the administration of our Government are compelled to acknowledge with shame and humiliation their disappointment in the present administration. Much has been justly expected from the Sabbath-school teacher and Presbyterian elder who occupies the White House. But we are told that 'intoxicating liquors have been served on his table on state occasions, and lately a 'german,' one of the most offensive and disgusting of all the public dances, was given in the White House. It was a full dress (rather undress) affair, such as few thoughtful mothers would suffer their daughters to attend. Chaplain Milburn says there has not been any such public exhibition in the Presidential Mansion since the marriage of President Tyler. Pretty soon the people will wonder what the difference is between a Christian President and one who is not a Christian."

The House Committee on Alcoholic Liquor Traffic has authorized one of its members to call up in the House, at the first opportunity, the bill to prohibit the transportation of intoxicating liquors from any State or Territory of the United States into States where prohibitory laws are in force.

THE HOME.

WHEN MAY I BEAR CHRIST'S NAME?

Knowing myself weak, faulty, yea, untrue,
With little strength life's journey to pursue,
By passion tossed, by sin made halt and lame,
O God, when can I share His sacred name?

Perhaps when I, though sorrow like a sea
Surges around, lift anxious eyes to Thee,
Feeling alone Thy power's resistless might,
Shrouded with gloom like shadows of the night;
If I can learn they serve who only stand,
Thou hold'st them in the hollow of Thy hand;
If I can feel such power and strength must be
To guide aright our frail humanity,—
Then I may hope some day true child to be,
And Christ-like bow my haughty will to Thee.

If with the dawn, the sun's new-kindled ray,
I learn to welcome gladly each new day,
Myself forgotten in my daily task,
Love giving all, until no more I ask.
But still to love, reaching the ready hand
To all Thy children, at my Lord's command;
If I have learned the little love I know
Is smallest part of what Thou dost bestow,— Then may I hope at last true child to be,
And, Christ-like, love the world in loving Thee.

If I can make this wondrous truth my own,
Thy power and love are best in wisdom shown,
That infinite Thine attributes must be,
Power, love and wisdom Thy blest Trinity,
Then, Father, then I hope Thy child to be,
And bear Christ's sacred name with fealty.

SEVEN-EIGHTHS OF THE BIBLE MISUNDERSTOOD.

The following remarks,—with a few verbal changes—from the pen of Mr. Edward Hine, in his work, "Forty-seven Identifications of the British Nation with the Lost Ten Tribes of Israel," are well worthy of a serious perusal, writes Rev. Albert Sims of Canada.

Any Bible students would find it most useful, because greatly facilitating their reading and understanding of Scripture, if they would underline in red ink all the parts of the Bible having a direct reference to Israel only, and to underline, in blue ink, those parts referring to Judah alone, and also, in green ink, those parts that refer directly to the Gentile world, apart from Israel or Judah. By doing this they would arrive at the readiest method of ascertaining the positive fact, that seven-eighths of the entire Bible have reference only to the literal, social, and historical affairs of Israel and Judah; that only about one-eighth of the whole Bible has any real bearing upon the Gentiles, and that those parts marked red, as referring to Israel, largely predominate. It follows that, not to understand the distinction of Israel from Judah, is positively to misunderstand seven-eighths of the Bible, and yet it is an undeniable fact that 99 per cent of our people do not recognize any difference as existing between Israel and Judah, and that, when you speak to them about Israel, they immediately think you are referring to the Jews, and they read their Bibles with this same false impression. Nationally, to this day, both Oxford and Cambridge are under this delusion, as well as all the dissenting colleges of the land; how, then, can we be surprised at the amount of stupid blundering and erroneous statements issuing from our pulpits, or wonder at the fact that our pulpit ministrations do not gain the respect of the masses.

Is it not a lamentable assertion to make in 1889 that seven-eighths of the Bible are misunderstood? Yet it is, too truly, a fact. By not distinguishing Israel from Judah, we set all the prophetic books at variance with each other; we make one prophet give the direct falsehood to another; we make Isaiah call into question the prophecies of Jeremiah; and Jeremiah impugn the statement of Hosea. We set Joel against Amos, Zephaniah against Zechariah and make Ezekiel contradict them all. Hundreds of proofs are at hand to substantiate these statements, but a few must suffice. Isaiah 7:8; Hosea 1:10; 6:2; Matt. 15:24. Jeremiah and Ezekiel declare Israel to be known. Jer. 24:9; Ezekiel 22:4. Hosea declares Israel to be as the sand for multitude. Hosea 1:10. Jeremiah declares Judah to be few in number. Jer. 15:7. Isaiah, David and Micah declare Israel to be the strongest war power upon earth. Isa. 41:11; Psalm 105:24; Micah 7:16. Whereas Jeremiah declares Judah to be without might, Jer. 19:7; God, Samuel, David, Isaiah, and Jeremiah declare Israel to be a monarchy. 2 Sam. 7:12, 13; Psa. 89:4; Isa. 37:31; 49:23; Jer. 33:26. Jeremiah states Judah to be without government. 17:4. Isaiah and Obadiah state Israel to be an island nation with large colonies. Isa. 49:1, 8; Obadiah 17. Jeremiah and Ezekiel state Judah to be strangers in all countries, without geographical inheritance. Jer. 24:9; Ezekiel 22:16. Isaiah, Hosea, Micah, Habakkuk and Paul declare Israel to be a Christian people. Isa. 44:23; Hosea 2:19; Micah 5:7; Habakkuk 3:13; Rom. 6:14. Whereas, Ezekiel, Nahum, Zech., Christ and Peter declare Judah to be under the Mosaic law. Ezek. 43:18-27; Nahum 1:15; Zech. 9:11; Mark 7:9; Luke 13:35; 1 Peter 2:8. Many scores of such illustrations might be given. These statements are, in reality, perfectly harmonious. It is only when we read Scripture in our blindness, under the impression that each statement refers to one and the same people, that it becomes contradictory; then it is that the whole Bible seems one mass of confusion, defying the genius of man to bring forth a shadow of reconciliation, without doing material damage to other parts of the Book. Tom Paine fell into the common error of looking at the Jews as the house of Israel, and states boldly in his writings that he was led into infidelity because he saw that the Jews could never verify the promises given to Israel; he therefore gave the Bible up as a myth. The very understanding of the difference between the two Houses is the key by which almost the entire Bible becomes intelligible, and we cannot state too strongly that the man who has not yet seen that the Israel of the Scriptures are totally distinct from the Jewish people, is yet in the very infancy, the mere alphabet of Biblical study; and that, to this day, the meaning of fully seven-eighths of the Bible is completely shut out to his understanding.

On page 2 he says:

The House of Judah is composed of two tribes, i. e., Judah and Levi. These are the Jews of the present day. They have never been lost, it being the desire of the Almighty that they should be known wherever they go by all people.

At the time of the separation, and up to the siege of Jerusalem under Titus, the House of Judah contained the tribe of Benjamin. But that tribe separated from Judah before the siege, by virtue of the prophecy commanding them to do so, Jer. 6:1, so that Benjamin is not now with the Jews. Indeed, it is almost unpardonable to allude to the Jews as embodying Judah and Benjamin, though it is an error commonly made.

The term Ephraim is synonymous with Israel, and embodies the ten tribes as a consolidated people. Manasseh is a thirteenth tribe, decreed by the Almighty to be "a great people," i. e., a distinct nationality; nevertheless Ephraim was to "be greater than he," Gen. 48:19, that is, a distinct nationality from Manasseh; so that it testifies of ignorance to include Manasseh, as one of the ten tribes. Ephraim and Manasseh must be two distinct nations, though of the same stock.

The Jews are "of Israel," therefore purely Israelites; but the people of the ten tribes were never Jews. This is an important distinction to bear in mind. Scripture often speaks of Judah under the term of Israelites, especially the prophet Ezekiel; yet when this term is applied to Judah, and it becomes needful to distinguish the ten tribes from her, it is done by using the terms, "all Israel," "the whole House of Israel" "the House of Israel wholly." These terms are copyright to Israel, and are never applied to Judah.

Again, on pages 65, 66, he says: The term "spiritual Israel" has no foundation in the Scriptures. It may have answered a purpose in the past; but in these present times it involves a misapplication of the words that has a most mischievous tendency; and though apparently simple, their usage in these days would become really a power to prevent our fully understanding the Scriptures; therefore, it is important to notice the mistake. The term "Israel" throughout the Judges, Kings, and Prophets, denoted a nation, applied, distinctly, to a nationality. To this day, whenever Israel is referred to either in the Old or the New Testaments, the reference is always to Israel, as a nationality—as the positive, legitimate, lineal descendants of Israel of old, even though they may have been lost so long.

The prevailing notion of the present day is, that an Israelite means a believer in Christ.

This is wrong.

We fail to find that when Christ was on the earth, he called his followers Israelites. Christ called them "Friends" and "Disciples." Elsewhere they are called "Heirs of God," "Faithful," "Believers," "Brethren," and "Christians." Christ called Nathanael "an Israelite" not because he knew him to be a man of God—not because he was prevailing with God in prayer, under the fig tree; but because Christ knew he was not of Judah, but that he belonged to Israel—of that tribe of Benjamin—the one tribe of Israel that was left in the land, on purpose to be a light in the days of Christ; in this sense only was he "an Israelite indeed." Why should we depart from Bible usage and coin a term inconsistent with the Holy Book?—which we do, when we talk about "Spiritual Israel." The only purpose it has served is to take us off the right track in searching for lost Israel. It has perpetuated "the blindness" that was to happen "to Israel"—Rom. 9:6—for many of us have, by this error, concluded that literal Israel were never to be found—that Christians were a spiritual Israel, substituted in its place. But a greater wrong could not be inflicted upon the Word of God than such a supposition; the Bible being plenteous in emphatic promises that Israel—the ten tribes—should be found, and Palestine restored to them.

WEBSTER AND STORY.

Joseph Story, for a generation, was one of the justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, and a professor in the Harvard Law School. His published legal works are, perhaps, more voluminous than any other writer of eminence in any age. On his death, in 1845, at a meeting of the Bar in Boston, held in the Supreme Court, the following grand and beautiful tribute to his memory, and the cause of religion, was delivered by his friend, Daniel Webster:

"Mr. Chief Justice, one may live as a conqueror, a king, or a magistrate; but he must die as a man.

"The bed of death brings every human being to his pure individuality; to the intense contemplation of that deepest and most solemn of all relations between the creature and his Creator. Here it is that fame and renown cannot assist us; that even friends, affection, and human love and devotedness, cannot succor us. This relation, the true foundation of all duty, a relation perceived and felt by conscience and confirmed by revelation, our illustrious friend, now deceased, always acknowledged.

"He revered the Scriptures of truth, honored the pure morality which they teach, and clung to the hopes of future life which they impart. He beheld enough in nature, in himself, and in all that can be known of things seen, to feel assured that there is a Supreme Power, without whose providence not a sparrow falleth to the ground.

"To this gracious Being he trusted himself for time and for eternity; and the last words of his lips ever heard by mortal ears were a fervent supplication to his Maker to take him to himself."

DO THY BEST.

Though the majority of people never rise above mediocrity, this is no excuse for slighting one's work or for doing nothing at all. The injunction to all is to act, and anything worth doing at all is worth engaging all the energies of the doer; and he who conscientiously attempts the highest, and labors the best he can, gains in the action a satisfaction that is his highest reward. Not only is this true, but it is usually the same kind of labor that leads to prosperity. A young painter was directed by his master to complete a picture on which the master had been obliged to suspend his labors on account of his growing infirmities.

"I commission thee, my son," said the aged artist, "to do thy best on this work. Do thy best."

The young man had such reverence for his master's skill that he felt incompetent to touch canvas which bore the work of that renowned hand.

But "Do thy best," was the old man's calm reply; and again, to repeat solicitation, he answered, "Do thy best."

The youth tremblingly seized the brush, and kneeling before his appointed work, he prayed:

"It is for the sake of my beloved master that I implore skill and power to do this deed."

His hands grew steady as he painted. Slumbering genius awoke in his eye. Enthusiasm took the place of fear. Forgetfulness of himself supplanted his self-distrust, and with a calm joy he finished his labor. The "beloved master" was borne on his couch into the studio to pass judgment on the result. As his eye fell upon the triumph of art before him he burst into tears, and, throwing his enfeebled arms around the young artist, he exclaimed, "My son I paint no more!" That youth, Leonardo da Vinci, became the painter of "The Last Supper," the ruins of which, after the lapse of three hundred years, still attract annually to the refectory of an obscure convent in Milan, hundreds of the worshipers of art. —Christian Statesman.

SEEDS THAT WILL GROW.

Twenty-five years ago, when I was a very little girl, father sent me into the corn-field one morning to drop pumpkin seeds.

"A seed in every other hill in every other row," was the injunction called after me as I crossed the chip-yard, seed box and dipper in hand, on my way to the corn-field.

At first the task seemed nothing but play. The corn had already been planted, and the flat hoe mark on top of each hill plainly marked where I was to crowd the pumpkin seeds into the mellow earth.

Row after row I followed up and down the field, skipping one, planting one, and still the box of seeds did not become empty.

"Drop the field as far as the seed will go," was another command I had received, and many a longing look did I cast at the cool farm-house in the distance, and then at the contents of that box, as the forenoon wore away, and the sun grew hot.

Ten times I had replenished my little tin dipper from the seed box, a wooden box in which window glass had been packed, narrow and deep—so deep it did not seem to have any bottom, and I shook up the pumpkin seed again and again to see if they were not almost gone.

Fourteen more rows, seven of them to be planted, and the opposite limit of the corn-field would be reached—and every reason to believe that the seeds would last till the whole field was planted.

"Father didn't expect me to plant so many. I heard him tell mother he should plant one-half the field with pumpkins and half with beans. I really don't believe he wants me to drop these last seven rows," I argued with myself. "I am so warm and tired I believe I will go home," and keeping a sharp lookout on the porch door that opened toward the field, and a guilty glance around the premises to be sure that no one was looking, I kicked a deep hole in the mellow soil with my bare feet and poured into it the remaining seeds in the box, packing dirt over them firmly and deep.

"If father questions me I can tell him I dropped them all; and those in the hole will never show their heads again above-ground. I am positive they are buried so deeply," I thought as I retraced my steps toward the kitchen threshold.

Father was sick with a slow fever, and calling me to his bedside as I came in he minutely questioned me as to how the seeds held out.

With guilty, downcast eyes I told him I had planted the entire field as he directed, excepting the last seven rows.

"And you dropped all the seed?" he asked, his wan face looking up from the white pillows.

"Yes," I answered in a low tone, and then moved to the window.

"Because," he continued, "Neighbor Burns wanted a few seeds badly, if we could spare them. I thought surely there would be a pint or more left. Tell John to plant beans in every hill of the rows that contain no pumpkin seed."

"If I had only known he intended having beans planted in one row and pumpkins in the next I never would have buried those seeds," I thought standing there conscience-smitten. But to me there then seemed no help for what I had done.

Each day for two weeks I secretly visited that grave of pumpkin seeds in the center of the corn-field to be sure there was no cracking of the earth to let green germs through into the sunlight, but found no sign that there was life beneath. Then I relaxed my vigilance, and in a few weeks had forgotten—not my sin, but the possibility of the seeds sprouting.

The last of July father was able to creep over his fields lying near the house, by the help of his cane. In one of his walks I joined him, and together we passed through the corn-field, the hills now waving with corn a foot in height and pumpkin vines just branching over the ground between the rows.

Our footsteps were suddenly arrested by a perfect tangle of vines, whose matted network covered a large circular spot visible in the corn.

"Why, why! how is this?" exclaimed father, stooping to critically examine the ground. "Here are vines by the score, dwarfed because they were so thickly planted, but pumpkin vines surely."

My heart gave a great thump as the truth flashed across my mind. This was the very spot where I had hidden those seed, and owing to the depth of soil that covered them they had germinated slowly, but had struggled into the light at last to condemn me.

I dared not speak, and father remained silent, poking his cane in the ground among the vines until he had unearthed a heap of swollen seeds, some decaying, but more with coiling, long, pale sprouts creeping from their shells, and others with well-developed cotyledonous leaves.

At last he looked up, and keenly scanning my crimson, conscious face, said, "Daughter Helen, is this your work?"

There was such a ring of love and grief in his tones I was conquered at once, and throwing myself at his feet, I sobbed forth the whole story.

Father did not scold. He said my own remorseful thoughts and loss of self-respect were punishment enough; but going home he told me, in his impressive, beautiful way, that bad habits and bad motives in life may be hid, like seed under the ground, from the eyes of the world for a time, but sooner or later their rank growth will push their way through any cloak of hypocrisy that had been carefully drawn over them.

When I see young people indulging in intemperate habits of any kind, secretly favoring the society of immoral, unprincipled associates, though their own conduct before the world may seem irreproachable, I think of the nest of bloated, sprouting pumpkin seed that would not remain out of sight, and how, like them, the living germs of bad thoughts and habits will very soon crop above-ground in the fairest life.—Seedtime and Harvest.

TEMPERANCE.

STUDENTS AGAINST LIQUOR-DEALERS.

Vermillion, South Dakota, is the seat of the State University, and there was great excitement there when G. I. Salmer, a druggist, had hearing for a permit to sell liquor under the new prohibitory law. About 300 students of the university quit their classes and paraded the streets of the town with banners, shouting for prohibition. Fully one-half of the students were young ladies. Some of the mottoes were as follows: "University or Saloon. Will you have the saloon?" "Spirit of Education or Spirit of Alcohol." In connection with the latter banner was a huge dragon and a large bottle with a snake crawling out of it. In all there were nearly one hundred banners. The streets were literally given over to the students for a couple of hours and the excitement was intense. The protest was intended to be an emphatic one, as it is alleged that Salmer for five years has been a violator of the liquor laws made for the protection of the university. After the parade, the case was called and Salmer secured a continuance. This made the students angry and they took up a public collection, amounting to about $250, to secure legal talent. Salmer says he will have the ring-leaders arrested if they attempt to intimidate him.

The Christian, London, has these paragraphs relating to the "drink evil," reciting facts which are akin to incidents in the United States: "Progress and poverty" is forcibly illustrated by the report of a Dublin company working two or three spirit shops, from which it appears that after paying all expenses the profits for the year amounted to £5,844 0s. 8d., with nearly $600 carried forward. No wonder that poverty and disease stalk hand in hand through the Irish metropolis, when one firm, and there are hundreds such, can quote figures like these. The increase of the National Drink Bill by seven and a half millions during 1889 is a fact to be deeply implored. Fortunately, the Bill for the decade is lower than was that for the previous decade, but no amount of explanation can make it satisfactory that we should be spending £132,213,276 per annum upon intoxicating drink. It is beginning to be asked, What is the use of providing improved dwellings for the working classes if the publican is to be permitted to come and settle close by, or in their midst, to drag the occupants down again? By and by when Parliament can condescend to practical questions affecting the well-being, spiritual and physical, of the people, we hope the query will receive the attention of our statesmen.

CIGARETTE SMOKING.

We think that the little city of Frankfort, in Kentucky, deserves no small praise for one thing its authorities have recently done. A law has there been enacted, with the purpose of enforcing it, too, that cigarettes shall no longer be sold in the corporation! Certainly a bold move, especially in a tobacco-raising State, and one that deserves universal imitation. The smoking of tobacco in any form is injurious to health, and even prejudicial to morals, but the cigarette is particularly to be denounced. The smoke of the medicated paper wrap, combined with that of the deleterious weed, is usually inhaled so as to be passed measurably into the lungs before being breathed forth again into the poisoned air. And thus it immediately and directly introduces the seeds of insidious disease and death. The cigarette ought everywhere to be prohibited, if the young lads of our country, who are giving themselves up to the habit of smoking the killing nuisance, and who have not sense to do otherwise, would be preserved to reach a manhood of something like vigor. But of all people our law-makers have the least moral courage when a real evil is to be dealt with; so that we are hardly able to hope that the Frankfort example will be generally followed. Public opinion must be relied upon; and yet this is itself permeated, so to speak, with the fumes of both cigarette and cigar, to say nothing of all sorts of pipes.—The Church Union.

METHODISTS FAVOR PROHIBITION.

In the Methodist Episcopal General Conference (South) meeting at St. Louis the committee on temperance presented a lengthy report in favor of prohibition. It says: "We are emphatically a prohibition church. We stand out squarely and before the whole world certainly in the theory, and for the most part in the practice, for the complete suppression of the liquor traffic. We are opposed to all forms of license for this iniquity, whether the same be high or low." The report was ingeniously written in that it committed the church to prohibition in such a way that those who feared such action would involve the church in politics were disarmed. A contest was expected, but there was no opposition. The report was applauded and the vote to adopt was unanimous.

A CAUTION TO HARD DRINKERS.

Inebriates are always dangerous subjects to administer ether or chloroform for anesthesia. In all cases the heart is weakened, and fatty degeneration of various degrees is present. Any substance which lowers its action is perilous, because of the inability of the heart to recover, and the tendency to paralysis. But drinkers have always fatty hearts, and sudden paralysis is likely to appear with the first inhalation of chloroform. In chronic cases of inebriety, where extensive organic changes have taken place in the brain and spinal cord, paralysis of the respiratory centers occurs first, and respiration stops before the action of the heart. In such cases artificial respiration may prevent death if promptly used. In all cases a sudden checking in respiration and heart beat where ether or chloroform are used is a danger signal of the gravest importance.—Quarterly Journal of Inebriety.

on "Christian Birthrights," was read by C. S. Bullock, on which there was a brief discussion. H. H. Hinman then read a paper on "A Divided Church and Current Christian Reforms." Discussion was postponed to hear a paper from W. F. Davis of Chelsea, Mass., on "Christianity, not Sectarianism, God's Order," read by Miss I. D. Haines. After ably presenting the proofs that sects are not of God, he answered forty objections that have been urged against the union movement.

Miss Haines added remarks which indicated her own experience and convictions. Her having declined to receive ordination from the hands of ministers who are Masons and Odd-fellows, called out a note of dissent from a pastor who evidently fails to see any evil in those "ancient and honorable" institutions. But why he alone of all the persons attending the Conference should have manifested such sensitiveness and have felt that "this our craft is in danger," does not appear.

At 8 p. m., after a season of worship, a paper was read by Wm. M. Brown, a clergyman of the Protestant Episcopal church of Galion, O., and secretary of the Church Unity Society. His theme was, "Reasons why Christians of every Name Should Accept the Position of the Protestant Episcopal Church." The paper was attentively listened to, was one of much ability, and in an excellent spirit; but it is safe to say that it did not follow in the general trend of thought in the Conference.

On the morning of the 23d, after worship, a paper was read from Lura A. Mains of Dutton, Mich. C. S. Bullock of Evanston, Ill., then read an able paper by Eugene Babcock, Protestant Episcopal minister of Canandaigua, N. Y., on "The Church of the Past." It was followed by an able paper by Bro. Bullock on "The Church of the Future." This was followed by a very able paper by J. Franklin Browne on "Loyalty to Truth Consistent with Catholicity." A letter was then read from A. Cleveland Cox of Buffalo, N. Y., bishop of the Protestant Episcopal church. This was published in the daily papers and all concurred in its excellence.

On the afternoon of the 23d the president of the Conference read an able paper on "The Principles of Church Unity." Mrs. Geo. W. Houk of Dayton also read an able and excellent paper which was illustrated by a blackboard object lesson. Mr. Herbert C. Cook, rector of Christ's Church, expressed words of cordial welcome and greeting and stated the position of the board of bishops of the Protestant Episcopal church. Some discussion followed. A committee of which J. F. Browne was chairman was appointed to arrange and publish the papers presented to the Conference in pamphlet form.

Other committees were chosen to prepare proceedings for publication in the papers and to arrange for a future conference. The evening was devoted to a consideration of the declarations of the Conference. The following, after much discussion, were adopted:

Our Lord Jesus Christ established but one church on earth, which church includes all true believers. He prayed that its members might all be one, as he and the Father are one; that the world might believe that the Father had sent him. The establishment of distinctions that destroy the unity of the church, is both a loss and a sin, inimical to true religion, a great waste of moral and material resources in violation to divine commands, contrary to the mind of Christ and opposed to apostolic usage. Convinced of this, we therefore declare that in view of the exceeding prevalence of the sin of schism, there is no call for mutual incriminations, but great reason for forbearance and confession, and that these divisions into religious denominations ought to be humbly repented of and speedily put away.

2. That the return of the church to her primitive apostolic unity is the most needful and pressing of all religious reforms, and an absolute condition of the consummation of moral reformation.

3. While we rejoice in all the good that has been done by Christians in the denominations, we regard their success as due, not to the efficiency of these distinctive organizations, but rather to the power of the Gospel through the agency of the Holy Spirit. We believe their success would have been greater if they had not taken part in schism in the body of our Lord. Regarding these divisions as a manifest departure from the mind of Christ, we earnestly entreat our brethren to consider this question in the light of God's Word, and seek the more excellent way.

4. While we rejoice that by the work of the Holy Spirit, through Christians in the denominations, many are converted to Christ, and while we would not hinder any good work undertaken in the name of our Lord, we believe that there are in our own and foreign lands vast fields in which the preaching of the Gospel and the gathering of undenominational churches would be in no sense divisive, but greatly to the honor of God and the good of humanity.

After which the Conference adjourned finally. The entire spirit of the meeting was excellent. On the preceding Sabbath the rector of Christ's (P. E.) Church preached a sermon on Christian Unity, which was published in the dailies, and the Herald of Gospel Liberty gave an entire number of the paper and a supplement to articles on this question. There was entire freedom on all questions of reform, and things that were evil were called so.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. The true principle of Christ's kingdom,—vs. 13, 14. This was not the last, and probably not the first time that men have made the mistake of wanting to arm the Gospel with the secular power. Christ's kingdom is not of this world. It will never use the sword to right the most crying wrongs and abuses. Though full of sympathy for the oppressed, it is a spiritual force and must use spiritual weapons. The same radical remedy which has abolished slavery through all the civilized world, though in Christ's time the system was universal, is the one which is going to abolish war and monopolies, and all other oppressive evils. Taking this man as the representative of labor, and his brother as the rich capitalist who defrauds him of his wages, we see that Christianity will not be "made a judge and a divider over men" by taking upon itself the settling of questions which belong to class legislation. But, by instilling the principles of the Golden Rule into the hearts of employers and employed alike; by making the former see that justice requires them to share their profits with their workmen, and showing the latter that strikes, boycotts, and all methods which spring from revenge are only retarding their cause, it will finally, if there is any analogy between the past and the future, do away with most, if not all of these evils.

2. The warning against covetousness,—v. 15. Covetousness is the root sin from which all others spring. Eve coveted the forbidden fruit, and her posterity ever since have followed in her steps. "A man's life," etc. Our Saviour lays down a great principle:—that it is not what we have but what we are that makes life worth living. Satan deceives men into thinking the opposite; and so they covet wealth and barter all that constitutes the real happiness of life for a glittering, deceiving mirage. Covetousness is the first step in the downward career of the forger and defaulter. But the man who interrupted Jesus in his discourse wanted the satisfaction of a just claim, and the parable by which our Saviour reproves him has reference to one who seems to have gained his wealth by legitimate means. One can be perfectly honest, as the world goes, and yet through covetousness lose his soul.

3. The poor rich man,—vs. 16-21. His grounds brought forth plentifully, but instead of recognizing God's right to a part of it, he never has a thought that it is not all his own. How many are, to-day, making it their chief aim in life to amass an independent fortune, not to use for God, or the good of their fellow-creatures, but for their own selfish ease. To be independent of times and circumstances is a great blessing, but riches are the sport of circumstances. A man may be rich to-day and poor to-morrow, and well merits the epithet of "fool" if he trusts his happiness to anything so uncertain. Covetousness, that is, such an overweening desire for worldly good as to overshadow eternal realities, is the greatest folly a man can commit. The Bible classes it with the vilest outward sins on the one hand, such as adultery, thieving and drunkenness; and with the inward sin of hypocrisy, on the other. It is covetousness which is protecting the rum traffic, which is arraying class against class in deadly antagonism, and eating into the nation's heart like a canker. Covetousness is making self our god. It is to choose the fool's portion. He could not have taken his money with him, but by using it as the Lord's steward, he might have changed it into the coin of the other realm. But he thought only of the present and lived and died a FOOL.

HELPFUL THOUGHTS FROM PELOUBET'S QUARTERLY.

(1) Christ's church should be separate from the state. "I cannot but think that, in this case, the Lord disclaims, in behalf of his ministers, all temporal rule, such as that of the Bishop of Rome over the states of the church." Assumption of state authority is even more injurious to the church than to the state, taking away her thought and influence from higher things. (2) It is the business of Christ's church to inculcate those great principles which will lead to all true reform, but not, as a church organization, to leave this high work for the details of political management. But it is always to stand by the right principles on the side of all good. (3) The greatest power in reform is the conversion of men from the love of sin to the love of righteousness. This makes all good reforms possible, this inspires and carries them out. A revival of true religion is the atmosphere of all progress in righting the wrongs of men.

COVETOUSNESS (1) is not a mere desire for more; for that desire, in some form, is ever appealed to in the Bible, and is the root of all civilization and progress. (2) Covetousness is the overstrong desire for more, uncontrolled by reason, or conscience, or the Word of God,—a desire that is willing to gain for itself (a) at the expense of others, (b) at the expense of higher and better things. It is not coveting to desire a house, but to desire it so as to deprive our neighbor of it, or to gain it by wrong-doing or neglect of duty. All true gains, all true increase, are such as benefit both parties and the community in general.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—The Greek mission, carried on for some time by the Baptists, was dropped several years since, and Rev. D. Z. Sakellarios has since continued the work alone, and with little support from Christians abroad. Rev. G. C. Tsaras, who was educated in Germany, has assisted in Gospel work in Athens for about a year, and is now in this country endeavoring to arouse an interest among Christian people to sustain this work until it can be self-supporting.

—The International Missionary Union will hold its seventh annual meeting at Clifton Springs, New York, June 11th to 18th, inclusive, 1890. Free entertainment will be provided for all foreign missionaries, or persons who have been foreign missionaries, of whatever evangelical society, or board, or field. Membership in the Union is open to all such persons, and includes no others. Candidates under actual appointment to the foreign field of any evangelical organization, are earnestly invited to attend, and will also be freely entertained, as far as provision can be made. Reduced fare may be obtained on the railroads. The Union affords, from its international and its interdenominational nature, an opportunity to survey the whole field of Christian missions, such as is hardly common in conventions even of any of the great missionary agencies.

—The Woman's Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian, Congregational and Baptist churches, which represent all the Northwestern States, have united in a petition to President Harrison asking that his influence be used in the Berlin Conference against the rum traffic in the Congo Free State.

—Mrs. Edna P. Morrison, wife of Rev. G. W. Morrison, United Presbyterian missionary in India, died on the 7th of April. Her two-weeks-old babe followed her into heaven's rest the next day.

—The General Conference of the M. E. church South, which convened in St. Louis May 7, passed a resolution forbidding members signing applications for liquor licenses.

—American Seamen's Friend Society makes a good showing in its sixty-second annual report. Its chaplains and missionaries have labored in Norway, Denmark and Sweden; at Hamburg, Antwerp, Rotterdam, Genoa and Naples; in the Madeira Islands; at Bombay and Karachi, India; at Yokohama, Japan; at Valparaiso, Chili; in New York, South Brooklyn, Brooklyn Navy Yard, Jersey City, Norfolk, Wilmington, Charleston, Savannah, Mobile, Galveston; in Astoria and Portland, Oregon; in Seattle, Tacoma and Port Townsend, Washington. From some of these places have come tidings of large spiritual results, and from all of them the report of faithful work done.

—The proceedings of the Seventeenth Annual Convention of the Young Men's Christian Association of Illinois fill a hundred pages. There are in the State seventy-five associations, and nine of them have buildings worth $533,000. Building funds in hand amount to $78,962.

—"Let us Anchor Our Churches and Make Them Free," a monograph by the Rev. W. S. Rainsford, D. D., rector of St. George's Church, has been published in pamphlet form. It is a strong and earnest plea for greater usefulness and influence of the church among the masses, and the author holds most emphatically that in the church of God all men are equal.

IN BRIEF.

A little Austin boy, whose impecunious parents are always moving from one house to another, was asked by the Sunday-school teacher:

"Why did the Israelites move out of Egypt?"

"Because they couldn't pay their rent, I reckon."

He will, soon be here—Presently the census-taker will be around, book and pencil in hand, and conversations like the following will be in order:

Census-taker—"Have you children?"

Woman—"Yes; a son."

Census-taker—"Male or female?"

Woman—"Male."

Census-taker—"Age?"

Woman—"Two years and a half."

Census-taker—"Married or single?"

Woman—"Single."

Census-taker (closing book)—"That's all right. Thanks."

There are 2,600 men and 600 women employed as street sweepers in Paris, besides 3,500 more workmen engaged in draining, paving, planting and similar service. The foremen of the sweepers get $1 a day, their deputies eighty cents, and the rank and file about seventy-five cents for ten hours' work. The women work shorter hours and get about forty-five cents per day. They all have to find their own tools. It is now proposed to increase the wages of the sweepers, and to retire them on a pension of $100 per year when they reach 65 years of age.

All the members of Garibaldi's family live in Italy, and are highly honored. His eldest son, Menotti, is a member of the Italian Parliament, and an alderman of Rome. So says the New York Sun, April 5, 1890. The monument to Garibaldi on Washington Square, New York, is constantly visited by Italians. Groups of immigrants may be seen any day contemplating the martial figure of the hero who delivered their country from the rule of the Pope. When the monument was dedicated and unveiled by Mayor Hewitt, three years ago, the Catholic Review and other papal organs said it ought to be destroyed. But it continues in its place to be an object lesson to all citizens who love civil and religious liberty.—Converted Catholic.

In Zurich, Switzerland, the other day, one of the law courts closed a novel case. A beggar who opened the gate in front of a house where he intended to ask for relief, was attacked by the watchdog and bitten in the left arm. Soon afterward he commenced a suit against the owner of the place, calling for heavy damages, on the ground that the wound he had received rendered him permanently unable to earn his living. The defense was that he could beg just as well as ever, and that the injury in question, far from being a disadvantage, only increased his chances in his profession. But the court held that the proprietor of a house is responsible for the security of the people who come to visit him, even when the object of the visit is to make an appeal to his generosity. So the beggar won his suit.

HOME AND HEALTH.

USE FOR WASTE PAPER.

Few housekeepers have time to black their stoves every day, or even every week. Many wash them in either clear water or dish water. This keeps them clean, but they look very brown. After a stove has once been thoroughly blackened it can be kept looking perfectly well for a long time by rubbing it with old paper every morning. If I occasionally find a spot of gray or fruit juice that the paper will not take off, I rub it with a wet cloth, but do not put on water enough to take off the blacking. I find that rubbing with paper is a much nicer way of keeping my tea-kettle, coffee-pot and tea-pot bright and clean than the old way of washing them in suds. The inside of coffee-pots and tea-pots should be rinsed in clear water, and never in the dish water. Rubbing with dry paper is also the best way of polishing knives, spoons and tinware after scouring. This saves wetting the knife handles. If a little flour be held on the paper in rubbing tinware and spoons, they shine like new silver. For polishing windows, mirrors, lamp chimneys, etc., I always use paper in preference to dry cloth.—Careful, in New York Mail.

IRONING SHIRTS.

After the shirt is washed and dried, take the bosom wrong side out and fold it together in the center. Moisten a tablespoonful of starch in a little cold water, then add a pint of boiling water; stir until the whole is perfectly clear. Dip the bosom, wrong side out, into this starch, dip your hands in cold water and wring the bosom while it is still very hot. Rub the starch in thoroughly, taking care not to get the least particle on the right side of the bosom. Rub it in, and if you find all parts are not sufficiently moistened, dip it in the second time. When the shirt is perfectly starched, shake it out and fold both sides of the bosom again together, thus bringing the side seams together also; straighten the sleeves. Now fold the sides of the shirt over on the front, and beginning at the neck, roll it up tightly. Fold it in a towel, and put it in a cold place several hours, or over night. I say a cold place, because the starch would sour if kept in a warm place many hours. Now, for the ironing. Iron first the neckband, then the sleeves, then the back of the shirt, then the front, and last the bosom. Put under the bosom a rather hard, smooth bosom-board; cotton flannel is the best material for covering, and one thickness under a plain, muslin cover is quite sufficient. Spread over the bosom a wet cloth, and iron it over quickly with a very hot iron; then remove the cloth, and with a perfectly smooth iron, as hot as can be used without scorching, rub the bosom rapidly up and down, not crosswise, at the same time holding and pulling the bosom into shape. If you have a polishing iron, use the rounded part of the iron, thus putting all the friction on a small part at one time, giving full benefit of the gloss of both starch and linen.—Table Talk.

HOW TO CURE A HEADACHE.

Dyspeptic or bilious headache is very common, and, it seems to me, it is the headache which is most easily traceable to its cause, and most readily avoided without medicine.

Every one who has ever suffered from it knows, as well as I can tell them, the cause and the remedy. It is the old story of appetite, indulgence and punishment.

If you wish to know my advice as to curing bilious headache, I say—Don't get it. Eat such food as agrees with you; be temperate in all things, and be as regular as clock-work about your habits. In the case of young people this headache can always be traced to some error in diet—as rich food in immoderate quantity, eating at unreasonable or unusual hours, drinking wine or beer, etc., etc.—and it readily gives way to an emetic and sleep. Almost any emetic will do—ipecac or sulphate of zinc. In the case of elderly persons, however, the headaches, although less acute, are apt to be more tedious and more exhausting.

A SCARED EDITOR.

A rugged farmer stalked into the sanctum with a big whip under his arm.

"Be you the editor?" he asked. "I am," was the half apprehensive reply.

"Here's two dollars—send me your paper, for life," he said.

"You see," he went on, "our daughter was sick and like to die; she drooped and grew weak and pale, had headaches, no appetite, back ached, hands and feet like ice, couldn't sleep, hacked with cough, and we thought she had consumption. No medicine helped her until she tried that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription mentioned in your paper, when she began to mend in no time and is now well and handsome as a rose—put me down as a life subscriber."

Now the editor is looking for another scare. The medicine has cured thousands afflicted as was the farmer's daughter, restoring the female functions to healthy action, and removing the obstructions and suppressions which caused her trouble. It is guaranteed to give satisfaction in every case or price ($1.00) refunded. It's a legitimate medicine, not a beverage. Contains no alcohol to inebriate; no syrup or sugar to sour, or ferment in the stomach and derange digestion.

As an invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the whole system. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequalled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic, or strength-giver. It promptly cures nausea, indigestion, bloating, weak back, nervous prostration, debility and sleeplessness. It is carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. Purely vegetable and perfectly harmless in any condition of the system.

As a soothing and strengthening nerve, "Favorite Prescription" is unequalled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and other distressing, nervous symptoms, commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

WARM-WATER BAGS.—The extent to which warm-water bags have come into use is amazing. They are now an almost essential adjunct of every lady's traveling outfit, and are often given as presents. They are of flannel-covered rubber, the most popular being in plaid patterns. When filled with boiling water they retain heat the entire night. A hot water bag under the neck will settle a neuralgic headache more quickly than any remedy known.—Selected.

Boils, carbuncles, and eruptions of all kinds are nature's efforts to throw off poisons from the blood. This result may be accomplished much more effectually, as well as agreeably, through the proper channels, by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

Well, Sarah, what have you been doing to make you look so young? Oh, nothing much, only been using Hall's Hair Renewer to restore the color of my hair.

You can make a large sum of money at work for us in your own locality. During the past few years, those who have thus worked have received over Five Millions of dollars for their services—more than a barrel of money. We want a few more workers at once. The work is easy, pleasant, adapted to both young and old of either sex. You can work all the time or in spare time only. Any one can do the work after studying our directions for a day or two. This is the chance of a lifetime for those who apply at once. Any one anywhere can earn $1.00 per month. Great workers, under the most favorable conditions, earn $20 a day and upwards. A class of people in the world are making so much money, without capital, as those at work for us. Whatever you have done, or whatever you may do, you should look into this royal chance. You will find that you can easily make all that we claim, and more. If you write to us before we secure all the workers we need, we will lay all before you FREE. Better write before you rest, and then if you conclude not to go to work, or if we cannot employ you, no harm is done. Every one of our workers makes big money. True & Co., Box 399, Augusta, Maine.

FARM NOTES.

CLOVER BLOSSOMS.

Does your life seem full of worry?
Do its daily cares oppress?
Is your pathway sometimes shadowed
By some passing bitterness?

Then this lesson e'en from nature
I would teach you, worried one,
Like the happy little clover,
Turn your face unto the sun.

Does your trouble seem too heavy
For your weary heart to bear?
Is your pathway wholly darkened
By some overhanging care?

Then remember darkest objects
'Gainst the brightest light are seen;
And for having known the dark spots
'Twill seem brighter in between.

Life is full of little shadows
Lying darkly all around,
And of course we needs must see them
If our eyes be on the ground.

—Carrie L. Munson.

INSECTICIDES.

At the winter meeting of the Ohio Horticultural Society, Prof. Wm. R. Lazenby, Director of the State Experimental Station, read a paper giving experiments in the use of insecticides. In this the essential requisites were summed up, preventive means were treated of, and the remedial measures were grouped. These latter are of interest to the farmer especially, and were stated as follows:

Applying poison to the plant upon which the insect feeds. Applying substances directly to the body of the insect. To hand-pick, entrap, and kill by miscellaneous means.

The following were suggested as remedial means from experiments made:

For the Currant and Gooseberry Worm.—Cover the ground in the vicinity of several bushes with coal ashes to the depth of ten or twelve inches. Should extend two feet on either side of row.

For the Codling Moth or Apple Worm.—Spread fresh gas lime to a depth of two or three inches under one or more apple trees. This should be done when the apple trees are in blossom. Another similar application should be made six weeks later.

For the Plum Curculio.—Dip eight or ten corn cobs, or as many pieces of woolen rags, in coal tar, and hang these at different points in the plum tree. This should be done immediately after the blossoms have fallen. The cobs or rags should be dipped in the tar every two weeks.

For the Aphis or Green Fly on House Plants.—Make a solution of whale oil soap, a quarter of a pound of soap to six quarts of water. Thoroughly sprinkle or wash the plants with this solution once a month.

For Vermin in Henneries and Stables.—Thoroughly sprinkle or spray them with kerosene.

For the Striped Cucumber or Squash Beetle.—Moisten with kerosene the inner folds of some rags or cloths, and place these in the center of or near the hills. As soon as the cloths become dry, moisten them again.

For ants, which frequently infest pantries and other places, use a sponge well moistened with sweetened water. When well filled with the insects, destroy them by dipping into boiling water.

For the common house fly try pyrethrum, or Persian insect powder, which should be used in small quantities by dusting with an atomizer in infested rooms.

In the discussion, however, it was shown that the corn cob and tar remedy for curculio was not efficient; that gas lime was dangerous to trees, but that coal ashes under trees was excellent, and it may properly be considered a specific for the currant and gooseberry worm.

All this corresponds with the experience of practical men of many years' standing. There is no sure method of securing plums against the curculio except jarring the trees, from the time the fruit is the size of peas until fully formed, and catching in sheets. The codling moth must be met by some means that will prevent the female from climbing

Stomach Troubles,

Such as indigestion and loss of appetite, are extremely common. The functions of the stomach being weakened, the blood soon becomes impure, the system loses vigor, and you fall an easy prey to any prevailing epidemic. What you need to restore tone to the digestive organs is Ayer's Sarsaparilla, the best and most economical of all blood-purifiers.

"For several years I was troubled with indigestion, accompanied with pains in my side. My appetite was poor, and my health was gradually failing. Medicine recommended to me by my friends, did not have the desired effect. Finally I was advised to use Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and have done so, with the most beneficial results. My appetite is now good, I am free from pain, and feel once more in good health."
—T. Loney, 32 Fairmount st., Cambridgeport, Mass.

"About a year ago, I found myself in failing health. I suffered indescribably from stomach trouble, blood disorder, and various weaknesses, and almost despaired of relief. Thinking Ayer's Sarsaparilla might possibly benefit me, I began taking it, and am pleased to state that a few bottles wrought an entire change in my condition. My health has been restored by its use, and I feel stronger and more vigorous than I have for many years." — Mary A. Garland, 1407 Michigan ave., Chicago, Ill.

"During the summer and fall of 1887 I suffered very seriously from dyspepsia. Knowing the high standard of Ayer's medicines, I decided to try what Ayer's Sarsaparilla could do for me. It has helped me wonderfully. I regard the Sarsaparilla as invaluable in such cases." — James H. Williams, Delana, Ill.

"About a year ago I was greatly afflicted with indigestion, and suffered from headache and terrible pains in my stomach. I consulted a physician, who prescribed various remedies, but all to no purpose. I became worse instead of better, and was compelled to give up work. A friend finally advised me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I purchased a bottle, took it according to directions, and soon had the satisfaction of knowing that my health was improving. After taking two bottles of this medicine, I was able to resume work. My appetite returned, my food digested well. I was free from headache, and to-day I am as well as ever." — P. Dubé, Holyoke, Mass.

the trees. This is done by means of bandages, and destroying the eggs laid within. The remedy for ants is a well-known and useful one. Pyrethrum powder, if fresh and pure, is a useful insecticide; but wire screens to windows and doors is the best means known for keeping flies and other insects out of rooms. The remedy for the striped beetle on the cucumber and other vines is a good assistant, but the most practical means of destroying them is to sprinkle the vines with cold water, and before the insects recover to scrape them away in a heap to the dry earth beyond, and kill them as they struggle forth. It must be remembered that preventive means by strong-smelling odors cannot be relied on either to keep insects from trees or plants, unless there are similar trees and plants near, to which the insects can retire undisturbed.—Farm, Field and Stockman.

Webster's

UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY.

That this is an unfortunate state of affairs will be admitted by all, and it is due to the fact that no one save the rich could afford them.

The Dictionary is a necessity in every home, school and business house. It fills a vacancy and furnishes knowledge which no one hundred volumes of the choicest books could supply, and all young or old, educated or ignorant, rich or poor should have it within reach and refer to its contents every day in the year.

The Loomis reprint contains all the matter as compiled and arranged by our esteemed and honored author and statesman,

NOAH WEBSTER.

About forty years of his life was devoted to this great work, and when we consider the fact that this book contains about 100,000 words, we will appreciate that these years must have been well spent.

Some idea of the magnitude of this book may be gained from the fact that it contains over 440 cubic inches of paper and has about 300,000 square inches of printed surface.

In addition to the 100,000 words it contains a portrait of the author, together with his biography and a valuable table of 12,000 synonymous words.

By special arrangement with the publishers, we are permitted to furnish this valuable volume: 1st. To any subscriber to our paper; 2nd. To any renewal subscription; and 3rd. To any person who has paid a full year's subscription within the past six months, on receipt of $1.50 for the paper one year, and two dollars and seventy-five cents to cover express charges, packing, etc., of the Dictionary.

Very few people know how to buy goods to the best advantage. It is generally known that it is better to buy direct from the manufacturer when possible, and if manufacturers would sell directly to consumers at same prices dealers have to pay, there would be a great saving to the consumer. In most lines of business the dealer is protected by the manufacturer, and is allowed a special discount which the party who uses the goods cannot get. The Elkhart Carriage and Harness Manufacturing Company, of Elkhart, Indiana, has been selling to the consumer at dealers' prices for sixteen years. This is an old and reliable company, and if what you order of them is not satisfactory, they agree to pay all freight charges. If you need anything in their line send for a catalogue.

The election of Dr. Atticus G. Haygood as a bishop of the M. E. Church South will have an important influence in the settlement of the race question. Dr. Haygood is the author of "Our Brother in Black," and no man has spoken nobler words in defense of the colored man and no one has more fully the sympathy of the more intelligent of the Negro race. Any improvement in the relations of the races in the South must begin with the church, and perhaps no class of Christians are prepared to do so much, if they so desire, as those of the M. E. Church South.

An alderman of the same Democratic faith as Mayor Cregier brought a resolution into the Chicago Council meeting last week asking "his honor" to enforce the laws against gambling or resign. The proposal failed by a few votes in some sixty of securing a consideration. The persistent efforts of the Daily News, backed by such a sentiment among the aldermen, have forced the Mayor to make another pretended menace of the gambling dens. But the whole proceeding is so plainly Masonic that it is amazing every honest citizen does not see it with abhorrence of the system that has given shape to the moral character of the Chicago mayor.

A United States official in St. Petersburg has written denying the reports of prison severities in Russia which have chilled the sympathy for that nation in American breasts as we have read Kennan's reports. It is a sufficient answer to point to the pages of the Century magazine regularly "blacked" out by Russian officials before it can be read in that empire. But it is a most gratifying bit of intelligence to read that in response to the personal appeal of the Queen of Denmark, the Czar has promised to inquire into the reported outrages in Siberia, that guilty officials shall be punished and measures shall be framed to relax the rigors of the transportation system.

The teachers of the country meet soon in their National Educational Association at St. Paul. After the program was filled up and printed, some Jesuit notion took possession of the St. Paul local committee that the Catholic Archbishop Ireland, representative of the foreign church whose pope wishes to be a king and whose influence has been uniformly thrown against the American public school,—that this man to have a place. They began writing here and there, and finally without authority announced that an hour and twenty minutes would be given the archbishop to give his view of the American common school, which he is hoping to destroy. Because the officers of the Association properly object, the hue and cry is raised that the "distinguished representative of a great religious body" is about to be "snubbed." The prelate is at perfect liberty to get up his own meeting and address it. Lately this same Archbishop Ireland was scoffing at the Protestant churches for their attitude toward the Negro, while he boldly proclaimed the Roman church the friend of the black race. How great a friend, pray, when our country was bleeding at every vein because of slavery and the Pope of Rome was writing letters to Jeff. Davis to encourage him in his Satanic work! What should our teachers want of Archbishop Ireland?

The discussion of the question of Christian Unity at the late meeting of the Presbyterian General Assembly, shows that the evil of division, with its attendant waste of moral and material resources, has arrested the attention of this most conservative body of Christians. The report of the committee to which the subject was referred, deprecates the evil as inimical to true religion. It accepts, almost without dissent, the proposal of the House of Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal church as to a common basis for organic union of all American Christians, and suggests as a remedy for religious rivalry that there shall be "more of denominational comity." This is all very well as far as it goes; but at best, it is but a temporary expedient, and not in any sense a remedy. So long as the church is divided into denominations it is inevitable there will be rivalries and all the attendant evils of sectarian strife. It is the natural fruit of divisions. When we can go back to Apostolic usage, and all the Christians in a given locality come together as the one church of that locality, we shall have reached the more radical remedy.

The Portuguese government has relinquished its claim to large districts on the Zambesi river in southeast Africa to England, and large grants have been made to a British company of a region embracing nearly 300,000 square miles, said to be very rich in soil and mines. The company has power to abolish slavery and the liquor traffic and missionary work will be entirely free. There are three British companies now formed, the East Africa, the South Africa and the African Lakes Company. The East Africa company has issued a proclamation, which is indorsed by the native governor, declaring that henceforth no natives of tribes connected by treaty with the company will be recognized as slaves, and, further, that such natives will obtain their freedom without the payment of compensation. The South Africa company is pledged by its charter to labor for the extinction of the slave trade and to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquor to the natives. Had our Government joined with the European representatives when the Congo Free State was founded, the liquor curse which is swallowing up Western Africa in its horrors might have been much abated if not entirely suppressed.

Dr. J. E. Roy of the American Missionary Association addressed the assembly at the National Cemetery at Raleigh, Tenn., on memorial day. His speech is published in the Memphis papers which comment upon its fairness. The fact stated in it that the colored man has over $200,000,000 worth of property in the South is an evidence that in many regards his rights are respected.

"We are doing our duty by 'the brother in black,'" says the editor of the Commercial, "and all we ask is that he and we shall be let alone to continue to work out our joint destiny in time by means of schools and churches." If education and religion were the only influences used by the whites upon the blacks there would be no interference from any quarter. Those God-given agencies ameliorate every hard and grinding condition of life. But when the old condition of bondage is threatened, and the Confederate flag, the emblem of slavery, is shaken in our faces, we must protest. But why should Dr. Roy and the Memphis press approve the fraternizing of Union and Confederate veterans in their ex-military capacity? Is it not enough to meet as American citizens? The war is twenty-five years gone. Why keep up so sharply the old war distinctions? We say these two opposing streams are now united in a noble river. We gain nothing by keeping up the old forms and organizations. So long as we do we shall see Confederate flags. We want but one. The Stars and Stripes means one country and one citizenship.

HIS OWN GOOD TIME.

BY VICTORIA ALEXANDRA BUCK.

Though thy way may be so dreary,
In his own good time;
Hearts will be no longer weary
In his own good time;
So we wait his magic word,—
O the silence of the Lord!
He will come, he will not tarry
In his own good time.

Peace that floweth like a river,
In his own good time,
Shall be ours for aye and ever
In his own good time;
Hopes may wither like the grass,
He will bring it all to pass,
We shall meet no more to sever
In his own good time.

'Neath the power which he can render
In his own good time,
Hearts will glow with love so tender
In his own good time.
Though our weary feet must tread
Through the city of the dead,
We will climb those hills of splendor
In his own good time.

Oh! those blasted skies will brighten
In his own good time,
And our weary hearts will lighten
In his own good time;
So we wait his magic word,—
O the silence of the Lord!
When our sin-stained robes will whiten
In his own good time.

REVIVAL OF SECRET POLITICAL SOCIETIES.

BY REV. A. B. CURTIS.

The last issue of the Pittsburgh, Pa., Weekly Post, which lies upon my table, contains an editorial that would be of interest to Cynosure readers. It bears the above caption, and coming as it does from the secular side of the matter, possesses especial weight. The editorial is not opposed to secret societies on Scriptural or religious grounds. Indeed, the editor leans toward the opinion that, inside proper limits, they possess considerable educational and social value. These are his opening words:

"There is a great rage now for secret societies, and their number is legion, devoted to all imaginable purposes, patriotic, benevolent, literary, labor, educational, etc. In fact it would be difficult to mark any special line of human endeavor that has not its representative secret organization, and there are few citizens, especially in the cities and larger towns, who do not belong to some one of them. As they are mostly for laudable purposes, and there is a certain education in people meeting together in an orderly organization for mutual benefit, no objection can be made to these secret societies, and it would amount to little what objection should be made, for they will run their day."

The question of better or worse in this statement is not discussed. Only a certain education is claimed for them. That the secret part is wholly unnecessary as such the editor may or may not assent to. In the remark that these secret societies will "run their day," I think the writer is correct. Most societies organized on the secret basis are transient. They arise and shine for a season, then pass away. They seem to be thickest and flourish best in ages of national corruption and downfall, if we may draw inferences at all from the history of the past. Whether they are the cause of this corruption, or are simply an attendant circumstance, may well be a matter of dispute. The president of Wheaton College once said that if by a motion of the hand he could abolish secret societies he would not do so, for the evil would still remain in the hearts of men.

Now here is an editor of a large and rich paper saying practically the same thing. Get the evil out of our heads and hearts, and the devil behind the oath has had his day.

It is the outcome even more than the principle of the secret society that the editor, in the article referred to, condemns. The ideal set forth is not the worthiest, and the means for the attainment of that ideal are more than often questionable.

That there is an increase and a "spread" of fraternities to-day, some laudable, others otherwise, there seems to be no doubt. But there is a worse feature than this mere spread, as the Post ably points out in the following:

"In the spread of secret societies we notice that some of them are nearing the danger line of politics, certain to breed dissension, and ultimately, after a deal of mischief has been done, to break them down. Societies organized for alleged patriotic or political purposes gradually drift to a partisan basis, for they always have in their membership shrewd and cunning workers whose interests lie in that direction. There is no excuse in this country for secret political societies. The great merit of our political system is that it invites, as a duty, open political discussion and co operation. A secret society having political objects in view, no matter how deeply sugar-coated with patriotic politics, is a danger and menace. It challenges the organization of other secret societies for other political ends, and if it were to go on our political life would be honey-combed with organizations directed by interested and unscrupulous parties moving in secret, striking in the dark and wielding a dangerous power. All such movements are un-American and unworthy the support or confidence of intelligent and patriotic citizens."

 KISSING THE IMAGE OF BAAL.

BY ELDER NATHAN CALLENDER.

Baal worship, it seems, is rampant in Christendom even in this day. Elijah's experience with idolatry is thrilling, instructive and painfully sad. Even after the test of the false gods, as given in 1st Kings, 18th, and the ready shout of the people, "The Lord, he is the God," we find Elijah frightened into the wilderness by the threatenings of Jezebel, and the relapse of the Israelites into the old ways of idolatry.

To what extent our Zion is subject to Baalism in this country, is an exceedingly interesting question. It seems that in the great cities, if not in all the cities of the land, Baal has five altars to every two for Christ, if, in charity, those which claim to be Christian altars are conceded to be such. But the painful truth stares us in the face that, while the lodge is inclined to mix its worship somewhat with Christian truth, the churches, on the other hand, are inclined to coalesce with this modern Baalism. To this statement only a few honorable exceptions exist. Satan is endeavoring to hasten the consummation of this mixture of Baalism and Christianity so as to make the church utterly harmless to his kingdom, while the very gall of the pit is so mixed up with church life as to produce and perpetuate spiritual death all around. To accomplish this dire result, the most wily measures are continually employed to seduce the pastors of the churches to bow the knee and to kiss the image of Baal, and that with amazing success.

Now, see here, Mr. Preacher, is the talk, our church is filled up with orders,—Masons, Odd-fellows, Foresters, Red Men, etc., etc. Now, sir, if you expect to stay with us, and get your salary, you will have to keep the right side of the lodges [just as if lodges have a right side]. So now, Mr. Preacher, the Red Men begin to need airing up, and we expect to get from our lodges, where we may be allowed to say the air is anything but pure, into a better element. Now, dear Mr. Preacher, we have unanimously chosen you to run the fan, in the church, of course, and make our regalia flutter in the church breezes. But, peradventure you belong to none of our orders, you can just run the fan for us. Anyway, you can say: "I don't know much or anything about this order. But I know no evil of it, and see much that is magnificently grand, noble," etc. All you need to do is to sanction the order. Thus he prostitutes his sacred calling at Baal's feet for the cause of American heathenism, and kisses the image of the beast.

Here we raise a query. Will the leaders of those Baal worshipers concede as much to the church, as its ministers do to these orders? No, never! Their plea is, that the churches are inadequate to the work of charity, and, hence, the necessity of such orders. Look at it. Christ's institution, the church, is insufficient, and so Masons, Odd-fellows, etc., must be the agents to do what God intends his church to do. Are God's true children ready to concede this? Those conservative ministers who are willing to thus bow the knee to Baal's image should be informed while Odd-fellows do not devote more than 33 per cent. of their funds to relief, Masons devote only about 20 per cent. to what they call charity. Compare these facts with the work of the various missionary societies which contribute 93 per cent of all their receipts to the objects for which the funds are given, leaving only 7 per cent. to pay the agents of the societies. Let the real beneficence of the church be candidly compared with this selfish and false charity of the lodges, and the stupendous frauds of the latter are apparent to any candid mind. Let the millions that are lavished by the parades of the lodges, go to its proper uses and you will hear no more of lodge charity.

By the unrighteous sanctions of the clergy and the consent of the church itself, the lodges are robbing God and the church of all its resources; and then, to cap the climax, they turn and censure the people of God for neglecting the poor. Shame on them, and greater shame on the weak men who stand in our pulpits to-day!

On the 30th day of March, 1890, there stood up in two of the churches of Scranton, dedicated to Christianity, two ministers of Christ (?), one to laud Odd-fellowship, the other to praise the "Red Men,"—sham Indians in the togger of the red men of the forest, sham Red Men in a Christian church, with a Christian minister to pronounce a eulogy! I confess I cannot imagine a more ridiculous scene.

God measures men by their moral qualities and by no other standard. Conceive of a man with all knowledge, but too weak to stand up, as Joshua, Caleb and Daniel did, against popular sins, and you have men too weak to fill a Christian pulpit. When God looks down from heaven in a time of general apostacy, and weighs the souls of men in the balance, he makes no mistakes on account of wealth, position, or social standing. In times of idolatry, bowing the knee to, or kissing the image of Baal, was the test act. It would seem that Elijah, depressed and discouraged, verily thought the people had all gone back, notwithstanding the late revival in which they repeated with so much emphasis, "The Lord, he is the God." He did not know at the moment when he was smitten with the sulks, in his cave-home, and praying to die, that God had shut the gate of death to him, and that while he had his chariot of fire ready to be drawn up to heaven, he was, even then, pastor of the grandest of churches of 7,000 members, not one of whom had defiled his garments by worshiping Baal. No American pastor can boast of such a church as this to-day. And no church can boast of such a pastor as Elias, though "a man of like passions," with us. How few churches have been blessed with such men as McFall, Countee, and their coadjutors, in this conflict of the nineteenth century. How supremely sad that the pastors have succumbed to Baalism in the lodges. How many of them can be counted among God's reserves? Are there now 7,000 of the tried and true? We feel like closing with the petition, "Help, Lord, for the godly man ceaseth and the faithful fail from among the children of men."

 "THE WORKINGMAN'S COLLEGE."

BY REV. W. F. CRAFTS.

Four times seven is twenty-eight, that is, one-seventh of the days in twenty-eight years is four years—a college course. He who has missed a "liberal education" in the schools, may make up for it by well-spent Sabbaths, in one-third of a well-rounded life, and still have left, in his remaining years, enough Sabbath time for thought and self-improvement for two post-graduate courses as long as the first.

The British-American Sabbath may, therefore, be called the Workingman's College, without which the toiler would not have time enough for the culture of intelligence and of conscientiousness to participate in government, but would remain, like the perpetual infants of Continental despotisms, content to take childish Sunday amusements as substitutes for civil liberty.

If the Sabbath were not so valuable for the body and heart and soul, its educational value alone would vindicate its high place in society. As an educator it is only second to the public schools, if second at all. Certainly it is their best supplement. There are few men of fifty-six who have spent eight full years in school, but every man of that age has had eight years of Sabbaths, which have afforded opportunity for manifold culture.

Many of our most influential men had little schooling, but have found unconscious education in regular attendance at church, and in quiet reading and conversation at home. He who spends the Sabbath in "pleasure exertions," spends it in the worst of company, with ignorance and vice, from which he can learn nothing good. He who gives the day to the church and the library has noblest companions, and learns without effort the rarest wisdom.

Even from an intellectual standpoint, the Bible contains the oldest history, the sublimest poetry, the noblest ethics, and no man can be said to have a good education who is not familiar with that Book which came into such lives as Shakespeare's and Webster's and Ruskin's and Goethe's as the mightiest of intellectual influences. In a score of ways the Sabbath brings the influence of this Book to bear on the lives of all men who spend the Sabbath as the Maker of both the Sabbath and man directed when he made one for the other.

Where are the great men who attribute whatever is admired in their literary style to their reading the gossip of a Sunday newspaper, as a substitute for the Gospel? The gossip of Sunday visitors is also a discord in this family day. The father, in many instances, has scant opportunity outside of this day to fulfill one of his highest functions, that of teacher to his own household in highest things. There is sweetest music in that sentence: "Come, ye children, hearken unto me; I will teach you the fear of the Lord."

But even to those who neither give nor receive direct religious instruction, a Sabbath protected against both toil and dissipation is an educator, both in knowledge and in conscientiousness, that helps to protect the citizens against both the sophistries and bribes of the demagogue; and so a Sunday law is consistent with liberty on the same grounds as more direct laws of compulsory education.

That sixty per cent of the students attending the Toronto Medical College are pledged total abstinents is a fact in which the friends of temperance may well rejoice. In no direction is the change of sentiment on this question more marked than in the different opinion entertained by the medical fraternity now as compared with a quarter of a century ago. Now the testimony of those, who of all men are best qualified to judge of the effects of alcohol upon the human system, is overwhelmingly in favor of the practice of total abstinence. Nor can this fact fail to influence the rising generation, provided they are made acquainted with it. If the doctors, whom the boys regard as oracles in matters pertaining to the body, pronounce against alcoholic beverages they will be led to view these drinks with great distrust. In this circumstance lies one of the greatest advantages of temperance instruction in schools. Temperance people have reason to be encouraged by the progress their cause is making. Let there be no slackening of efforts along the line of moral suasion.—Toronto Truth.

GOOD TEMPLARS DANCING.

BY WALLACE J. GLADWIN.

"Oh, but the Templars don't allow dancing." So they say to me when I give some of my reasons for leaving their lodge. But the fact stands firm that under the Right Grand Lodge of England the I. O. G. T. have theatricals, dancing, card-playing and other compromises with the world, the flesh and so forth. I stuck to the dear old lodge to the bitter end. Yes, it was bitter. They had an "open installation," and in the program was a theatrical mock minstrel farce. The "screaming farce" of the evening was a thing so decidedly vulgar that I would not wish to detail it in your paper. The cause of Christ was shamed because that Christians held to such low nonsense. I withdrew at once. And I soon saw many more and deeper reasons for withdrawing.

If American Good Templars are behind their English comrades in the Terpsicore degree, they will not long remain so. Read the following from a San Francisco daily, and notice the undertone of contempt which the newspaper has for the hypocrisy of the lodge.

I know prominent workers in the W. C. T. U. and other temperance methods, who feel deeply that grand cause of total abstinence and prohibition is being greatly hindered by the complications of secret lodges. "Have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them," is the command of God to all his people.

"THEY DANCED AFTER ALL.

"OAKLAND, May 26.—The Good Templars held their entertainment, and they danced after it, in spite of rules to the contrary. This is how it was all done, so that no one could say a word against it, even though the rules do prohibit it: After the entertainment had been concluded the president adjourned the meeting, as far as the Good Templars were concerned, but he announced that the Bonny Braves, a social organization, would have charge of the remainder of the program. The remainder of the program consisted of dancing, but that was not the fault of the president, and he could not help it if the members of the Bonny Braves were all members of the Good Templars. It was not the president's fault, but the facts existed nevertheless. Thus the members of Athens Lodge of Good Templars solved a very important question for the other lodges of the order, and it is expected that numerous organizations of Bonny Braves will be formed in connection with the various Good Templar lodges."

PEN PICTURES OF GERMAN LIFE.

FROM OUR ARTIST FRIEND IN MUNICH.

I forgot to write the last time about the "foot-washing" I saw before Easter in the palace here, when the Prince Regent washed the feet of twelve old men, "beggars," each of whom was more than 90 years old, and several were 92 or 93. They were selected from all parts of Bavaria, and are glad to come, for after they have had their feet washed they get a present of 40 marks ($10) and a new suit of clothes. I went with my scholars, who had a pass from their father, the Court Marshal, and were allowed to bring me with them. The old men were all dressed in plum-colored gowns and caps, and were seated in a row on a raised platform. The Prince Regent passed along before them with a towel, his eldest son, the Crown Prince, carried a basin of water, into which he dipped his hand and sprinkled a few drops of water over the bare feet; then he wiped it away with the towel and proceeded to the next. The whole court was present to see the performance, and the whole ceremony was as pompous as it could be made. There used to be a feast given after the foot-washing, when the Prince Regent and the Crown Prince waited on the beggars. But so many of the old men died of indigestion after eating the rich food that the present of money was substituted for the dinner.

Buffalo Bill and his troop of Indians and wild horses have made a sensation here. Every day the grounds where he exhibits are filled with nearly ten thousand people. Some people go two or three times. And all the little children in the streets play nothing but "Indian." They make themselves wigwams and tomahawks, and their mothers are frightened lest they may scalp each other, really, with their pocket-knives. The Prince Regent nearly got killed by one of the wild horses, and was saved by an Indian who threw himself between them. That Indian now wears a broad gold bracelet which the Regent gave him. The three princesses whom I taught last year were allowed to invite the Indians to visit them one afternoon in the palace, and enjoyed it immensely. They gave the "red men" little toys and sugar eggs, etc., with which they seemed very much pleased. Indeed, the Indians were invited to most of the palaces, and must have had quite a fine time here if they did not find it tiresome to be looked at so much. It is odd to come to Europe to see American Indians and buffalos. I never saw any at home. They have made a great sensation in Paris and Vienna, and crowds go every day here.

It has snowed here several times this month [April] already, but seems inclined to be spring now for good and all. The trees are leaving out, and the pie-plant on the lawns before the palaces and public buildings is beginning to look like "sauce," only we cannot get any of it. Apples cost eight cents a pound, and are bad at that.

The Duchess Carl has gone to Meran again. She is taking lessons of a London professor who says he can teach people in five lessons to remember the contents of every book they read, with all the dates, as long as they live, etc. She was getting up a class, and Countess Geldern wanted me to join it, too, but I can remember about all I need to know, and I will wait and see if she and the Duchess perform any remarkable feats of memory before I try it.

NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION.

On the 14th of June there will be a joint Congressional hearing before the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, and House Committee on the Alcoholic Liquor Traffic, on the joint resolution for National Constitutional Prohibition. This matter has been pending in every Congress since the 44th—nearly fourteen years—without reaching a vote in either body. It was favorably reported by the Senate Committee in the 49th and 50th Congresses, and a minority report in its favor was returned by the House Committee to which it was referred in the 50th Congress. The committees, at the joint hearing, are to be addressed by members of the "National Prohibitory Amendment Committee for Congressional Work." This committee consists of the general officers of the several national prohibition societies of the United States, the general officers of the National Executive Committee of the Prohibition party, and the National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation and Petitions.

The appearance of this committee at the hearing in June is in furtherance of the "Plan of Canvass" contained in the National Prohibitory Amendment Guide, of which Ada M. Bittenbender, the National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation and Petitions, is the author. This manual was issued last November. It is non-partisan. The canvassing under it will be non-partisan. The local canvassing, which is mainly to register National Constitutional prohibitionists and to proclaim their number from time to time, to lawmakers and the country at large, is to be carried on by committees to be known as National Prohibitory Amendment Committees for Local Work. These committees are composed of representatives of the various prohibition organizations in a canvassing district consisting of one school district, except in large cities where the school district is divided into several canvassing districts. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union having made this Amendment a special line of work, having county and district as well as local and State organizations through which to carry it on, and having a suitable department, that of Legislation and Petitions, ready to do its bidding, the initiatory steps for the organization of the committees and the responsibility for executing a part of the system of official reporting are committed to its care.

Hon. Henry W. Blair, author of the Amendment, who introduced it in the 44th Congress, and in every Congress since, upon reading the manual, wrote Mrs. Bittenbender: "I have just completed the examination of your National Prohibitory Amendment Guide. I think it just perfect and desire warmly to congratulate you upon the success of your really great work. Much in little, it is like the book of tactics by which volunteer armies learn to fight great wars like disciplined veterans. This book has long been needed in order to properly organize and unify the temperance work which bears upon national legislation, and I feel sure that we shall soon see the best results from its use by the workers and among the people at large." (The Guide is published by the Woman's Temperance Publishing Association, 161 La Salle Street, Chicago. Price, twenty-five cents.)

COMPULSORY EDUCATION.

VARIOUS OPINIONS.

The bill for the compulsory education law was submitted in December, 1888, to the State Teachers' Association, and after being fully and freely considered was unanimously approved. It was also approved by the Schoolmasters' Club at the same time, and by other educational bodies. Since the passage of the law it has been carefully considered by educational men, and in December, 1889, it was unanimously approved by the largest meeting of the State Teachers' Association ever held in Illinois. So far as one may judge, it is very cordially supported by the friends of public schools in the State.

For many years the educators of the State have been impressed with the necessity of some law of this kind. In 1872, Dr. Newton Bateman urged upon the Legislature the duty of enacting such a statute. The State Superintendent of New York, Judge Draper, a distinguished jurist as well as educator, urges upon the Legislature of that State a similar measure.

Such laws exist in those States in which education has been most successfully carried on. This is notably the case in Massachusetts. In the State of Wisconsin, the Bennett law, so called, has recently been enacted in response to the public-school sentiment of the State. And it is to be noticed that these laws are received with more favor from year to year as the benefits secured by them become known.

In general it may be said that the foremost public school men in the country favor this law. And they favor it because it gives promise of an increase of intelligence among the people. It is thought a wise thing to secure for children what may be called their educational rights. It is thought that a free state fails to do its duty when it allows any of the children born in it to grow up in ignorance.—Public School Journal.

I want to say emphatically that the compulsory education law ought not to be repealed. I would be glad to see incorporated into it all necessary amendments to secure the rights of citizens and the reasonable rights of parents. But the aim of the law is good, and it has worked well. There are 11,714 school districts in the State of Illinois. It is said that in sixteen, of perhaps the smallest of these, there has been some difficulty in the execution of the law. That is no larger proportion of injustice—if injustice has been done—than might arise in the execution of any law. In the large cities the law has been executed in a humane and considerate, but very effective way.—Richard Edwards, State Supt. of Schools in Illinois.

The opinion of Rev. G. A. Mueller of Schaumburg, Ill., one of the leading centers of Lutheranism:

"We are not opposed to a reasonable compulsory school law of Illinois. Parents who neglect their sacred duty to give their children a good instruction should be forced by law to send her children to any private or public school.

"Furthermore, we are not opposed to the English language. It has been, is now and always will be, our aim and our own interest to provide in our parochial school for the best instruction in the official language of the country; but we decidedly oppose some of the provisions of the present compulsory law, named in your letter, because they interfere with our parochial school, parental, civil, and religious rights, and clothe every school board with such an authority as will legalize nearly every act of interference with private schools, as a careful study of the working of the law will make evident."

The members of the Northern Illinois District of the German Evangelical Synod of North America are out in a written protest against the Illinois School law. The declaration of opposition is divided into six parts, each one detailing a specific objection. The signers start out by saying that they are not opposed to the acquisition of the English language, but on the contrary desire that their descendants may understand it thoroughly. They claim that they are not hostile to the public schools, and that compulsory education has their hearty support. The signers then set forth the lack of religious training in the common schools as the ground for the establishment of parochial educational institutions. They claim that the school laws enacted by the Legislature in May, 1889, are unconstitutional, and will deprive parents of the right to educate their children as they see fit, and, if enforced, will not only destroy the parochial schools but Christian congregations. This state of things, the synod through its representatives says, it will fight in connection with other suffering religious denominations, both in court and at the ballot-box. Before this becomes a necessity the synod trusts that the obnoxious laws will be repealed. The signing committee for the synod consists of the Rev. Messrs. P. Goebel, G. Koch, and C. Schaeb of Pentone, Beecher, and Mokena, Ill., respectively.—Tribune, May 30.

The State convention of German Catholics at Milwaukee planned a State political organization, which is outlined in the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

"The adoption of the Bennett law and the growing disposition toward paternalism have convinced us of the necessity of the organization of the Catholic citizens of this State for the promotion of our constitutional rights. While we do not approve of any preference for the one or the other political party on the part of our association, we nevertheless believe that inaction in the coming State election would be a wrong to ourselves, to our children, and to our association. Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we perfect an organization for the following purposes:

"First—To cause the repeal of the Bennett law.

"Second—To resist any attempt to infringe upon religious liberty on the part of the coming Legislature. To carry out the foregoing objects an executive committee shall be appointed, consisting of twelve members from the State at large, seven of whom are to be residents of Milwaukee, and also one member for each Congressional district and which shall have the power to take all necessary steps for the consummation of the above objects."

At a meeting of German Lutheran citizens held recently and representing thirty-five Lutheran congregations of Chicago and suburbs, each congregation being represented by a committee of five, the following were among the resolutions adopted:

"It is not a fact that the German Lutherans are opposed to a reasonable compulsory school law. They do not object to all children of a suitable age being compelled by law, if necessary, to attend school. They want no truants. If parents refuse to send their children to school let them be compelled to do their duty.

"The Lutherans have no desire that the public schools and other educational institutions of the State should be disturbed, much less abolished; on the contrary, they consider them a political necessity and a general elementary education one of the safeguards of our public institutions.

"They cheerfully pay their taxes for public institutions of learning, and have again and again emphatically protested against appropriating one cent of these taxes for private or denominational schools.

"They are by no means opposed to the English language. (A large number of their lay and clerical members are American-born citizens.) It has been, is now, and always will be their aim and their own interest to provide in their parochial schools for the best instruction in the official language of this country. But they decidedly oppose some of the provisions of the present compulsory school law, which not only interfere with their parental, civil and religious rights and liberties, but clothe every public school-board with such authority as will legalize nearly every act of interference with private schools, as a careful study of the wording of the law will make evident.

"A WHITE RIBBONER'S" VIEWS.

Having had an opportunity to discuss the school law with many lay members of German Lutheran churches, and with other Germans who by their papers were led to believe the school law to be prompted by an alleged American hatred of the German element, I have learned that the only objection to the law consists in the possibility of its being construed against the right of parents or guardians to send their children to schools of their own selection, and of its being used as a pretext for the exercise of authority over private and parochial schools on the part of local school boards. There is no objection on the part of any parents to the demand of the present law that certain elementary branches shall be taught in the English language, although some teachers, clergymen, and publishers, for reasons of their own, oppose this provision more strenuously than any other. To the latter class of objectors no particular attention should be paid, as the law is to be for the benefit of the children, and, therefore, the amendment to the law may be safely confined to meeting the objections first stated.

With this object in view I take the liberty of offering the following amendment to the compulsory law, in the firm conviction that it will be acceptable to all friends of universal education. Strike out in section 1 the last sentence, beginning with these words, "but no school shall," and insert in its stead the following: "Provided, however, that nothing contained in this act shall be construed against the right of parents or guardians to send their children to any regularly established day school of their own selection, whether located in the district where they reside or not, in which school the reading and writing of the English language, and arithmetic, geography, and the history of the United States are taught in the English language; the affidavit of the principal or superintendent of such school as to the attendance of such child or children and their receiving such instruction during no less than sixteen weeks of each year to be satisfactory evidence of the proper schooling of such children to the board of education or directors taking cognizance of the non-attendance of such children upon the public schools of their district."—Theo. Gestefeld, Editor der Beobachter, in the Daily News.

NEW ENGLAND LETTER.

Hoodlumism at Harvard—Shall American children be taught history—The military spirit in our public schools—Prohibition notes—A Portland bar.

"Cambridge on the Charles"—that crooked little river whose tortuous, winding course mightily resembles the policy of the faithless Stuarts whose name it bears—has suffered much in times past from college hoodlums, though the fair name of the institution to which it owes its celebrity has suffered more; but no such outrageous and utterly stupid piece of vandalism has ever before been perpetrated as that which followed the base ball match between Harvard and Yale last Saturday. Hundreds of dollars will not repair the damage done, as the paint has left indelible stains in the costly stone work over which it was so freely daubed. The statue of John Harvard in its coating of crimson—Reverend Master John Harvard I suppose they called the gentle, consumptive clergyman before fame robbed him of his titles, who died in 1638, and left the, for those days, munificent sum of nearly £800 to the institution which bears his name—may well blush with shame that there could be found any within its walls who would thus wantonly deface their own college property. The under graduates have held a meeting to denounce the outrage, and it is said that the faculty have already some clue to the perpetrators. Their punishment already must have been severe if they read the papers, and feel, as they cannot help feeling, the lash of public scorn.

One good result of the late outbreak of hoodlumism will be to bring athletic sports which take so much time and strength that ought to be bestowed on study into disrepute. Sufficient amusement and relaxation can be had along the line of regular college work. Wellesley manages to get along very well with her boating crew and lawn tennis, and generally contrives to mix a very decided literary flavor with her amusements. For instance, once a year is held a mock session of the English Parliament, which is conducted, even to the dress and seating of the members, as near as possible like that of the real House. They wear dress coats, silk hats, with the proper sprinkling of wigs and gowns, and display a knowledge of the English constitution and the Irish question that could not be easily paralleled, I imagine, in many men's colleges. And yet these very girls, when they leave their alma mater, can have no voice in their country's affairs, although it is to be hoped they understand them at least as well as they do the continually changing chess-board of European politics.

"Everywhere among the school children"—this is the statement of a Boston daily—"there has been developed within the past few weeks, not only a commendable feeling of patriotism, but an astonishing amount of military love and lore." This is not pleasant reading for a member of the peace society, and even those who are not cranks on the subject, but hold to the old-fashioned idea of modest girlhood, must be pained to see school-girls going through the same military drill as the boys, and even wearing soldiers' caps, and otherwise playing the role of young Amazons. America has had no use for the female furies of Paris in the past, and it is to be hoped she will have none in the future, even if the worst prophecies are realized, and she becomes the battleground of sects and classes. This degrading of girlhood, this despoiling it of its fresh modesty, ought to pain every thoughtful mind to see. Let the W. C. T. U., through its department of peace and arbitration, take up the matter, for it is one that lies most legitimately within its province.

The arrests for drunkenness in Boston since May 20, the day when the new law went into effect, have shown a decided falling off, which is bad for the liquor-seller's argument—that it will increase drunkenness. The Police Board estimates that Boston will get a revenue of about $1,000,000 this year from her liquor licenses. "Woe to him that buildeth a town with blood and stablisheth a city by iniquity." Probably the Police Board did not take into account this old-fashioned text when they made their "estimate."

Rev. Thomas Dixon tells in the Christian Mirror about the so-called failure of prohibition in Maine. He took a day and went through the city of Portland, which is said to have so many active bar-rooms. Yet in all his rounds he saw not one drunken man, and in the City Hall learned there had been but one arrest for drunkenness in twenty-four hours.

It is a ruse of the National Liquor-sellers' Association to keep sham bars—glass bottles filled with colored water set up for a show to deceive the verdant; but this is the outfit of a Portland bar-room as it actually exists, underground or in some outbuilding, a rubber tube connecting it with headquarters. First: an old tin sprinkler, such as was used fifty years ago for sprinkling the floor; and stale beer loose in the aforesaid sprinkler, in which sit two black bottles, one filled with gin or rum, the other with whisky. Second: a tub of water heavily charged with chemicals and put under the counter or under some box, in which the tin sprinkler is placed. Of course, in the event of a raid the bar-keeper turns the sprinkler upside down, and the chemically-prepared water kills the scent of the beer, while the two bottles are easily taken care of. The most radical temperance crank would be satisfied with a prohibitory law in Boston that reduced the rum-sellers to a tin sprinkler, two black bottles and a tub of dirty water!

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, June 4, 1890.

At the beginning of every new Congress a solemn compact is made with some caterer to keep the restaurant of the House of Representatives during the two sessions. The Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds has the making of this contract, and one of its express conditions invariably is that no intoxicating liquors shall be sold. The invariable practice of the caterer has been to sell every kind of intoxicating liquor that can be thought of. The caterer is required to furnish sample bills of his fare and specimens of his art before getting the contract; and among other things it is said he has invariably been required to furnish samples of his intoxicating liquors. A week ago Mr. Reed, the Speaker of the House, ordered that no more liquor traffic should be carried on in the House restaurant. The moral people and the temperance people of the community were, of course, very much gratified with the Speaker's new departure, and many were the compliments he received regarding his strength of character, his moral courage, his quality of meaning what he says, and his determination to put his order into execution.

But, alas! for that order, like the contract referred to above, it seems it is to be interpreted in a Pickwickian sense. It simply meant that hereafter gentlemen will be expected to sit down to their drinks, instead of standing up at the bar, and that their whisky will be served to them in tea-cups, after the custom of some years ago, instead of the conventional liquor glasses so unmistakable to the eyes of the passers-by.

On Monday the Senate discussed in an interesting manner the canteen provision of the Army Appropriation bill. The conference report is to the effect that no intoxicating drinks shall be supplied in canteens or in traders' stores in States or Territories where prohibition legislation exists. Senator Plumb, of Kansas, suggested that the movement against the canteen system was in the interest of the post traders. Senator Hale, of Maine, replied to Mr. Plumb that the movement against the canteen system was an honest and serious one, and did not originate with the post trader who was going to lose his profits. The Senator from Kansas still insisted that there was where it came from. Senator Dawes, of Massachusetts, said then that Mr. Plumb's argument as to the profits from the sale of liquor coming back to the soldier reminded him of the old toper who bought a barrel of whisky, and who every time that he took a drink charged himself six cents for it, saying, when he had emptied the barrel, that he had made more profit from that barrel of whisky than from his farm. The conference report was finally agreed to by a vote of 35 to 8.

Senator Stewart made some very grave charges in the Senate recently against the director of the Geological Survey, Maj. Powell, and there are those who think another Congressional investigation ought to be undertaken if the Senator believes what he said to be true. Congress is called upon annually to appropriate hundreds of thousands of dollars for the maintenance of the Geological Survey, and the latter is responsible for very important duties. If these duties are not faithfully performed in spending these large sums of money the country wants to know it.

REFORM NEWS.

FROM THE GENERAL AGENT.

Boston, May 31, 1890.

This has been anniversary week with many of the local societies in and near Boston. I have been occupied with callers and work at such of these meetings as were willing to give place to anti-lodge literature. On Sabbath a good congregation in Bro. Hood's church gave diligent heed to the things spoken; and on Monday, after having packed my valise for a campaign outside Boston, I learned of a gathering of Earnest Christians at Crescent Beach and decided to make one among them.

It was the closing session of the Lay College for the training of Christian workers, under the auspices of the Evangelical (not denominational) Alliance. Over a hundred were present, and among them I note, as indicating the fraternal, unsectarian character of the meeting, Dr. Bates, M. E., chairman; O. P. Gifford, Baptist; James M. Gray, Episcopal; A. H. Plumb, Congregational; H. L. Hastings, Christian. I mention these not as honorable above their brethren, but as well known to the public, and whose presence at once suggests the oneness of Christ's body. I have attended similar meetings at this place before, and to me it was exceedingly gratifying to note the favorable change in the few months in the bearing of these brethren towards our cause. Although no place was found for me to speak a word from the platform, I could not have been more cordially received by the brethren, who gave every opportunity to circulate our literature, Pres. Bixby volunteering to distribute Moody and Pentecost tracts to the students himself. I obtained at this meeting names of three pastors willing to co-operate, of whom I had not before known.

Returning, I took in two miles of streets and visited four missions, distributing "Killed Without Inquest." The Home Guard so far is proving a success, and the management, unable to fill orders for back numbers, has decided to increase the next issue, trusting the Lord's stewards for means.

On the 29th I attended the anniversary of the N. E. Evangelical Association, held in old Park Church. I will not speak of personal and exceptional instances of friendly encounters with prominent members of this body, but will say with a grateful heart that the whole tone of the meeting was of warm and cordial sympathy. Brethren have come to expect me when they meet, and frequently say, "What have you new to-day?" Dr. Gray stopped for a word in the vestry of old Park, and I said to him, "Doctor, I am getting nearer to you brethren than I was, and nearer to the platform and an audience in Boston than I was; and, by the grace of God, I am not going to 'fail or be discouraged' until I get a hearing on the lodge conspiracy." The doctor laughed and replied, "That's the grit that wins."

Yesterday Boston, like other cities, was hilarious over the victories of the late war, and apparently unmindful of the extreme wickedness that so incensed divine Justice as to send upon us a scourge that filled eighty Southern graveyards with the patriotic dead of the North. I attended an all-day consecration meeting for a short time at Bethany Mission, and was much refreshed in spirit. Miss Richards, though quite worn and out of health, entered the room with her aged mother, and their presence gave a new impetus to the already deeply-interesting services. Mrs. Dr. A. J. Gordon, assigned to the noon hour, failing to arrive, I accepted the opportunity to speak such words as were "given me in that hour." Will the praying ones who read this remember sister Richards and her work. Its importance and helpfulness to every good cause can scarcely be estimated.

J. P. STODDARD.

AMONG THE COLLEGES IN IOWA.

Crossing the Mississippi, and passing through Burlington, Iowa, I reached Mt. Pleasant, where I found two colleges. Iowa Wesleyan University is under the care of Rev. J. T. McFarland, president. The other is just across the street, and is named German College, Rev. Jno. Schlagenhauf, president. Both are M. E. institutions, and the latter is well disposed toward the reforms of the day, and cordially received our anti-secrecy literature.

The next day I visited a Presbyterian institution at Fairfield, called Parson's College. President Smith received me kindly, and sent me to the librarian, Prof. Wirtz, with whom I arranged to donate a small anti-secrecy library.

I had a pleasant interview at Oskaloosa with Pres. Trueblood, of Penn College. I think he is correctly named. He is a Friend, and a noble advocate of the Golden Rule; not as it applies to a narrow brotherhood in a lodge, but as it embraces all mankind. This college has a full supply of anti-secrecy books in their library, and I counted fifteen volumes then on the shelves. There is another institution here, called Oskaloosa College. After consulting Pres. Haggard and the librarian, Prof. J. S. Howe, I made arrangements to send them our five-dollar library.

I next went to Pella, Marion county, where there is a Baptist institution under the care of Pres. J. S. Axtell. It is the Central University of Iowa; and I think it is doing a good work by training young men in Bible study for the Christian ministry. They were willing to place anti-secrecy literature on their shelves for the free use of all the students.

Des Moines, since the war, has grown to be a large city, and is now the capital of Iowa. It has, two or three miles out in the suburbs, a college supported by the Christian denomination, called Drake University. It is under the care of Pres. B. O. Aylesworth, who was willing to receive our reform literature and place it in the library.

While stopping in the city I took a day to run down on the cars to Indianola, to see Simpson College. It is an M. E. institution, and I spent a very pleasant evening with the president, Rev. E. M. Holmes, who manifested a good deal of sympathy with the reform work. I think some of the young men under his instruction have the ministry in view.

After this I passed on to Grinnell. Iowa College is one of the oldest and most reliable schools in the State. I did not see the president, Rev.

G. A. Gates, as he was absent from home; but Mr. Robbins, the treasurer, received me very kindly, and the librarian, Prof. J. M. Chamberlain, assured me that he would be responsible for any reform books sent to the college.

The State University, which is located at Iowa City, has a number of well-endowed departments: zoology, ornithology, and, indeed, all the natural sciences are illustrated with an abundance of carefully prepared specimens, such as the kangaroo, ostrich and cameleopard, etc. Iowa City was for a time the capital of the State; and when the legislature removed to Des Moines the State house and other structures were donated to this institution. Thus, there is plenty of room for the chemical and law departments, and a large library, in which there is placed all sorts of literature not immoral. They have a very energetic and able librarian, a lady, Mrs. Ada North, who gave me access to the books. I found one anti-secrecy volume already on their shelves, Bernard on Masonry. I left a good supply of tracts, and made arrangements to send other reform books to the university, and took the cars for Davenport. Here is an Episcopal institution, called Griswold College. Dr. Perry, the bishop of the diocese, who is chancellor, I did not see. But Pres. P. C. Wolcott assured me that they would receive our books into their library and use them honorably.

Passing over into Illinois again, I looked into the Swedish Lutheran Augustana College and Theological Seminary at Rock Island. I found the president Dr. Hasselquist, and the faculty generally thorough reformers and ready for every good work. In their library there are a large number of anti-secrecy volumes.

S. F. PORTER.

FROM THE MONUMENT CITY.

OFFICE N. C. A., WASHINGTON, D. C.,
June 5th, 1890.

DEAR CYNOSURE:—I have been laboring in Baltimore during the past week. Although this city has the "pope of America," Cardinal Gibbons, (beneath whom the President of the United States sat at its recent Congress) and with its large Catholic population all the vices known to corrupt cities, yet I find many loyal men and women. Each visit reveals new voices willing to be heard in condemnation of the lodge.

On my first visit I found the United Presbyterian church without a pastor. This need has been supplied by Rev. C. H. Robinson, son of Dr. Robinson of the 1st U. P. church, Allegheny, a young man of great promise. His young people enter heartily, with him as leader, into the work of the Young People's Christian Endeavor Society. He cordially received your agent and prepared the way for an address, which I gave to an audience of three or four hundred in his church Sabbath evening. Rev. S. A. George, who has just come from Mansfield, Ohio, to take charge of the Covenantant church of Baltimore, was present and took part in this service. Being associated with Mr. George for several years while engaged in Ohio State work, I congratulate this congregation in securing him as pastor, and myself in having such an able assistant near at hand. Rev. Robinson and a number of his congregation kindly subscribed for our paper. Some gave contributions: T. D. Anderson, who has read our paper for years, gave a contribution of ten dollars as an expression of his interest.

The meeting in the colored Baptist church, to use a crude expression, did not pan out very well. About a hundred were present, and I trust some good was done. The utter disregard that I find some have for their word is one of the most trying things I have to meet.

I expect, D. V., to start West en route for Chicago, stopping at Columbus and other points in Ohio. A review of the revised list of the Ohio subscribers to our paper is very gratifying. I am glad to note the appreciation friends there have of the need of our work as evinced by their continued subscriptions to the "Pole Star." I see the names of many who subscribed with me for the first time. Some are supporting our work at great personal sacrifice. May the Lord reward them richly. It has been extremely warm here for a few days. The thermometer indicated 95° in the shade and 130° in the sun yesterday, I am told. It is extremely difficult to obey the injunction, "Keep cool."

EASTERN OREGON LETTER.

WESTON, Oregon, May 30, 1890.

EDITOR CYNOSURE:—It has been some time since I wrote you, and I am rather desirous of renewing my covenant obligations with you. I do not want you, or any of your readers, to think that I ever was, or ever expect to be, a backslidden anti-secretist,—no, never! I have watched with deep interest the movement of the anti-secret element for the last twenty years or more, and have been sorely tried to think that our people, the Missionary Baptist, on this coast were so slow in examining the subject from the Bible standpoint, and in taking a decided stand against the abominable idolatrous worship. As a denomination in the United States, we have a world-wide reputation as being "great sticklers for the whole truth," as recorded by the inspired writers. But I must confess in very many localities, when it comes to touching the subject of secret societies, that many of our brethren and sisters of the other denominations are bold compared to our people.

I meet every now and then pastors who assure me in private conversation that they are opposed to every phase of Baal worship, but when in the pulpit they are silent as the grave on these popular sins of the age, of which they should "cry aloud and spare not," and show the Lord's people who are connected with such unholy alliances, their sins, etc. Neither will they express themselves through the public prints. Yes, many, as has been said, "appear well on dress-parade, and their tactics and evolutions on drill are admirable," but when it comes to the true test, when they are thrown in front of the battle, and the enemy's artillery begins to roar, how their knees smite together, and by their actions, as they fall into the rear, they say to us: "We are not, after all, decidedly on the Lord's side," but long for and ever court the fellowship of those who worship at the altar of Baal.

But I am rejoiced to know that we have many in our ranks who are not ashamed of the Gospel as a whole. I thank God and take courage when I think of the standing sentinels in the persons of Rev. J. L. Barlow, president of the National Christian Association; of Revs. W. A. Brinkley and R. N. Countee, editor and business manager of the Living Way, of Memphis, Tenn.; Rev. Joel H. Austin, formerly editor of the Rescue, of Goshen, Ind.; Rev. Wm. Fenton, editor of the Christian Liberator, of St. Paul, Minn., together with a host of others. Brethren, be firm and steadfast in the work assigned you by the Master, and remember that you are laying foundations upon which future generations will build. The battle may wax hot, but be assured that you have God's promises in your favor, and that sooner or later, despite of the combined demons of earth and hell, victory for the truth will perch upon the banner.

Brethren, pray for me, for I tell you I know from long experience what it is to stand alone (humanly speaking) in defending these Gospel truths, but by the Lord's help I want to be faithful to the trust committed to me. I will favor you next week, or soon thereafter, with some facts in regard to the position taken on the subject of oath-bound secrecy by one of our early pioneer missionaries of Oregon.

W. H. PRUETT.

HE UNDERSTANDS THE G. A. R.

MARSHALL, Minn., May 29, 1890.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE:—Permit me to thank you cordially for the printed copy of the Proceedings of the Conference of Christians on the Secret Lodge System. This beautiful village is controlled by a few Masons who hold the offices, preach to the people and educate their children. Moreover, the women at last have been induced to organize a Woman's Relief Corps, annex to the G. A. R., from which I am now "honorably discharged." I was a member of the G. A. R. for twenty-three years. My heart aches when I contemplate the spectacle of my patriotic comrades being led by ambitious politicians, who, while professing to exclude "politics" from their posts, still endeavor to compel legislation by threats. Witness the resolutions adopted by forty G. A. R. posts in this State, relating to the G. A. R. Pension bill, as published recently in the Chicago Daily News.

My Bro. J.— advises me to make my own appointments and take the field against the common enemy of the Christian religion and republican institutions. I addressed, by request, the W. C. T. U. convention recently held here, and am ready to work for prohibition and against secret oath-bound organizations as God shall direct me. Yours for truth, and to the end,

R. H. CHITTENDEN.

PITH AND POINT.

THE GOD-SEND OF A GOOD MAN.

As I have not health any more to do anything in a more active way, I may perhaps do something in distributing literature on this important matter. The threatening attitude of secrecy, and its stealthy movements, are becoming more tangible and alarming every day. May God bless you in your arduous work in one of the most pressing reforms of the 19th century.—J. L. BUCHWALTER, Lisbon, Iowa.

NEW FRIENDS IN THE SOUTH.

I have just seen a notice of the work in which you are engaged, and write to you in hopes of finding some one able to help me in opposing the secret societies, which have fastened themselves like leeches to this fair Southern land, and are sapping its Christianity and demoralizing the religious ideas of its inhabitants.—(Rev.) J. W. SCOLES, Graysville, Tenn.

NO HARMONY BETWEEN LODGE AND CHURCH.

I have found in my short experience in the ministry, that secret lodges are a great detriment to the church. On this circuit a few years ago, two lodges were organized. One was the Good Templars, and it being something new, and assuming the garb of temperance, a goodly number of our church members joined. But it was not long until all who were more loyal to the church than the lodge, withdrew from the latter, and those who were more loyal to the lodge than the church are still clinging to the lodge and fighting the church. There is no harmony between them.—(Rev.) J. M. DUFF, Oakford Circuit, Illinois Conference.

THE SPEECH OF JOSEPH COOK.

Though very good and from a great man, yet there was one mistake too great for a great man to make to be unnoticed by even common minds. He states that there are many good men in the Masonic fraternity. Our Saviour declares that "there is none good but one and that is God." It is impossible for mortals to be good only as they become partakers of the divine mind, will and nature. Mr. Cook plainly defines the nature, spirit and workings of Masonry to be the opposite to the mind and nature of God, and yet admits Masons to be good.—HORACE W. FOWLER.

WOMEN TO THE FRONT.

Our little Home Guard is going to bring the women to the front. Almost every day brings me fresh encouragement regarding it. I feel that there is going to be a turn in the tide, with great results for the anti-secret cause.—E. E. FLAGG, Wellesley, Mass.

LITERATURE.

REVIVALS AND REVIVAL. By Rev. W. T. Hogg. Pp. 64. Price, 50c.; limp cloth, 40c. Published for the author, Buffalo, N. Y.

That is a pithy saying of Mr. Moody's: "There is something better than a revival, and that is a life that needs no reviving." Such lives are rare, for even the glory of a transfiguration could not hinder dullness on the part of the beholders. All along the line there is a constant need of the ringing order to march on still farther, and to strive still more earnestly to "enter in at the straight gate." Every follower of Christ feels that there are heights still to be attained, and place is found for the prayer: "Wilt thou not revive us again, that thy people may rejoice in thee?" Psa. 85: 6. This volume, by Rev. W. T. Hogg, treats the following topics in a concise and helpful manner: Nature of a True Revival; Hindrances to Revivals; Means of Promoting Revivals; The Pastor in Revival Work; After the Revival, etc. The matter of this volume was prepared as a new chapter of the author's work on Homiletics and Pastoral Theology, and is printed from plates made for that work. It makes a very handy and suggestive little book.

STANLEY'S EMIN PASHA EXPEDITION. By A. J. Wauters, Chief Editor of the Mouvement Geographique, Brussels. With Portraits and Illustrations. Price, 50c. John B. Alden, New York and Chicago.

"Stanley's Emin Pasha Expedition" tells a most interesting and complete story, beginning with the conquest of the Soudan, and continuing through years of African exploration, the revolt of the Mahdi, the siege of Khartoum, with the death of Gordon, the return of Dr. Junker, besides the story of Stanley's own adventures, including his successful Relief Expedition. It is one of the best and most complete works issued upon the subject. The statement has been widely circulated that Mr. Alden, the popular publisher, had joined the "Book Trust," which is trying to monopolize the publication of standard books, and to increase prices from 25 to 100 per cent. Mr. Alden sends us word that he has not joined the Trust, and there is not and never has been any probability of his joining it. The "Literary Revolution," which has accomplished such wonderful results within the past ten years, in popularizing literature of high character, still goes on. Instead of increasing prices, large reduction in prices has recently been made, particularly on copyright books by American authors. A catalogue of 96 pages is sent free to any applicant.

Which? One Church or Many? Every lover of the truth will find an able treatise on the above topic. The author, W. K. Marshall, D.D., treats the subject as comprehended in the prayer of Christ, as found in the writings of Paul, as practiced by the primitive believers in Christ, and as demanded by the present day. His words have the right ring. "We want no visible head or infallible popes. We have too many of that kind already, even in Protestantism, who have stood in the way of church unity. We desire no such union as Romanists claim, but we plead for some of the results that flow from that union." The few suggested points that are vital to the unity of the body of our Lord, are thus given by the author: "No union can ever be secured that involves the absorption of all Protestant bodies into any one church organization, though it is probable that a few of the existing churches will have to modify to some extent their present systems. No union can ever be expected that does not recognize the right of every Christian to a seat at the Lord's table, wherever and by whomsoever that table may be spread. No union can be hoped for that does not recognize the right of all Christians to their private judgment, and full liberty of conscience in all things pertaining to religion. No union will ever be consummated that does not recognize the validity of the ordination of the ministry in all orthodox bodies, and the validity of the sacrament as administered by them. No union will ever be realized until each sect is willing to surrender and totally abandon the things, whatever they may be, that stand in the way of recovering the lost unity of the church, in order that they may be one, as we are one, that the world may know that thou hast sent me."

The June Century opens with another article by Albert Shaw, whose paper on "Glasgow" recently attracted so much attention. This time Mr. Shaw treats of "London Polytechnics and People's Palaces," a subject which is particularly timely, as similar institutions are springing up in different parts of the world. The efforts of several wealthy and philanthropic Englishmen in establishing industrial schools, courses of lectures and popular but instructive entertainment is very happily told. Doubtless such public spirit has an ample reward. Philip Armour of Chicago daily realizes what an excellent investment is the great mission which, though not a Christian man himself, he amply sustains. John La Farge, who is writing "An Artist's Letters from Japan," this month describes the very beautiful temple of Iyemitsu, and makes some general remarks on Japanese architecture. The second of Mrs. Mason's very strikingly illustrated papers on "The Woman of the French Salons" treats of the literary influence of the Salons in the seventeenth century. A paper illustrated with four very striking wood-cut engravings by Elbridge Kingsley is devoted to the young American, Albert Pinkham Ryder, who is here called "A Modern Colorist." Charles de Kay has another paper in his series on Ireland, this one being entitled "Irish Kings and Brehons." Mr. de Kay gives new derivations of the names of the five Irish provinces. The pictures accompanying this article are very curious and instructive, including a landscape by Alexander of "Reginald's Tower." An extremely timely paper is Edward Atkinson's on "Comparative Taxation," which will be found to bear directly upon current discussions of tariff revision. Mr. Atkinson is a master with statistics as well as of argument, and his facts permit the reader to draw his own conclusions on the tariff question, which are altogether unfavorable to our high rates. "What's the News?" is a fresh and interesting statement, by Eugene M. Camp, of the cost of gathering news. The Chicago Tribune roundly disputes his figures.

Knowledge, a new weekly magazine, proposes to answer the almost infinite number of questions upon which one ordinarily consults a cyclopedia and fails to find the answer, generally because the cyclopedia is not "up to date." If you consult any cyclopedia, and fail to find the answer to your question, or you find authorities differing, send a postal-card to Knowledge, and find your answer in the next week's issue. John B. Alden, Publisher, 393 Pearl St., New York.

Mr. George W. Childs of Philadelphia has again given play to his faculty for doing good. This time it is in sending out a little pamphlet full of recollections of General Grant, with an account of the presentation of the portraits of Generals Grant, Sherman and Sheridan at the U. S. military academy at West Point. The little sketch is inscribed to Mrs. Julia Dent Grant. Copies may be secured through the J. B. Lippincott Co., Philadelphia.

The third paper by Mr. Glave on "Six Years in the Wilds of Africa," is the best reading in the June St. Nicholas—full of instructive incident and information of the people and climate of a region our young people may many of them visit when they are older. A novel feature is "A Living Chain from Adam to Abraham Lincoln," or a list of historic personages, each of whom has been seen by the next in order, since the beginning of the world. Some of the stories of the number are marred with the needless introduction of slang.

The Converted Catholic for June is full of Gospel for Roman Catholics and encouragement for Protestants who are working to enlighten them. St. Paul's prophecy of "The Man of Sin" is a new article that is full of interest. "The Primacy of Peter" and "Was the Apostle Peter ever at Rome?" are continued; as is also the "History of the Jesuits." A report of Father O'Connor's lecture in Altoona, Pa., as published in the Independent Loyal American, is given in this issue.

OBITUARY.

DAVID MANNING, SR., died at his home in Worcester, Mass., April 16 last, aged 78 years.

Mr. Manning was born in Sutton, N. H., April 14, 1812, and when he was quite young his parents removed to Concord, Mass., and thence to Paxton, where he learned the boot manufacturing business, after which he carried on the business there for himself for several years. In 1847 he came to Worcester, where he acted as foreman in a boot manufactory for a few years, after which he acted a few years as agent of the Leicester Boot Company, and then carried on the business of making boots and shoes on his own account, on Pleasant street, in Worcester. He retired from active business in 1875, since which time he had made his headquarters at the place of business of his sons, Manning Brothers, on Front street, assisting them as occasion might present. He was full of energy and possessed business qualities which inspired him to begin work for himself, and for more than forty years he was actively engaged as a boot manufacturer.

In May, 1838, he married Lucy B. Grosvenor, who survives him, and in May, 1888, they celebrated their golden wedding. He leaves one daughter and five sons. With one exception the sons are engaged in the wholesale jobbing of boots and shoes, two of them in Worcester and two in Boston.

At the funeral services which were attended by a large number of friends who had learned to esteem Mr. Manning through long years of social and business life, Rev. W. V. W. Davis, pastor of Union church, which Mr. Manning attended, conducted the services, and during his address paid an earnest tribute to the character of this good man: "I am glad to be back at home to officiate at this time, for this friend and father has come to be so very much of a father to me since he has been a neighbor of mine, that I owe a peculiar debt of obligation to his memory. Mr. Manning should stand in many ways as the very noblest type of the New England character. I have been improved by him in many ways since I have known him. He was a man of great firmness of character and inflexibility of purpose, yet of active sympathy with all. Having a character full of the best and noblest; though he had nearly reached fourscore years, he still kept in sympathy with the young. This old man seemed as young in his feelings as the youngest. I speak of this because it is something very precious to me, that an old man should have kept so much of the spirit of youth."

Mr. Manning was a man of strong character, upright and honorable in all his dealings and a leader in the reform movements of the day. When a young man he joined the forces of the anti-slavery people and was an original free soiler. At the formation of the Republican party he was among the first to give his vote and sympathy to the movement and remained loyal in the ranks until a few years ago when he went over to the third party men, a strong Prohibitionist. He was also a decided opponent of the lodge, and heartily and actively co-operated in the efforts to promote the N. C. A. and its objects in Worcester, and in this good work he had the co-operation of his large and excellent family. He was a member of Union church, having joined it during Rev. Dr. Smalley's pastorate.

Sarsaparilla belongs to the smilax family of plants, and is found very generally over the American continent; but the variety that is richest in medicinal properties is the Honduras root, of which the famous Ayer's Sarsaparilla is made.

Some of the herbs in Hall's Hair Renewer, that wonderful preparation for restoring the color and thickening the growth of the hair, grow plentifully in New England.

CONCERNING PREMIUMS.

We offer premiums to compensate such of our subscribers as take the pains and trouble to secure new subscribers to the Cynosure. Many who do this refuse to receive pay, and work because they love the work; others are glad to receive premiums. But,

First, We do not offer any man a premium to renew his own subscription. If a man has taken this paper a year and does not care enough about it to take it longer without being hired to, we do not offer him a premium.

Second, We do not offer a premium to a new subscriber to hire him to take the paper. When he has subscribed for the paper and paid for it himself, and knows its worth, then if he will take the trouble to introduce the paper to others, he can have a premium on the new subscription, but not on his own.

Third, We do not offer a premium where one member of a family stops the paper, and another member of the same family subscribes for it. We do not consider such a name the name of a new subscriber.

Any book we publish or sell can be had as a premium at reasonable rates. We will allow thirty cents' worth of any of our publications, at retail rates, post-paid, for one dollar's worth of new subscriptions to the Cynosure.

CHICAGO, THURSDAY, JUNE 12, 1890.

PRAY FOR THE N. C. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

The National Board closed their Saturday meeting with an urgent resolution calling upon all friends of the reform to pray earnestly that God the Holy Spirit may show his power graciously in the Annual Meeting next Thursday, to give more than human wisdom as we counsel, and enable us to reach harmoniously such conclusions as will mightily set forward our good cause in the coming year. There has been great progress in some directions in the year past. The meetings in Boston and Chicago proved how wonderfully God is working for his truth. How shall we keep the tide up to this high mark? Our General Agent has spent most of the year in New England. He was returned in February with the hope that an able man would be found for field agent in those States to keep the ball rolling on. He has not yet appeared. Have we all besought the Lord for a laborer for this vineyard? How many of us are self-condemned for this neglect? Then for more than a year we have not been as aggressive in the South as the condition of the reform seemed to demand. We ought to renew the battle for the salvation of the Southern churches. A man who is well endorsed waits to begin work on the Pacific Coast. Shall we say to him, Go on; we will sustain you; and may God bless your efforts? These and other important and critical questions must be answered. Our fathers, our aged brethren, are laying down their heavy burdens; God must send us young men to take them up. Pray, pray for the annual meeting. Let every friend of the cause who can be present come to that meeting to give a voice or a vote, or to pray while others do so.

EDITORIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., June 2, 1890.

To the readers of the Cynosure:—I had hoped to have written you oftener and more during this journey; but, requested by the Congregational ministers of this city and vicinity, I have been giving some thought and labor to our cause on this coast which I am to read to-day, and if approved, the paper may be given to the Cynosure.

This is certainly a good field for the study of ethnology. One meets here daily specimens of the human race so diverse from each other, and yet so true, each to the peculiarities of his own species, that scientists may be almost excused for denying the one origin of man from one pair in Eden, and assuming that, like plants and animals, we have sprung up spontaneously, each class bringing its peculiarities with it. This was the doctrine of Agassiz, who held to at least eight centers of human creation; and, of course, placed the white Anglo-Saxons, or Caucasians, at the head; though the very term Caucasian is Asiatic, from Mt. Caucasus. European and domestic animals, as cattle, geese, and tame pigeons, etc., are endless in their diversities of color and shape; while Chinamen, wild geese, deer, antelopes, etc., seem, each individual, to be a reproduction of each other. But this is no proof of the doctrine of inferior and superior races of men. Tamerlane and Gerghis Kahn were Tartars, Mongols, or Chinese. Yet they mustered mightier armies (numerically) than the United States. The followers of Alaric and Attila were Vizigoths and Huns, and Napoleon was followed by men of lighter complexion, and the Iron Duke by soldiers whiter still. And "Conquerors are much the same, it is agreed, From Macedonia's madman to the Swede."

But the American Missionary Association and the California Chinese mission neglect the scientists and act upon the theory that God hath made of one blood all nations of men, to dwell on all the face of the earth (Acts 17:26), and have, last year, registered 1380 Chinese on this coast whom they hope to find included in the one and the same atonement of Christ.

AUBURN, CAL., JUNE 5, 1890.—We are here 187 miles from San Francisco for a short call on Mrs.

Lowell, nee Carter, who with her brother, a lawyer in Chicago, were Wheaton College students. The place is delightfully located in the lower edge of the Sierra Nevadas, among the foothills. The soil and climate are for fruits. Springs come out of the mountains, and water for the town comes in an iron pipe of a foot in diameter from a mountain river down into valleys and up steep, till it pours a mill stream into a reservoir above the village. You stand by the reservoir on the summit, and a semicircle of snow mountains bounds the horizon on the east, which gives a weird and sublime contrast to the green manzanita, chaparral and sober evergreens, which cover the mountains and conceal the valleys this side the lofty snow ridge. Through this ridge our train must push its way to-night through tunnels and under snow-sheds. Rocky, ragged and rough, one hardly sees how the surveyors could plot these summits and steep valleys into quarter sections. But they have done so, and such lands sell here at $500 an acre in the country back of the town. Lodges live here, and whisky, of course, is licensed. We expect to stop at Ogden, Utah, and learn Mormon statistics for the benefit of our readers. J. B.

THE FOUNT OF COLLEGE ROWDYISM.

Two aggravated cases of college ruffianism have occurred within a few days past, and deserve a more than passing mention. At the State University at Bloomington, Indiana, the members of one class were out serenading, and other students followed them with rival melodies on tin horns. A fight followed: one young man was nearly killed on the spot and will probably die; revolvers were fired and another student was shot and crippled for life. Others were injured and property destroyed. At Harvard, the classic and wealthy university of Boston, as a suitable demonstration for a ball game victory a crowd of students daubed buildings and statues with red paint. Five different buildings were smeared and the statue of the founder of the institution was covered. A profane invocation was painted upon Memorial Hall. The indignation of the majority of the students at the outrage was honest and deep. They held a great mass meeting. They poured bitter denunciation upon the heads of the miscreants. They appointed a committee to secure detectives and prepare for a prosecution. And then, when the real business of discovering and punishing their sinning fellow-students was to begin, the committee resigned and the whole affair will be dropped except from memory.

It is said that a certain esprit du corps or fine sense of honor, which prevails in the district school as well as in the great institution, was a higher law than the instinct of justice that began the measures of punishment, and in obedience to it the outrage will be condoned. Now it is as plain as the sun in heaven that such a sense of honor as will waste itself in sentiment in the presence of such outrages is false and jesuitical. It is no better than the honor of the duelist, and rests on no moral foundation whatever. The student of truly honorable sentiments will see in these student outbreaks not only a damage done to person and property which can be punished by the common-law officer, but an immeasurably greater injury done to the good name of his college and to every individual officer and student connected with it. Reputation and character can be impaired beyond reparation: and those who participate in these freaks and villainies are the greatest sufferers. There is, we hold, but one thing for the honorable student to do in such cases. He must stand by the faculty in every proper effort to suppress college outlawry, in act as well as word. The first step in this student reformation must be to get back to first principles. The college secret society has set up its code of morals as a substitute for that of the Bible, and from such morals spring all sorts of false growths, like weeds and toad-stools on a manure heap. There are false notions of honor among students, false companionships, false ideas of success, false methods of mental training, false views of teachers' rights and students' privileges. It is so with every secret society. Have the Bible as much as they may in the lodge, the code of morals inculcated is the lodge code and not God's. Should Freemasons, Odd-fellows, Good Templars, etc., appeal to the Bible as their standard, instead of to lodge tradition and lodge oaths, they would find that Word of God cutting down their very secret society structure, for it is the sharp sword of the Spirit against such folly. To them the Bible is therefore of value only to be put among the working tools of the lodge, along with squares, compasses, cof-fins, daggers and skulls.

What our colleges most need is not great buildings and endowments, but to be a help to the young men and women of America to build character on the solid and only sure foundation of Christian morality. For the sake of America, for the sake of the world and for the coming kingdom of our God let the secret society everywhere be put down.

ORIENTAL RETALIATION.

The protests against anti-Chinese legislation have hardly been read in Congress, when word comes from Japan of new difficulties and dangers to the missionaries, and of apprehension among foreigners of all classes. Since the murder of the Canadian missionary, Rev. T. A. Large, another missionary, whose name is not given in the dispatches, was set upon by a crowd of students and seriously cut with knives. Rev. James Summers at the head of an English school at Tokio was struck on the head by a lance in the hand of a soldier escorting the dowager empress. The unlucky trooper was court-martialed, and the native press raised the cry against the foreigners, which the rowdy student element called "Shosei" took up with zeal. They came repeatedly to the school and so alarmed Mr. Summers that he hastily left the country, abandoning his school to the care of the police and his family to friends. At a student ball game on the 17th ult., Rev. W. Imbrey of New Jersey, a missionary teacher, was set upon by the "Shosei" without provocation and was severely beaten and cut about the head and body. As the police seem to be in collusion with the students the foreigners are beginning to feel serious apprehension. The Japanese government has been uniformly friendly to foreigners, but these outrages may indicate a change among the Japanese in their dealings with outsiders.

These facts naturally force us to consider the temper of the more suspicious and exclusive Chinese. If in Japan our countrymen are maltreated without apparent provocation, what may we not expect from China, since the course of our government has been so uniformly hostile and provoking for several years? A bill which was recently introduced into Congress and passed the House provides that a separate enumeration be taken of all Chinese residents, and that under no circumstances or for any purpose shall any others, except as representatives of the Chinese government, be allowed to land on our shores. This is not only in violation of the fundamental principles of our government, but with our treaty stipulations with China. The passage of such an act would doubtless result in retaliatory measures by the Chinese. The great missionary societies, which are now engaged in a most hopeful as well as extensive work in that land, have united in a protest against such an act as endangering the lives of missionaries, causing the probable destruction of their property and shutting up the open door for missionary work. It remains to be seen whether our national legislature will give more heed to the voice of conscience and enlightened self-interest or to the clamor of hoodlums. The nation has doubtless a right to protect itself from paupers and criminals, but all law-abiding, self-supporting people should have the right to freely settle among us.

Our Declaration of National Independence affirms that the right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness are not for Americans only but for humanity. It declares these rights to be the gift of God, and hence independent of race, nationality or birth-place. Such has been the theory of our government, and in the earlier and better days of our Republic we held that America was an asylum for the oppressed of all nations. Now it is proposed to send the Negro to Africa, "peaceably if we can, forcibly if we must," and to drive out the few peaceable and industrious Chinamen. It is said that a million of dollars is to be raised for this purpose and the work is to be commenced in New York City. The measures of retaliation which these Japanese reports suggest may have the effect to stop this unjust anti-Chinese legislation, when reason and justice might plead with our venal politicians in Congress in vain.

N. C. A. BOARD MEETING.

A regularly-called meeting of the Board was held in the Carpenter building on Saturday last. There were present brethren Whipple, C. A. Blanchard, Richards, Thomson, Worrell, Gardner, Milton and Hitchcock. Prayer was offered by Prof. E. Whipple. It was arranged that a copy of the proceedings of the Chicago Conference be sent to every contributor to the fund for the expense of that meeting, and the issuing of 15,000 copies of Joseph Cook's address at that meeting was approved.

It was voted that Dr. E. P. Goodwin be asked to consent that MS. copies of his address at the Conference be given to the Advance of this city, and the Congregationalist of Boston, for publication.

The report of the Building Committee was read and approved. The report stated that the net proceeds from rents from the Washington building was $165.28; of the Carpenter building, $1,028.22. The largest bill of expense was for overhauling and refitting the basement of the Chicago building. The Treasurer was instructed to inquire the market value of the Washington property. A recommendation to the annual meeting was adopted that the action of the Chicago Conference respecting a special edition of the Cynosure be favorably considered. The report of the committee on amendment of By-laws in favor of a change, dropping the "National Anniversary," so-called, and also respecting the cutting off the names of long delinquent members, was approved, and the changes will be recommended to the annual meeting.

Correspondence with Mr. — Nichols, of California, was reported, and it was voted that correspondence be continued with other brethren in that State.

The transfer of the trusteeship of Dakota property from J. P. Stoddard to W. I. Phillips was approved.

It was reported that $101.64 has been contributed to the Foreign Fund for the distribution of literature, and it was arranged that correspondence be opened with missionaries, and that this fund be at once used in forwarding and circulating N. C. A. literature, according to the terms of donation.

The payment of $10 for keeping the records of the Board was approved.

The recommendation to the annual meeting of the re-appointment of Rev. C. F. Hawley was adopted.

Rev. S. F. Porter, College Agent, being present, made a brief statement respecting his work during the year among the colleges of the South, of Illinois and Iowa. Fourteen libraries had been placed in institutions in the latter States, and several to the South. It was voted that the hearty thanks of the Board be given to Bro. Porter for his generous work in this line, and recommending to the annual meeting that he be re-appointed on such terms as may be agreeable to him.

The chairman of the Board, Rev. A. Thomson, was appointed to correspond with the General Agent respecting plans for the coming year.

The final action of the Board before adjourning was the adoption of a resolution calling upon all supporters of our cause to cry to God in earnest prayer for the manifestation of the Holy Spirit in our annual meeting to give his blessing to our feeble efforts against the rulers of the darkness of this world.

—The Illinois State Prohibition convention lately met in Bloomington nominated President Carl Johann of Eureka College for Superintendent of Public Instruction. This institution is controlled by the Disciple church, to which body Dr. Brooks of Missouri, Prohibition candidate for Vice President, belongs. Since the nomination President Johann begins to feel the teeth of political opposition. Republican papers begin to print unfavorable comments upon the College, that it is run as a Prohibition annex, and frequent references to the reform are becoming unbearable to the students.

—The catalogue of Augustana College and Theological Seminary for 1889-90 gives the total number in that institution as 286. Like most colleges where the deadly influence of secret fraternities is not felt, Augustana supports live literary societies, and in addition to these has three musical organizations besides the conservatory choir and orchestra. The library, containing about 13,000 volumes, is designed for the free use of all students and officers of the institution. Copies of the catalogue, which contains a brief sketch of the College, may be obtained by addressing Rev. J. Jaspersen, Rock Island, Ill.

—The "Supreme Council" of Dr. Darius Wilson's Royal Arcanum Society met in Milwaukee last week. The receipts for the year were $75,424.79. The tax laid upon the State organizations have yielded the central body over $24,000 and funds have accumulated until there is an interest income of $4,217, which at six per cent would represent an investment of over $70,000. It will thus appear that at present this order is heaping up riches to be a corruption fund for somebody. A "fraternal" society whose members assess themselves for the benefit of each other has no right to be accumulating such sums of money. It forfeits its right to use the name "fraternal" by so doing.

—At the Reformed Presbyterian Synod which began its meeting in New York City last week the report on secret societies, read by Rev. J. C. K. Milligan, editor of Our Banner, did not meet the expectation of the brethren. The telegraphic reports say that Dr. H. H. George, late of Geneva College, well-known to our readers as former president of the National Christian Association, held that some of these secret lodges were in the way of man's salvation, were destroying souls. Rev. N. R. Johnston of Oakland, Cal., was very emphatic in his characterization of the Masonic order, against which he believed the Christian church should make a determined stand. It was resolved that resolutions should be prepared stating more definitely the views of the Synod.

—A new juvenile secret society, with ritual, rules and regulations prepared by a lady member of the Sons of Temperance, and for which she was paid one hundred dollars, has been introduced. It is hard to see why all the good claimed for these orders could not be just as well achieved without the feature of secrecy. The end sought by this new order seems to be good, but, like the other orders of its kind, this one feature will be a hindrance to its work in the suppression of the liquor traffic. The object of which nothing is said is to train recruits for the secret temperance lodges. To this end an attractive ritual is provided, ranks or degrees designated, and the five senior officers are to be members of the Sons of Temperance order. No doubt this is the principal object; if temperance was first and greatest there would be no need of a ritual and the various accessories of secretism.

PERSONAL MENTION.

—Rev. H. H. Hinman is again at Berea, Ky., where he hopes to spend the summer season.

—Rev. E. L. Harris has returned from a prolonged sojourn in this city to his old home in Delavan, Wis., where he may be addressed.

—Pres. J. Blanchard began his return journey from San Francisco last Wednesday. Mrs. W. H. Fischer, his daughter, and her children return with him. They tarry with friends on the way at Auburn, Cal., and Ogden, Utah. At the latter city Rev. A. J. Bailey, pastor of the Congregational church, receives them.

—The papers report the death of Rev. Solomon Knapp, one of the oldest Baptist ministers in Illinois. He died at his home in Joliet on Friday, at the great age of 87. He was ordained to the ministry in 1833, and came to the State fifty years ago. Elder Knapp was, in his prime, a man of great power in the church, and, like Bernard, Colver, Kenyon and others, he was unhesitating in his condemnation of the lodge among the sins which must be put away by the church.

—Bro. Enos W. Shaw returned from Michigan last Friday. His health is not good, and he yet experiences difficulty with his eyesight as the result of his sickness during the April Conference. Physicians advise a change of occupation, and he intends leaving the N. C. A. employ next year. This decision we must all regret; as Bro. Shaw is a young man of ability, piety, and thorough conviction on the subjects discussed by our reform. We had hoped he would be able to continue for years in the work. But as God orders otherwise, we are yet sure the N. C. A. will have in him ever a firm friend and able advocate.

COMMENCEMENT AT WHEATON takes place next week. The anniversary exercises begin with the Baccalaureate sermon on Sabbath, the 15th, by Rev. Prof. F. W. Fisk, D. D., of Chicago. Annual sermon before the Missionary Society by Rev. A. N. Hitchcock of the American Board in the evening. Monday afternoon the exhibition of the Conservatory and Art department, with graduating exercises of the Preparatory School in the evening. The Board of Trustees meets on Tuesday and the Alumni Association holds its reunion in the afternoon and evening of the same day. The Graduating Class has Wednesday for itself, with the Senior Concert and the President's levee in the evening.

THE N. C. A. ANNUAL MEETING.

Members of the Association and all friends will please take notice and be prompt in attendance on Thursday, June 19th, at 10:30 o'clock A. M., at 221 West Madison St., for the election of officers and the transaction of other important business.

—The headquarters of the General Committee for the National Convention of the Christian Endeavor Societies in St. Louis are No. 702 Olive street, where letters for information can be addressed. A new feature will be that each society in St. Louis will be given the delegates of a certain State to look after. The meetings will be held in the Exposition Building, June 12-15. A program has already been prepared, containing the names of many distinguished speakers.

—According to the London Word and Work, Rev. W. Wright, D. D., of the British and Foreign Bible Society, has started for China with the view of organizing fresh arrangements for bringing the Scriptures swiftly, fully and in the most perfect form before the two hundred million souls in that great empire.

THE HOME.

PSALM 23.

"The Lord's my Shepherd, I'll not want,
He makes me down to lie
In pastures green; he leadeth me
The quiet waters by."

"Every line, every word of it has been engraven for generations on Scottish hearts, has accompanied them from childhood to age from their homes to all the seas and lands where they have wandered, and has been, to a multitude no man can number, the rod and staff of which it speaks, to guide and guard them in dark valleys, and, at last, through the darkest. And in many a tongue besides, it has shown its power when the 'Good Shepherd' speaks through it to those who know his voice. Its history sparkles to the daylight in numerous records, and it would be longer if we could follow it into all the secret, but not sunless, resting-places in hidden hearts, which only the day of God will declare. The sixth Psalm may be called a well of Marah into which the tree is at last thrown which sweetens the waters. This, from first to last, is as the waters of Siloa that go softly, having its source in the holy place of the tabernacles of the Most High.

"It may be interesting to give the old version of the psalm as it was sung on Leith shore:

"The Lord is only my support,
And he that doth me feede;
How can I then lack anie thing
Whereof I stand in need?

"He doth fold me in coates most safe,
The tender grass fast by;
And after driv' th me to the streams
Which run most pleasantly.

"And when I feel myself near lost,
Then doth he me home take;
Conducting me in his right paths
Even for his own name's sake.

"And though I were even at death's door,
Yet would I fear none ill;
For by the rod, and shepherd's crook,
I am comforted still.

"Thou hast my table richly deckt
In despite of my foe;
Thou hast my head with balm refresht,
My cup doth overflow.

"And finally while breath doth last,
Thy grace shall me defend;
And in the house of God will I
My life forever spend."

JOHN ROBINSON'S WISE COUNSEL.

Extracts from the farewell sermon of John Robinson, to the Pilgrim Fathers on their embarkation at Delft Haven, A. D. 1620: copied from a card in a case at Pilgrim Hall, Plymouth, Mass.

"Brethren, we are now quickly to part from one another, and whether I may ever live to see your faces on earth any more, the God of heaven only knows; but whether the Lord hath appointed that or not, I charge you before God and his blessed angels, that you follow me no further than you have seen me follow the Lord Jesus Christ.

"If God reveal anything to you, by any other instrument of his, be as ready to receive it as ever you were to receive any truth by my ministry, for I am verily persuaded—I am very confident, that the Lord has more truth yet to break forth out of his Holy Word.

"For my part I cannot sufficiently bewail the condition of the reformed churches, who are come to a period in religion, and will go at present no further than the instruments of their reformation. The Lutherans cannot be drawn to go beyond what Luther saw; whatever part of His will our God has revealed to Calvin, they will rather die than embrace it. And the Calvinists, you see, stick fast where they were left by that great man of God, who yet saw not all things.

"This is a misery much to be lamented: for though they were burning and shining lights in their times, yet they penetrated not into the whole counsel of God; but were they now living, would be as willing to embrace further light, as that which they first received. I beseech you, remember, it is an article of your covenant: 'That you be ready to receive whatever truth shall be made known to you from the written Word of God.' Remember that, and every other article of your sacred covenant.

"But I must here withal, exhort you to take heed what you receive as truth, examine it, consider it, and compare it with other scriptures of truth, before you receive it; for it is not possible that the Christian world should come so lately out of such thick anti-Christian darkness, and that perfection of knowledge should break forth at once."—The Armory.

HOPE IN EVIL TIMES.

In the opening sermon before the triennial session of the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church in New York, Bishop Whipple uttered these significant sentences:

"We are perplexed by the unbelief and sin of our time. The Christian faith is assailed not only with scoffs as old as Celsus and Julian, but also with the keenest intellectual criticism of divine revelation, the opposition of alleged scientific facts, and a Corinthian worldliness whose motto is, 'Eat and drink, for to-morrow we die.' In many places Christian homes are dying out. Crime and impurity are coming in as a flood, and anarchy raises its hated form in a land where all men are equal before the law. The lines between the church and the world are dim. Never did greater problems confront a council of the church. An apostolic church has graver work than discussion about its name or the amending of its canons and rubrics. I fear that some of this unbelief is a revolt from a caricature of God. These mechanical ideas about the universe are the outcome of a mechanical theology which has lost sight of the fatherhood of God. There is much honest unbelief. In these yearnings of humanity; in its clubs, brotherhoods, and orders; in their readiness to share all things with their brothers, I see unconscious prophecies of the brotherhood of all men as the children of one God and Father. Denunciation will not silence unbelief. The name of infidel has lost its terrors. There is only one remedy. It is in the spirit, the power, and the love of Jesus Christ. Philosophy cannot touch the want. It offers no hand to grasp, no Saviour to trust, no God to save. When men see in us the hand, the heart, and the love of Christ, they will believe in the brotherhood of men and the fatherhood of God.

"We are living at the eventide of the world, when all things point toward the second coming of our King. God has placed the English-speaking people in the forefront of the nations. They number one-tenth of the human family and I believe God calls them to do the work of the last time. The wealth of the nations is largely in Christian hands. There never have been such opportunities for Christian work—never such a harvest as awaits the husbandman. You may tell me of difficulties and dangers. We have only one answer. Sin, sorrow and death are not the inventions of a Christian priest. 'There are is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved.'"

THE POWER OF FREEDOM.

Jesus Christ escapes from the slavery of money and of luxury, because his soul is absorbed in the eternal plans of God. He escapes from the traditions of his people, because he lives in the eternal truths of God; and he escapes from circumstances because he lives in character. Jesus Christ is positive, and not negative.

I love to think of that calm figure, walking majestically, because it is so absolutely calm, through the perplexed and troubled and feverish streets, as if he stood to-day and rebuked you—why? Not for doing the things which you are doing; not for being occupied with the details of life which have been thrust into your hands, and which you have constantly to do with; but for being the slaves where you ought to be the masters; for being ruled by the things you ought to have under your control. Here he stands, the poor Christ, the calm Christ, the simple Christ, in the midst of our agitation and of our riches, and our complexity and our artificialness and our slowness of life.

The power of freedom is forever in being fastened to the heart of God; is forever in living, in walking with the divine life of which he was a part. It is forever in the positive and not in the negative; in the great strength of the goodness to which he clung, and not in the weakness of evil which he declined. And so it must be with us. I may say, "I am the son of God. He told me so. I am the son of God; with my divine belongings, with my divine reachings toward the higher life, with my possibilities of intimate union and close connection with Him who rules the world, and from whom all holiness proceeds. I am the child of God; and therefore the life of the child of God, who is my Elder Brother, may become the picture of the life which I may live, and I may enter into his salvation."—Rev. Phillip Brooks, D. D.

JENNIE'S COMMENCEMENT.

"I handed in my essay, yesterday, for corrections, you know," said Jennie Lander, at the breakfast table, one morning late in May.

"And when is it you graduate?" asked her father.

"Four weeks from to-day Commencement is."

"I wasn't thinking it was quite so soon," said her mother.

"Nor I either," said Mr. Lander.

"Commencement! I don't see what they call it a 'commencement' for, when it isn't the beginning, but the ending," commented ten-year-old Marian.

Jennie did not answer. To her it was the "commencement"—a new, glad beginning of life, in earnest, though all her life had been glad and all its years had been new. Something in the name pleased her, as though there was coming an opportunity to take a fresh hold on fresh Christian privilege and service.

"I think," said the mother, "it is called so because it used to come later in the season. They conferred the degrees at the beginning of the school year instead of at its close, didn't they?"

But no one seemed to know, and no one answered.

"I guess," said the father, "you had better let Jennie get her fixings out of that money Cane paid me for the wood from the back lot—if there's enough left."

"Yes, I was keeping it for that, and I guess it will do."

"The girls are all going up to the city, Saturday, together, to buy their dresses," put in Jennie, timidly. "They say they can get things enough cheaper to more than save the fare, and they see a better assortment to choose from."

"Well, you must do as your mother thinks best about that. If she's willing, I am," rejoined Mr. Lander, as he rose from the table and went out.

Said the mother—but just recovered from a long illness, and still weak and thin—"Run to my drawer and get that old wallet, dear, and we'll look it over."

"Yes," she went on, "here's just about enough, as I thought."

"But, mother," put in the daughter, "you were going to have a new spring dress out of that wood money, and you haven't anything even to wear to graduation."

"Well," was the reply, with a little sigh, "we can only have all there is, you know. The doctor's bill was so high, and your father had to have a coat; but I guess, maybe, there'll be some other way to get the dress. I can manage, somehow."

To "manage somehow" meant, in all probability, to go without, Jennie knew, and she thought remorsefully of her own dainty spring suit, not all new, to be sure, but constructed by her mother's weak hands during her convalescence. The money for the pretty new goods to add to the old, and the two or three dollars for the simple hat, she remembered, had come out of this same wood money; and now her mother had only a shiny black silk, years out of date, and her much worn black cashmere, to choose from, for a spring toilet.

She went about her morning work with a sober face; the prospect of a new white cashmere, all daintily made and set off with bits of embroidery here and there that you could hardly tell from the real flowers she was going to wear, did not rejoice her as she thought it would.

Her mother was looking over some little dresses of Marian's.

"When you go up stairs, Jennie," she said, "I wish you'd go to that small trunk and get those things Aunt May sent us. There are two or three summer dresses of cousin Lena's. I believe that mull was her graduating dress. I want to fix up some things for Marian."

So a few minutes later the young girl took from the trunk she had been sent to, a gingham, somewhat worn, a light cambric, and, carefully wrapped in paper, a dress of fine white mull, made in the fashion of a few years before. It had evidently been worn only once or twice, for it was not soiled.

"My, what quantities of cloth there are in it! It is just as good as new, and so fine and pretty. If it was mull I wanted now!"

How swift was the thought that flashed through her mind—yet it was not quite a welcome one—"I could take this for graduation and then mother could have her dress."

Her chin dropped into her hand, and she sat quite still. "If I don't, mother can't have a thing," and she knew how little her mother's wardrobe held, and she was ashamed to own to herself how hard it was to give up her own cherished plans. She replaced the dress in its wrappings, and laid it with the others at the head of the stairs, that she might see it when she went down, and went to set in order her own little room. It was yet early when it was done, and she sat down by the low window to "think it out." The white forehead was knitted in thought and perhaps a few tears fell before the decision was made; but there was a little prayer sent up, right earnestly, and a haunting remembrance of the day's text: "bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ."

So it was with an unclouded face that she re-entered the sitting-room.

"See here, mother, this lovely mull! It will make a nice graduating dress, and I'm going to have it; and now you can have yours."

"But you wanted a cashmere."

"Well, this will do, and we'll have it as pretty as we can. That money will get your dress and my little things too."

Once formed, her decision was final. It was cheerful giving. No one likes a made-over dress for her graduation gown, and visions of the clinging cashmere she had renounced would sometimes dance before her eyes, but she resolutely turned away. It was hard not to go with the girls on their delightful shopping expedition on Saturday; but she drove her mother down town in the low, old carriage, and forgot her disappointment in the pleasure of choosing her mother's dress of soft, fine wool, a dark gray, with silk enough to trim it and make a little bonnet; and when, after her little fineries had been chosen and paid for, there remained money enough for a pair of gray kids, to offset her own white ones, and some dainty ruching to match her own laces, she felt herself well paid.

The mull gave no hint of previous service when its fresh, snowy folds were wrapped about Jennie's slender form. All her flowers were real ones, and she had nothing to regret or sigh for when she looked over to where the little mother sat, Commencement day, in her pretty gray dress, with such a tender pride in her kind eyes. And the mother was thinking, as I do, that such an act of thoughtful, cheerful self-denial was not an inauspicious commencement of whatever graver and grander tasks lie beyond Commencement day.—Presbyterian Banner.

TEMPERANCE.

THE ORIGINAL PACKAGE BUSINESS.

TELEGRAMS FROM ALL QUARTERS.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 22.—Almost every man in Congress, and particularly those from the Republican districts where there is a strong temperance sentiment, is receiving telegrams, letters and petitions urging the adoption of some legislation at once to meet the decision of the Supreme Court.

Not only is the public sentiment so demonstrated against the liquor traffic, but the butter men are alarmed at the discovery that oleomargarine can be shipped in the same manner as whisky under the original package decision, and it is feared that the manufacturers of oleomargarine will take advantage of this decision to flood the markets with patent butter in defiance of laws that exist in New York and other States prohibiting its sale.

The agents of the New York Dairymen's Association are here looking after the amendment to the bill to cover the butter interest, and say that something must be done at once, because $350,000,000 of capital is interested, and the farmers of New York produce $45,000,000 worth of butter a year on a very narrow margin of profit. They claim that two or three months of free trade in oleomargarine would ruin half the dairymen in the State.

Information is also received here that there have been regular lines of traffic in original packages opened in all the prohibition States. Carloads of beer, whisky, and other liquors are shipped daily into Maine, Iowa and Kansas, and the liquor is sold in the original packages to consumers under the decision of the Supreme Court. This traffic will doubtless not only continue, but increase the longer the passage of the bill is postponed. The Brewers' Congress, now in session in this city, is doing everything it can to defeat the legislation, and will have some effect in the House of Representatives, but not in the Senate.

A MISSOURI JUDGE WHO LOVES JUSTICE.

NEVADA, Mo., May 22.—Judge Hindman, of the District Court, in his charge to the Grand Jury yesterday, took the ground that, notwithstanding the "original package" decision, no person has a right to violate the local laws, or keep a place for the sale of intoxicating liquors, either in "original packages" or otherwise, and that the jury should indict any person keeping such a place. He maintained that inter-State commerce had nothing to do with the case. The local option law, which was adopted here, prohibits the sale within the city limits of intoxicating liquors.

FIGHT ORIGINAL PACKAGES.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., May 23.—The first "original package" house in this section will be opened at Leechburg, Pa., to-morrow morning. The McConnell Brewing Company has shipped a car-load of beer to that place, and the store will be opened with their agent, Charles Silverman, in charge. The town has been "dry" for many years, and the new departure has created intense excitement. At a meeting of citizens to-night a committee was appointed to make an arrest for every package sold, and fight the matter to the bitter end.

A PITTSBURGH JUDGE OVERRULES THE SUPREME COURT.

PITTSBURGH, May 27.—The "original package" decision was mentioned in court here yesterday and aroused Judge Ewing's ire. "Should a case involving this question come before me," he exclaimed, "the United States Supreme Court will have another chance at it. I regard the decision as the entering wedge that will eventually destroy the liberties of the people. I have observed that the United States Supreme Court has frequently made wrong decisions in such cases, and have been compelled by popular uprisings of the people to change their decisions."

RESULTS OF OPENING STORES ON THE NEW PLAN.

PITTSBURGH, May 28.—Original package houses were opened in Apollo and Leechburg, both local option towns, Saturday, by William Silverman, agent for a Cincinnati brewing company. A car-load of beer in packages of from one-eighth to one-half barrel each, arrived at Leechburg, and in less than two hours the contents of the car had been sold, and "original packages" were traveling in all directions on the shoulders of men and boys. A committee of citizens, appointed at a general meeting, met last evening, and decided to enter suit against Silverman on Monday for violating the State liquor laws. Authorities have also entered suit for maintaining a nuisance in in the borough. Silverman says he will refuse bail if arrested, and if the case is decided in his favor he will hold the committee for damages.

As a result of these original packages the streets are filled with drunken men every night. There is great excitement, and sentiment is pretty nearly evenly divided.

INSOLENCE OF THE SALOON MEN.

TOPEKA, Kan., May 25.—The dealers in original packages are becoming more bold and defiant. Tuesday six of them hired three carriages. In the rear seat of each two of the saloon men placed themselves. On the opposite seat they placed kegs of beer, and grouped around them original packages of whisky, brandy and wine. On the seat beside the driver was placed a keg of beer, and on top of it a foaming glass of beverage. Thus equipped they drove through the principal streets, and finally halted at the entrance of the Capitol grounds, and under the very shadow of the State house. There they offered for sale to the State officers passing in and out their original packages. Secretary of State Allen became so enraged that he telephoned to the chief of police to arrest the men for disturbing the peace. At the approach of the blue-coats the saloon men drove away.

"WAR ON ORIGINAL PACKAGES."

TOPEKA, Kan., May 29.—The authorities have at last declared war on the "original package" depots, of which seven or eight have been opened in Topeka within the past two weeks. The county attorney to-day filed informations against several of the dealers, and also against the owners of the buildings in which the business is carried on. Upon these the district judge issued a restraining order forbidding the continuance of the business, and enjoining the owners of the premises from permitting the same to be used for the sale of liquor in violation of the prohibitory law. The officials have been at work for several days preparing for this step, and have had a number of witnesses examined, chiefly boys, it is alleged. The State will try to prove that the liquor was sold or given to a minor. The sheriff and his deputies this morning began serving papers on the "original package" men. There was no trouble in finding the majority of the parties wanted, though a few of them reside out of town.

SALINA, Kan., May 27.—One, Cooper, representing the Heim Brewing Company, of Kansas City, who opened up an original package business here yesterday, was to-day arrested by the city authorities charged with violating the prohibition ordinance. A plea of not guilty was entered, and an appeal bond was refused by the police judge.

THE MAINE SUPREME COURT BOWS.

AUGUSTA, Me., May 29.—The Supreme Court to-day announced a unanimous decision in the Burns "original package" case, reversing the decision of Judge Whitehouse. The opinion is drawn by the chief justice and concurred in by Judges Walton, Virgin, Emery, Libby and Foster. It says:

"The case of Gus Leisq et al. vs. Hardin, just decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, on full consideration seems to clearly settle the question and to require us to reverse the rulings below and sustain the law according to the respondent's contention. The opinion of a majority of the judges sitting in that case appears to be very elaborate and exhaustive of the questions involved, and may commend itself to many as containing the better conclusion. Our obedience is due, however, to the judgment which prevails—not that our statute is unconstitutional, for it prohibits only the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors—but its interpretation must be constitutional. Exceptions sustained."

ROUGH ON THE SUPREME COURT.

BURLINGTON, Iowa, June 1.—Judge E. S. Huston, of this city, has made an important discovery which will be of great interest in connection with the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court in the Iowa "original package" case.

It is nothing less, according to the judge, than a decision by the same court in a precisely similar case, in which the court holds an opposite view from the recent decision. The case is that of Brown vs. Husted, reported in 114 United States, page 622. The plaintiffs, who were residents of Pittsburgh, Pa., had certain boatloads of coal which they had bought in Pittsburgh and shipped down the river to New Orleans for sale, and while it was at the wharf, still in its original shape of shipment, an attempt was made to seize and sell it for taxes. The claim was set up that it had been mined in Pennsylvania and imported into Louisiana for sale, and was then and had always been in its original condition, and had never been or become mixed or incorporated with other property in the State of Louisiana. In deciding against the plaintiffs the court said:

"The tax was imposed after the coal had arrived at its destination and was put up for sale. The coal had come to its place of rest for final disposal or use and was a commodity in the market of New Orleans. It might continue in that condition for a year or two years or only for a day. It had become a part of the general mass of property in the State, and as such it was taxed for the current year as all other property in the city of New Orleans."

NEWS FROM AFRICA.

DEAR EDITOR:—Receiving letters from two readers of your paper, wishing to know how the work of the Lord is progressing with me, convinced me that many of my Cynosure friends would like to know something of our work.

Rev. W. H. Johnston and wife, and Miss Alice Harris, M. D., have been here now about two months. Bro. Johnston apparently looks very feeble, and it was my impression when I welcomed him to our shore that he could not stand before the malarial atmosphere of Africa and do much work, but I am being happily disappointed, as our brother is proving himself as hardy as any robust missionary from Europe or America. Their being here has given me more time for evangelical mission work, as all of us cannot find sufficient work to do in St. John's Church. I preach in our church here occasionally, and still continue my work periodically amongst Mohammedans, but I am now directing my attention specially to EVANGELICAL MISSION WORK.

Though I believe that every Christian should be loyal to his church, yet I regret exceedingly that there is such a thing as sectarian division in the church of Christ. When I see the evil that it has done among the converted heathens of my own country, Africa, I am convinced that these divisions never originated with Christ, nor could he approve them. It is a kingdom divided against itself. We have as much ritualism, bigotry, fashionable Christianity and religious aristocracy in Africa as there is in Europe or America. Our object in holding open air services, and for doing evangelical mission work is to meet all classes of religious denominations and those outside, that the church does not reach.

On Monday last, at 6:30 A. M., we had an open-air service at Circular Road, where I preached to 1,200 people. On Tuesday I had a morning service in the church, where I preached at 5:30, and on the evening of the same day, I conducted an open-air service at upper Kissy Road, where I spoke to about 800 people. Bro. Johnston for the first time attended our open-air service and spoke also to the people, and made good, and I believe effective, impression on many. I continue my early morning meetings through the week and have been having large and attentive gatherings in our street corners.

The rains are now threatening, and we shall soon be under the mighty torrents of African rainy season. This will interfere with our street work. But to remedy it, all our workers have decided that we have a public hall where we can carry on the work. I have succeeded in engaging a large hall, calculated to entertain 700 at least, which I am now renovating, and hope to open in a week's time for evangelical work.

FREEMASONRY IN AFRICA. MISSION OF THE CYNOSURE.

The Masonic lodge has been revived or established here. There was a banquet last week, and many souls are being entrapped by love for innovation and the mysteries. But here I must mention a successful mission of the Cynosure at such a critical time, when there was no minister of the Gospel and no missionary to raise up their voices against the altar of Baal, or rather dare not raise up their voices.

A student of the law, Mr. J. Deputron, a man of great intelligence, had just arrived from England. Hearing that he was proposed a candidate for the lodge, I sent him two copies of the Cynosure, one of them containing an account of the fatal accident of Rev. Mr. Johnston, while going through the performances for his Royal Arch degree. In fact, that article has thrown a great light on Masonry in my own mind.

Four days after, Mr. Deputron came to me in my house, and exclaimed, "Sir! I would have been a Mason yesterday had it not been for the paper you sent me." I became so much excited by the victory that I gave him selections from the Anti-masonic books, which Mr. Cook so kindly furnished me, and he is now studying Anti-masonic literature.

MY MOHAMMEDAN MISSION work is still in slow progress. We cannot do much for want of a school building. Locally, we have collected £30, but we dare not think of starting a building until we have in our possession the amount needed to buy or build.

This is a very trying season in Africa. Influenza is raging, and the poor especially are dying very fast. I was last Sabbath in our grave yard, and there I met eight new graves in which the dead were buried only for that day. We have several instances of sudden deaths in the streets, but many of them, I am glad to say, found heaven so near that death was no loss to them.

The heavens sometimes seem dark over the head of the Christian, but the gloominess of the cloud cannot in any way obscure the light of his soul. "Light, more light!" is the watchword of the Christian. His soul bends towards the invigorating heat of the Sun of righteousness, and though the heavens may be dark or friends be few, he sees a hand behind the dark clouds, and he can by faith exclaim, "O Thou that sittest behind the clouds, lift up the veil, and show me thy glory."

May the Lord bless you and your work. Yours very sincerely,
J. AUGUSTUS COLE.

COMMENTS BY E. E. FLAGG.

1. Undue care for the future a sin, vs. 22-28. The real meaning of our Saviour's words is this: "Be not anxious; take no unnecessary thought for the morrow." It is true that we must think and plan; but always in a spirit of trust, not of worry. Worry always means distrust, while nothing so honors our Heavenly Father, nor is there anything he so honors as faith. "Is not the life more than meat and the body than raiment?" Will not he who gave us unasked the greater gift bestow upon us the lesser one? The human mind is prone to worry; to even borrow all kinds of unnecessary trouble about things that are never likely to happen. There have been millionaires haunted by the fear of coming to want. Wealth is not necessarily a safeguard against this soul-corroding disease which the pressure and strain of our modern way of living has rendered so fearfully common. We seldom think of it as covetousness, yet this is what it really is—an inordinate desire for something we have not got. The crowds to whom Christ spoke were generally poor people—what would seem to us wretchedly poor. There is certainly no American city or village where crowds would follow a preacher, not to be taught, not for mere curiosity, but for a piece of bread, as they seem to have followed Jesus after the miracle of the loaves and fishes. (John 6: 26.) But it is doubtful whether in our land and age as much anxious care is expended for the necessities of life as for its luxuries. We want to keep up appearances and look as well as our neighbor, who, perhaps, has a much larger income. True faith always brings with it a spirit of contentment that, instead of fretting and chafing over the limitations of our lot, tries to make the best of it. Too much precious time and energy, as well as youth and health, is unconsciously fretted away. It is against such folly, which Satan calls prudence and forethought, that Christ would have us guard. We cannot lengthen out our days by a hairs breadth, yet we can shorten them with needless worry, when it is our privilege to live lives as free of care as the birds.

2. Faith, the distinguishing mark of God's children, vs. 29-31. A professing Christian, always seeking after worldly good, is a strange anomaly. This is where the line between a worldly and a Christian ought to show the clearest, but it is often where it seems the most nearly obliterated. To a child of God the whole system of life insurance is open to many serious objections. It is more heathen than Christian, and especially so when it is offered on the secret society basis, with a false salvation thrown in. The craze for providing against sickness and death by joining some secret society is, of itself, a commentary on, and a fulfillment of our Saviour's mournfully-uttered words, "When the Son of Man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?"

3. Our encouragements to trust, vs. 33, 34. "Fear not" is an oft-repeated expression, both of the Old and New Testaments. God said it to Abraham, to Moses, to Isaiah, to Paul; and he says it to us. But the "Fear nots" of Scripture, it should be remembered, are all on the earthward side. However fierce the opposition we meet, however depressing our worldly circumstances, we are never to be dismayed. What we are to fear is lest with so many great and exceedingly precious promises we should let our affections be enticed away from God, and set on earthly instead of heavenly things. We cannot be to anxious for heavenly treasure, or too careful to invest our time, strength and money where it will yield us an eternal interest.

HELPFUL THOUGHTS FROM PELOUBET.

Observe that this command (v. 22) does not tend to idleness or want of thrift, or to poverty, but on the contrary, to the best prosperity, and to the best enjoyment of whatever God gives us; while over-anxiety tends to dishonesty, to crime, to selfishness, to disappointment, and to bitterness of spirit.

GOD'S CARE FOR HIS CHILDREN.—God does not care merely for worlds and empires, but takes an interest in the personal welfare of each of us. God does not say to us that we have no earthly needs, or that it is a matter of indifference whether our wants are supplied. But he would (1) lift up our souls above an absorbing interest in them, to higher and nobler things, that are best here and endure forever. (2) He would show us the true way to obtain them; and (3) cause even these lower things to be a means of increasing our faith and love and ennobling our characters.

SEEKING FIRST THE KINGDOM OF GOD.—All subordinate goods come in the train of the highest good. It is true not only of individuals, but of towns and nations, that those who do most for the spiritual shall in the end have the most of the temporal. The map of the world is unimpeachable proof of this statement. The more Christian a nation, the more it has of this world's blessings. And most of the losses, strikes, failures, disasters in business, come directly or indirectly from seeking mammon first, and not the kingdom of God.

RELIGIOUS NEWS.

—A Summer Convocation of Christian Workers from various parts of the United States and of all denominations, for fellowship and Bible study, opening with a ten days' convention, will be held at Western Springs, a suburb of Chicago, from June 20 to Aug. 17, inclusive. The object of this gathering will be to present truth on the fulness of the Gospel, for "spirit and soul and body," namely: The Lord Jesus Christ, as our Saviour of the soul ("who forgiveth all thine iniquities") and of the body ("who healeth all thy diseases;") as our sanctification; and as our coming Lord. The gathering of last year was productive of much spiritual and physical blessing, and it is asked that prayer may be made for the power of God upon this assembly. The following are a few of those who are to be present as teachers of the Word: Rev. A. B. Simpson, New York City; Rev. David B. Updegraff, Mt. Pleasant, O.; Mrs. Carrie Judd Montgomery, Faith Rest Cottage, Buffalo, N. Y.; Mrs. A. C. Morrow, Editor Illustrator, Minneapolis, Minn.; Bro. E. R. Irmscher, St. Paul, Minn.; Miss E. J. Scovel, Nashville, Tenn.; Rev. Chas. W. Ryder, Providence, R. I.; Miss Mattie M. Gordon, Nashville, Tenn.

—The Society of Friends, at their New York yearly meeting, decided to ask Congress to provide matrons to look after Indian women and children.

—The Sixth International Sunday-school convention of the United States and British North America and provinces will open at Pittsburgh on June 24 and remain in session all week in Mechanical hall of the Exposition building. Three sessions will be held daily, and at least two thousand delegates are expected to be in attendance.

—The annual supply of the Scriptures failing to reach the Micronesian Islands in time, a missionary writes: "Time and time again have the natives come to my door asking for the book, money in hand with which to pay, but we must shake our heads and tell them there were none—a trial to us as well as them. Pupils in our schools thus came, pupils of Sunday-schools far away came, native teachers came, but, alas! we had nothing for them."

—The Reformed Presbyterian Synod met in New York, June 4. Rev. D. H. Coulter of Winchester, Kan., was elected moderator and R. J. George, of Beaver Falls, Pa., clerk. The report on secret societies was made by Rev. J. C. K. Milligan of New York, editor of the Banner. It was objected to as not emphatic enough and another was ordered.

—The last census in New Zealand reveals the interesting fact of a profession of religion on the part of no less than 95 per cent. of the whole population.

—The following shows the distribution of missionaries in the chief missionary fields: China has one ordained missionary to each 733,000 of population; Siam one to each 600,000; Corea, one to each 500,000; India one to each 350,000; Africa, one to each 300,000; Japan, one to each 215,000; Burma, one to each 200,000. Nearly all the missionaries in Africa are around the coast. In Central Africa and the Soudan there is as yet only one missionary to each 5,000,000 people.—Baptist Mission.

LODGE NOTES.

The boycott recently instituted by the Farmers' Alliance against the business men of Warren, Ind., which caused widespread interest, has been declared at an end.

Patrick Hynes, of Greenport, N. Y., treasurer of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, has disappeared after confessing to embezzlement of $2,800 of money belonging to the order.

The Foresters at their convention in Chicago adopted a resolution touching the world's fair celebration, deciding that an invitation be extended to all Catholic societies and organizations to co-operate with the Catholic Foresters in the celebration.

On Tuesday in the Grand Lodge of Wisconsin Odd-fellows, at Eau Claire, Wis., there was a hot debate over the question of the advisability of establishing a home for indigent members and widows and orphans of deceased members. Action on the matter was finally postponed.

"The Sovereign Camp of the World of the Modern Woodmen of America," has been formed at Omaha with provisional officers. J. C. Root is head consul; F. F. Roose, head adviser; F. F. Falkenburg, head of the committee on credentials of the original head camp of ten States, containing 46,000 members.

The Ancient Order of Hibernians of Illinois closed a State convention Wednesday night at Rock Island. Lawrence Hanley of Chicago was elected State delegate; J. F. Brennan of Bloomington, State secretary, and Alex. Vaghey of Seneca, State treasurer. It was strongly recommended that the differences existing between the two wings of the order in the State be submitted to Archbishop Feehan of Chicago, Archbishop Ireland of St. Paul, and Bishop Spalding of Chicago for arbitration.

The Emerald Club, better known as the Triangle faction of the Clan-na-Gael, which supported the Triangle in the Cronin case, met in New York Wednesday. The meeting was held with closed doors. The club-room is on the top floor, and is fitted up in the usual style of lodge-rooms, with the exception of the decorations on the wainscoting around the skylight. This had painted on each of its four sides a skull and cross-bones, crossed swords, crossed bludgeons, and an hour-glass. The members of the society declined to say anything about the proceedings of the meeting.

The Indiana Grand Lodge of Knights of Pythias last week reaffirmed its action of last year, preventing the admission of liquor dealers to the order. This decision had been reversed by the Supreme Chancellor on technical grounds, and the question came back to the Grand Lodge for consideration at this morning's session. It was discussed neatly all the forenoon, and the sentiment in favor of adhering to the lodge's former action, and carrying the question to the Supreme Lodge of the United States was practically unanimous. The outcome of the discussion was a decision to appeal the question to the Supreme Lodge where it is hoped to have it finally settled at the next session of that lodge. If the contemplated amendment to the constitution is sanctioned by the Supreme Lodge it will not affect the standing of liquor dealers already in the order, but will simply make it impossible for men engaged in the traffic to get in hereafter.

HOME AND HEALTH.

DO WOMEN RUIN MEN?

Women are frequently accused of ruining their fathers and husbands by willful extravagance, with an emphasis on the adjective. They probably do assist at their downfall, in repeated instances, not from willfulness, but from lack of understanding of the value and uses of money. The idea of any normal representative woman being so malignant, or reckless, or inconsiderate as to gratify her taste, her love of adornment, or her sense of luxury, with any consciousness or suspicion of such a result, is preposterous, especially when she is supposed to esteem and love the man she deliberately undoes. Such a thing is so entirely foreign to her nature as to be beyond hypothesis. She would not be capable of it, if she were totally indifferent to the man. Nothing but the densest selfishness, or the deepest malice would furnish the motive for such an act, which is, as a rule, incompatible with woman's nature or woman's methods.

At any rate, is it not an exception when a woman ruins a man financially, or otherwise, indeed? He is very ready to proclaim himself ruined by her; he seems to think that the charge relieves him. He is so constantly the cause of her ruin that he is anxious to turn the tables on her. And to be ruined by a woman sounds romantic, is calculated to excite pity and sympathy, to put him in the position of a martyr, specially in the eyes of his own sex. Men almost always ruin themselves, in a monetary sense particularly, but lack the courage to avow it. Their weakness destroys them, and they dislike to acknowledge weakness; they prefer to give it the name of some picturesque wickedness.—Junius Henri Browne, in Ladies' Home Journal.

BABIES' NEED OF SLEEP.

A young baby should spend most of its time in sleep. Never allow it to be awakened for any purpose whatever. A child's nerves receives a shock every time it is roused from sleep, which is most injurious to it. Admiring friends should be made to wait until it is awake, to kiss it and play with it. After it is nursed at night put it back in its crib, and if it is comfortable it will soon fall asleep. It should never sleep in the bed with an older person. Place the crib with its head to the light so as to protect the eyes from the glare. A light canopy serves to ward off draughts. Curtains cut off the supply of fresh air and, except a mosquito-netting in summer, should not be used. Until a child is two years old it should spend part of each day in sleep, taking a long nap morning and afternoon.—Ladies' Home Journal.

A TRIED CURE FOR INSOMNIA.

Every night at early bed-time, take a five-grain pill of asafetida—be careful to take no strong medicine after three o'clock in the afternoon; half-an-hour before getting into bed take a hot foot-bath. Let the water be as hot as can be borne at first, and add a little very hot water as it cools. Be sure to keep well covered up, and to have the feet in the water for a full half-hour. A month of this treatment under the most adverse circumstances, completely cured the insomnia of a friend, who had run the entire gamut of narcotics, stimulants, eating before retiring, and tiring himself out.—Ladies' Home Journal.

NEARLY DRESSED TO DEATH.

The other day a woman rushed frantically into a Burlington, Vt., drug store bearing in her arms an apparently lifeless baby. The mother wept and moaned, and carried on at a terrible rate while chafing the little hands, and begged the druggist to save the little one. A bystander took the child, when it was found that the sole cause of the trouble was the number of wrappings with which the fond mother had incased the infant, literally choking him into insensibility. In a few minutes the child recovered and the mother went home happy.—New York Telegram.

Are you weak and weary, overworked and tired? Hood's Sarsaparilla is just the medicine you need to purify and quicken your blood and to give you appetite and strength. 100 doses $1.

"BOAT, AHOY!"

the rapids are below you!" cried a man to a pleasure party whom he descried gliding swiftly down the stream toward the foaming cataract. And we would cry, "Boat, Ahoy!" to the one whose life is being drawn into the whirlpool of consumption, for unless you use effective measures you will be wrecked in Death's foaming rapids.

If your lungs are weak, breath short, have spitting of blood, experience occasional cold chills creeping up your spinal column, with hacking cough, variable or poor appetite, feeble digestion, with gradual loss of flesh, cold feet, lassitude or general debility, are easily fatigued, don't disregard these premonitory symptoms. Thousands annually, without experiencing half the above symptoms and not heeding their timely warnings, are plunged into the relentless grasp of that most fatal scourge—Consumption.

You can't afford to fool away any precious time, if suffering from any considerable number of these unmistakable symptoms of approaching danger! It's madness to trifle and experiment with uncertain means when thus afflicted. Don't forget at such a critical period that the only medicine possessed of such positive curative properties as to warrant its proprietors in guaranteeing it to cure Consumption of the Lungs, if taken in time and given a fair trial, is the world-famed Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

Trying conditions these, under which to offer the afflicted relief and cure. No ordinary remedy could sustain itself under such a guarantee. It would bankrupt its proprietors! Not so with "Golden Medical Discovery." Its best advertisement is the thousands of consumptives, in all parts of the world, which it has restored to health, strength and happiness. To-day no other medicine has so great a sale. Why? Because it does just what it is guaranteed to accomplish, otherwise its sale on so peculiar a plan as this would ruin its manufacturers.

"Golden Medical Discovery" cures Consumption in all its earlier stages, on common sense principles. Being, according to all recognized medical authority, a scrofulous affection of the lungs, it is reasonable to seek a remedy in those agents known to prove most efficacious in conquering scrofulous disease affecting other parts and organs. Now for Scrofula in all its myriad forms, nothing has ever yet been discovered to compare with the wonderful remedy already mentioned. And especially is this true of Lung-scorfula, or Consumption. It soothes the cough, improves digestion, sharpens the appetite, invigorates the liver, purifies the blood, cleanses the system of all scrofulous humors, and builds up the flesh and strength. Webster's

UNABRIDGED DICTIONARY.

That this is an unfortunate state of affairs will be admitted by all, and it is due to the fact that no one save the rich could afford them.

The Dictionary is a necessity in every home, school and business house. It fills a vacancy and furnishes knowledge which no one hundred volumes of the choicest books could supply, and all young or old, educated or ignorant, rich or poor should have it within reach and refer to its contents every day in the year.

The Loomis reprint contains all the matter as compiled and arranged by our esteemed and honored author and statesman,

NOAH WEBSTER.

About forty years of his life was devoted to this great work, and when we consider the fact that this book contains about 100,000 words, we will appreciate that these years must have been well spent.

Some idea of the magnitude of this book may be gained from the fact that it contains over 440 cubic inches of paper and has about 300,000 square inches of printed surface.

In addition to the 100,000 words it contains a portrait of the author, together with his biography and a valuable table of 12,000 synonymous words.

By special arrangement with the publishers, we are permitted to furnish this valuable volume: 1st. To any subscriber to our paper; 2nd. To any renewal subscription; and 3rd. To any person who has paid a full year's subscription within the past six months, on receipt of $1.50 for the paper one year, and two dollars and seventy-five cents to cover express charges, packing, etc., of the Dictionary.

FARM NOTES.

SPRAYING FRUIT TREES.

Garden and Forest approves of the method of destroying insects in orchards with poison spray, and says:

The most important accession to recent horticultural practice is the spraying of fruit trees with arsenical poison for the destruction of various insects. No orchardist can afford to neglect this practice. The codling moth, curculio, canker worm, tent caterpillar, and other insects are destroyed by this operation, and sometimes three or more species are killed by the same application. Experience has shown the best methods of applying the poisons, and we now know that the essential points of the operation are to use a very dilute mixture, and to apply it with great thoroughness. London purple, when pure, is better than Paris green, and is cheaper. A pound of the London purple to 250 or 300 gallons of water is sufficient. Apply until the liquid drips from the foliage in all parts of the tree. The apparatus should be such that the liquid will be driven with great force in a fine spray. A gallon of liquid will cover an apple tree twenty-five or thirty years of age.

A single spraying of apple trees, if the operation is not immediately succeeded by heavy rains, is usually sufficient, although a second application is always advantageous. Two or three applications should be made upon plums, cherries and peaches, and I have met growers who make as many as five applications. Even five applications are much cheaper and easier than any other method of destroying the curculio, and the practice is much more effective. In young and open orchards the spraying can be well done with a machine which works from the wagon wheel, but in large and thick orchards, those most in need of treatment, the operator must stop at each tree if the work is to be thoroughly done. A tank or cask upon a wagon, a pump with much power, one man to pump and one to drive and hold the hose is a profitable outfit. With such an outfit two men can spray from 250 to 300 apple trees, 30 years old, in about half a day. Pear trees are treated in the same manner as apple trees. The mixing of flour with London purple, in order to make the poison stick to the leaves, does not appear to meet with much favor among practical men.

LAWNS AND LAWN-MOWERS.

A large proportion of the lawns in city, village and country are deteriorating, and close examination shows the turf to be thin, the desirable grasses weak, browning quickly under drought and hot sun, while coarse, unsightly plants creep in and retain a foothold. The beauty of the lawn diminishes with age in spite of liberal fertilizing and close and regular cutting. What is the reason? Mainly, it is the excessive use of the modern lawn-mower. In nearly every locality may be found pasture lands long set with grasses fine and rich, holding color well under mid-summer sun and drought, with a thick, elastic turf, through which no color of soil can be seen—the very perfection of a lawn if it were trimmed close and even. Why does the pasture flourish through a score of years and the lawn decay? Simply because the pasture is kept nearly under natural conditions, and the lawn is subjected to an intense Chinese dwarfing system. Suppose the lawn is newly made, according to the best instructions, the soil deeply dug, enriched, and made clean and fine, the seed sown, and the grass plants show thick and strong. What next? The lawn-mower—twice or three times a week until growth stops in autumn. Next spring the grass makes a renewed struggle for existence, starts early and strong again. It lifts its blades to the sun and air that it may push its roots into the rich soil for moisture and sustenance. The effort is promptly met by the lawn-mower. Growth is checked above and under ground; so through an entire season and succeeding years. The law is that the root growth of the plant is in proportion to its top growth; the root growth is shallow. Of what avail is the deep, rich

Wonders

Are wrought by the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor in restoring gray hair to its original color, promoting a new growth, preventing the hair from falling, keeping it soft, silky, and abundant, and the scalp cool, healthy, and free from dandruff or humors. The universal testimony is that this preparation has no equal as a dressing, and is, therefore, indispensable to every well-furnished toilet.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for some time and it has worked wonders for me. I was troubled with dandruff and was rapidly becoming bald; but since using the Vigor my head is perfectly clear of dandruff, the hair has ceased coming out, and I now have a good growth, of the same color as when I was a young woman. I can heartily recommend any one suffering from dandruff or loss of hair to use Ayer's Hair Vigor as a dressing."—Mrs. Lydia O. Moody, East Pittston, Me.

"Some time ago my wife's hair began to come out quite freely.

Ayer's

not only prevented my wife from becoming bald, but it also caused an entirely new growth of hair. I am ready to certify to this statement before a justice of the peace."—H. Hulsebus, Lewisburgh, Iowa.

"Some years ago, after a severe attack of brain fever, my hair all came out. I used such preparations for restoring it as my physicians ordered, but failed to produce a growth of hair. I then tried, successively, several articles recommended by druggists, and all alike fell short of accomplishing the desired result. The last remedy I applied was Ayer's Hair Vigor, which brought a growth of hair in a few weeks. I think I used eight bottles in two years; more than was necessary as a restorative, but I liked it as a dressing, and have continued to use it for that purpose. I believe Ayer's Hair Vigor possesses virtues far above those of any similar preparation now on the market."—Vincent Jones, Richmond, Ind.

soil? Is it a wonder that the lawn browns early, and that coarse, hard plants get a foothold?

Give the grass plant a chance to make adequate root growth if you would have and keep a good lawn. Read the lesson of the pasture lands. Encourage it a little in early spring, and in the autumn lay the lawn-mower away early, and let a thick, strong growth of grass be the winter production of the lawn.—American Agriculturist for July.
